A new portrait of President Roosevelt, to be hung in the University of Berlin, is being painted. The President gave Irving R. Wiles, who is to do the work, the first two sittings at the White House this week. The presentation of the portrait will be one of the many amenities that have recently passed between the German and American universities and colleges. The order to Mr. Wiles was a special commission from a committee, of which James Speyer, the banker, is the head.

GOSLIN'S SUIT DISMISSED.

He Tried to Have Lawyer Robert Adjudged a Bankrupt.

Judge Holt of the United States District Court yesterday dismissed the petition in bankruptcy filed against Henry J. Robert, a lawyer of 132 Nassau Street, by Alfred R. Goslin, who said he was a creditor for $37,300 on March 15, 1905, and confirmed the report of Referee Stanley W. Dexter, which was published on April 18. After being fought for many months the case narrowed down to two claims, that of Goslin and Bernard Uhren, his associate, which claim was rejected by the referee.

Judge Holt, in his decision, said:

"The referee in his report states that a full opportunity was afforded Uhren to offer testimony to support his claim of an assignment, and that he failed to do so. I see no reason therefore to afford him further time for that purpose. Report confirmed."

The dismissal of the petition will release considerable real estate and other property which were tied up by the bankruptcy proceedings.

MRS. FISKE GIVES A BENEFIT.

And Starts Bide-a-Wee Home with $2,000 Toward a Country Branch.

Mrs. Fiske gave a special matinée at the Manhattan Theatre yesterday to help the Bide-a-Wee Home for Animals establish a country branch. The Bide-a-Wee Home is the institution successfully maintained by women to care for stray dogs and cats, which are asphyxiated by the S. P. C. A. if they fall into its hands. Mrs. Fiske is a life member, and has helped greatly toward the Home's success.

She lent the theatre yesterday afternoon and appeared in one of the three short plays presented—John Luther Long's "Dolce," produced last Wednesday. The other two plays were Mrs. Fiske's own "The Eyes of the Heart" and "A Light from St. Agnes."

Almost every seat in the theatre was filled at fancy prices by the women friends of Bide-a-Wee Home. Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, and Mrs. John G. Cowdin paid $50 each for boxes. Besides these, among the boxholders and others present were Mrs. Carroll Beckwith, Mrs. James Griswold Wentz, Mrs. George H. Gould, Mrs. Ulysses Grant, Mrs. H. S. Kibbe, the President, and Mrs. W. Sakee Hofstra, the Vice President of Bide-a-Wee. Flowerds, candy, and souvenirs were sold in the anteroom for the benefit of the animals. In all $2,000 was raised for the Home. Mrs. Fiske was warmly applauded, and would have had to make a speech after the performance, but she had left the theatre. John Mason, her leading man, suitably expressed her regrets.

The Bide-a-Wee Home is at 145 West Thirty-eighth Street. There 200 dogs and cats are living in luxury in a house for which $1,800 a year rent is paid.

A COMEDY IN VERSE.

"The Florentines," Read by Mr. Adelman, Pleases an Audience.

"The Florentines," a three-act comedy by Maurice V. Samuels, was the subject of a reading by Joseph Adelman at the Berkeley Lyceum yesterday afternoon. The piece is in verse and aims to evoke with a good deal of lightness and color the old life of the Florence of the arts.

The characters include Benvenoto Cellini, Cosimo Dei Medici and his Duchess, and Cellini's apprentice Giotto. The scenes are laid in the ducal palace and in Cellini's studio. A friendly audience found pleasure both in the play and in Mr. Adelman's interpretation of it. It has already been published in book form. Its author is a San Franciscan.

THE PRIVATE WAR

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Author of "Terence O'Rourke"

"The Private War" is a great fight between a young American and a German attaché in London for the hand of a beautiful woman. So desperate is the conflict, so interwoven with political intrigue, that it leads to the deliberate stealing of a powerful torpedo boat from an English shipyard. The affair ends in a terrific battle between torpedo boats.

JOCKEY RADTKE RODE FOUR JAMAICA WINNERS

$25,000 Apprentice Landed on All the Successful Favorites.

INQUISITOR TOOK NEW STAKE

The opening day of the Metropolitan Jockey Club's Spring meeting at the Jamaica track, in itself something of an event for patrons of racing, went into eclipse so far as the crowd and popular feeling were concerned when opposed to the performance in the saddle by Jockey Herman Radtke yesterday.

Radtke, the apprentice rider, whose contract with J. O. Keene cost Paul J. Rainey $25,000 about two weeks ago, smothered all the other sensations that results might have made, when he finished the afternoon with a record of four winning mounts in a possible five, and it added much to the enthusiasm that the boy's achievement aroused that all the four winners were warm public favorites, and the only favorites to win in the course of the day.

The day's results pointed to the establishment of a Radtke "system" for racegoers and bettors who like to trail after success. A crowd of about 12,000 visitors witnessed the excellent opening day's racing, and a very large majority of the spectators cashed bets at some time or other on Radtke's mounts.

In the first event of the day, the high-priced apprentice rode Toots Mook, which, starting at odds on, brushed to the front in the early stage of a six-furlong sprint and won in a romp. Radtke rode the winner of the second race, P. H. McCarren's three-year-old Water Dog, in much the same style, Water Dog also starting at odds on and winning as far as he pleased after making nearly all the running. In the third race, Radtke's mount, Kilter, which probably had but a remote chance anyhow, was jostled back and out of the race in a scrimmage at the start, but with his next mount, Yorkshire Lad, favorite at 6 to 5 at post time, Radtke won another runaway race.

Clare Russell, sold by Fred Burlew to H. K. Knapp's Oneck stable just before the last race, and carrying the Oneck colors, was regarded as the real "good thing" of the day by the clubhouse element, and with Radtke up was backed with the utmost confidence by the public. The filly proved herself fast but flighty, and Radtke's popularity hung in the balance when, coming to the far turn, she went wide with him and tried to run out. From the turn to the head of the stretch, Clare Russell was doing her best to get to the outside fence, and lost a lot of ground, but Radtke kept his wits, and, holding her as straight as he could, refrained from the usual beating over the head which jockeys commonly inflict on a horse that runs out. She lost her place in the lead, but came again when Radtke called on her in the stretch, and in a hard-fought finish won ridden out by a scant length from Economy.

The stake features of the day, two in number, both went to non-favorites, the chief event, the newly established Paumonok Handicap, going to Trainer Thomas Welsh's fast three-year-old colt Inquisitor, which made most of the running and won in a sharp finish by a neck from Diamond. Congressman T. D. Sullivan sent out the winner of the Elmhurst Selling Stakes, in Frank Lord, which had just stepped off the cars after a campaign at New Orleans and Memphis. Frank Lord led most of the distance in his race, and won cleverly from Bemay, with the favorite Athens third. Summaries:

EXCELSIOR RACE TO-DAY.

The Excelsior Handicap, the second of the series of great popular open races for horses three years old and upward, with a prize of $10,000, offered by the Metropolitan Jockey Club, will be run to-day as the feature of the racing programme at the Jamaica track. A field of fifteen starters has been announced for the contest, the entries named to run including all the best horses that have raced so far this season, with several among the number that were counted among the stars of the turf last season.

The popular favorite last night was D. C. Johnson's record-holding sprinter, Roseben, winner of the Carter Handicap twelve days ago. The most noted of the horses that are announced to oppose him are Delhi, the Brooklyn Handicap winner of last year; Ram's Horn, the Western horse which figures among the first choices in the future betting on the Brooklyn Handicap this Spring; Colonial Girl, winner of the $50,000 World's Handicap from Hermis at St. Louis, and Phil Finch, a stout campaigner from the New Orleans Winter racing. First Mason, one time conqueror of Delhi; Ormonde's Right, a Carter Handicap winner, and Eugenia Burch, one of the best mares of her time, are others of note in the field.

The horses named officially as runners, the weights and jockeys, and an estimate of the probable odds on the race to-day follow:

The Excelsior Handicap, of $10,000, for three-year-olds and upward, one mile and a sixteenth, to be run as the fourth race.

LAKEWOOD'S HUNT RACES.

Country Club Members Had a Good Day of Amateur Sport.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 27.—The Lakewood Country Club's Spring hunt race meeting was held to-day on the golf links of the club, with a large crowd in attendance and a programme which brought out horses from the stables of George J. Gould, W. Gould Brokaw, P. F. Collier, A. R. Hamilton, W. R. Grace, and other prominent members of the Lakewood colony.

A steeplechase for hunters produced the most interesting contest of the day, W. R. Grace's horse Willie Price, ridden by a professional jockey, winning, ridden out, from W. M. Kerr's Dover, ridden by the amateur, A. P. Devereaux, after the horses had run lapped over a two-mile course.

Four bookmakers laid odds at the meeting, making a sight such as has not been witnessed in New Jersey since racing was abolished in the State, twelve years ago. Summaries:

FIRST RACE.—For polo ponies. About a quarter of a mile. Joseph Howland Hunt's Whirlwind, 160 pounds, (Coltford,) even, first; P. F. Collier's Princess, 160, (Fitzpatrick,) even, second; George J. Gould's Cut, 160, (Hayden,) 5 to 1, third. Nellie Ryan (Mr. Hamilton) also ran.

SECOND RACE.—For galloways. About five-eighths of a mile. W. Gould Brokaw's Stepaway, 160 pounds, (Mr. Cooley, Jr.,) 1 to 2, first; A. R. Hamilton's Skirmisher, 160, (owner,) 3 to 1, second; George J. Gould's Cotton, 160, (Hayden,) 5 to 1, third. Virginia Francis (Mr. Callpy) and Moonlight Maid (Mr. Soule) also ran.

THIRD RACE.—The Pines Open Steeplechase. About two miles and a half. Bonnie Brook Stable's Iron Heart, b. g., 4 years, by Flambeau-Constant, 142 pounds, (Mr. Devereaux,) even, first; C. H. Robbins's Lavator, 163, (Dehling,) 1 to 2, second; Charles Pfizer's Bacchanal, 163, (McCaughey,) 5 to 1, third. Pastime, Kersey, and Hygeras also ran.

FOURTH RACE.—For polo ponies. About a quarter of a mile. P. F. Collier's Princess, (Fitzpatrick,) even, first; W. Gould Brokaw's Live Wire, 160 pounds, (Mr. Cooley, Jr.,) 3 to 5, second; George J. Gould's Hindoo Rose, 160, (Hayden,) 3 to 1; third. Ruby, Pecos Johnny, Moonlight Maid, and Whirlwind also ran.

FIFTH RACE.—The Lakewood Steeplechase, for hunters. About two miles and a half. W. R. Grace's Willie Price, b. g., aged, by Newcastle-Carleton Maid, 160 pounds, (Lynch,) 6 to 5, first; W. M. Kerr's Dover, 160, (Mr. Devereaux,) even, second; C. H. Robbins's Michou, 160, (Dehling,) 2 to 3, third. Silver Twist, R. B. Sack, Gypsey, and Chorister also ran.

Mansfield Sells Schooner Amorita.

Richard Mansfield has sold his schooner Amorita to Walter Dupee of Chicago. Amorita is one of the best-known boats owned in New York. From the board of A. Cary Smith in 1895, she came to be known widely as a racing schooner in the hands of W. Gould Brokaw. She is a steel centreboard craft, 99.5 feet overall and 69 feet on the water line, with 20 feet beam and 12 feet draught. She carried a big rig and was always fast but handy, and has done quite a bit of cruising in her day. Her last big race was the Astor Cup contest, which she won in 1902, after which she was sold by Mr. Brokaw to Mr. Mansfield. She will be the largest boat for pleasure sailing on the lakes. Mr. Mansfield will purchase a smaller boat for cruising purposes.

Shelter Island Yachtsmen Dine.

Fifty members of the Shelter Island Yacht Club attended the annual dinner of the club at the house of the Columbia Yacht Club, at Eighty-sixth Street and Riverside Drive, last evening. Commodore George M. Boardman, Vice Commodore Stephen Lane Folger, Rear Commodore George P. Fiske, Secretary William B. Hill, Treasurer William H. Bradford, and Fleet Surgeon George F. Little were among the flag officers present, while the guests included a number of prominent New York yachtsmen.

The announcement of the racing plans for the season promises an exceptionally successful season, especially as there have been several notable additions to the racing fleet of the club. Cups donated by Commodore Boardman and Vice Commodore Folger were exhibited. The reports of the officials showed the club to be in an exceptionally sound and satisfactory condition.

Baseball Boxes Sold for Sufferers.

The boxes for the baseball game to-morrow at American League Park for the benefit of the San Francisco sufferers were placed on sale yesterday at the headquarters of the Greater New York Baseball Club in the Flatiron Building. In less than an hour six were sold, netting $450. Frank J. Farrell, Treasurer of the club, and President Joseph Gordon bought the first two for $100 apiece; Congressman Tim Sullivan and David B. Johnson paid the same price for the next two. Hector G. Clemes and Edward Carroll paid $25 apiece for two more. The sale will be continued to-day.

Meadow Brook Poloists Begin Practice.

Special to The New York Times.

HEMPSTEAD, N. Y., April 27.—The polo players of the Meadow Brook Club had their first practice game to-day. The teams were designated as the Blues and the Whites. The former, captained by Harry P. Whitney, won by 7 goals to 4. The play was snappy throughout. J. M. Waterbury, Jr., who captained the Whites, won the first goal. Points were then made in quick succession by Alexander and Whitney for the Blues, and they kept the lead to the end. Several younger players will be seen in the teams this year, among the newcomers being F. C. Havemeyer, Harold C. Phipps, August Belmont, Jr., Bradley Martin, Jr., and Raymond Belmont. The line-up:

BLUES.	WHITES.
1—Robert J. Collier.	1—F. C. Havemeyer.
2—A. E. Alexander.	2—Harold C. Phipps.

CHAMPIONS STILL WIN AND INCREASE LEAD

AMERICANS' TIE UNBROKEN

Athletics and Washingtons Successful—Greater New Yorks and Bostons Easily Beaten.

The lead of the New Yorks is assuming the proportions of a walk-over. When the Philadelphians came here on Wednesday they were on even terms with the champions, but the latter now have no dangerous rival, while the Quakers have been relegated to fifth place. Chicago is pressing Pittsburg hard, while St. Louis has adavnced to the first division. In the American League the champion Athletics and Washingtons are still on even terms, well ahead of the next four teams, all in the West, which stand on an equal basis. The Greater New Yorks and ex-champion Bostons appear to be in a bad plight, both suffering easy defeats yesterday.

ONE MORE FOR GIANTS.

Defeat Quakers by 3 to 1 Through Fumbles and Bases on Balls.

The wild throwing of Second Baseman Gleason and the irregular pitching of Lush were responsible for the third successive defeat of the Philadelphias by the champion New Yorks at the Polo Grounds yesterday, the score being 3 to 1. But for Gleason's bad throw to first base in the first inning a double play would surely have been the result, and Browne would have been prevented from tallying. In the fifth inning the "Kid" showed very poor judgment in a throw to the home plate, which went far over Dooin's head, and, although the error allowed Donlin to reach second, it did not cut any figure in the two runs scored by New York. These were the result of a base on balls, the slow handling of the ball by Lush, Browne's sacrifice, and Donlon's fine single to centre field.

Aside from the first and fifth innings, Lush pitched effectively, his execution in the eighth inning being the best performance shown by any pitcher on local grounds this year. With three men on bases and no one out, Lush's position was not an enviable one. Dropped thrown balls by Bransfield, and both from the pitcher, gave two men their bases. The situation, however, did not seem to affect the left-hander's delivery, for Strang, who had made a two-base hit in the sixth inning, struck out, and Dahlen received the same treatment. A great deal was expected of Devlin, who had hit safely twice before, but this time he sent the ball to Doolin and was easily thrown out at first. As Lush returned to the bench he received an enthusiastic greeting from all portions of the field.

Wiltse, too, did admirably in the box, his only damaging inning being the eighth, and at one time matters looked quite serious. The score:

AMERICANS LOSE BY ERRORS.

Elberfeld and Kleinow Responsible for Greater New York's Defeat.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—New York was defeated again to-day in another game that was a hard one to lose, inasmuch as the visitors had a one-run lead up to the seventh inning and Orth apparently was pitching better ball than Hughes. Although erratic fielding and pitching helped to get the New York team their two runs, luck deserted them when the local men took their seventh turn at the bat. Orth is to blame for the start of the little rally, and perhaps Elberfeld's injured hand was the fault of losing two hard grounders which he might have picked up and fielded but for his damaged digits. Orth stood on the slab and watched Kleinow make a vain effort to catch Jones's fly near the pitcher's box, Kleinow claiming the sun balked him. This blunder was followed by two grounders which got away from Elberfeld, and Nill's slashing single polished off the visitors for three runs. New York felt beaten and was lifeless for the remainder of the game.

It was purely a battle of the pitchers until the seventh, with Orth having a shade the better of it. The fielding was clean enough, but no unusual plays were pulled off, making the contest rather dull. The score:

The game at West Side Park, Jersey City, yesterday, between Jersey City and Montreal, broke up in a row, and Umpire Campau gave the victory to Jersey City by the score of 9 to 0. The trouble was over a decision in the fifth inning. With the score a tie at 1 run each, Jersey City had the bases filled. Woods was at the bat, and two strikes and three balls had been called. Blair, who was on third base, started for home as soon as Good had taken his place in the pitcher's box. Good threw the ball to Connor, who had got in front of Woods, and when he tagged Blair Campau called the latter out. This precipitated a row, in which the players of both teams took part. The upshot was that Blair and Halligan were ordered out of the game. Campau afterward allowed them to resume their positions, and then Capt. Bannon of Montreal protested, which resulted in the game being forfeited to Jersey City. The score:

AMERICANS AT ATHENS WIN THREE MORE TITLES

DO WELL IN TRIAL EVENTS

Seven Qualify for 400 Meter and Four in 1,500 Meter Races—Sheridan Sustains Slight Injury.

ATHENS, April 27.—The wonderful ability of the American athletes was again demonstrated in the Stadium to-day in the continuation of the field and track programme of Olympic events. Two championships of three decided were won by the Americans, while in the trial heats they again showed a preponderance of survivors. Archie Hahn, the wonderful little sprinter from Wisconsin, won the final heat of the 100-metre sprint, and Myer Prinstein, the broad jumper, representing the Irish-American Athletic Club of New York, was first in that contest. Both defeated notable fields of competitors.

In the 100-metre event there were four Americans among the six starters in the final. These had survived the trials and were on edge for the final test. The only foreigner who was considered to have a chance to win outside of the Yankee contingent was Nigel Barker, the Australian sprinter.

When the men were sent away little Hahn showed his calibre at once. He maintained his position in front, with the others bunched close behind him. As they neared the tape the difference between the field were apparent, though slight, and as they crossed the finish line it was seen that Fay Moulton, the former Yale sprinter, entered from Kansas City, had wrested second honors from Barker. The time for the race was announced as 11 1-5 seconds.

Two of these three men figured again in the 400-metre race. Six heats were run in this to reduce the tremendous field of starters that awaited the word to go. Of the twelve men who qualified to continue the contest seven were Americans. Five of the heat winners wore the Stars and Stripes. The first heat went easily to Harry L. Hillman of the New York Athletic Club. No evidence of his recent injury on shipboard was manifest in his running. The second went to Paul H. Pilgrim, his clubmate, while the third, the only one in which the Yankees failed to display their superiority, fell to Nigel Barker. In this, however, James P. Lightbody, the tow-headed Chicago University boy, finished second, running well within his strength. Lawson Robertson and Charles J. Bacon of the Irish-American Athletic Club of New York, and Fay R. Moulton of Kansas City, were the other winners. G. H. Queyrouze of New Orleans was second to Bacon in his heat. No times were announced.

In the 1,500-metre race as notable a success was won in the trials by the Americans, far better, in fact, than was hoped for. Four of the eight men to qualify were Americans. James P. Lightbody of Chicago won his heat in splendid shape. James P. Sullivan of the Irish American Athletic Club of New York was third in the heat, and George Bonhag and Harvey Cohn, two other Irish American runners, were third and fourth in their heat.

Myer Prinstein's victory in the broad jump was a comfortable one, and earned by an excellent performance. He cleared 7 metres and 20 centimetres, which is equal to a leap of 23 feet 9⅝ inches. P. O'Conner, the Irish world's record holder, but representing England, was second, nearly seven inches behind him, with a leap of 7 metres and 2½ centimetres, or 23 feet 2⅝ inches. Hugo Friend of Chicago was third.

M. J. Sheridan, Irish-American A. C., of New York, won in throwing the weight, 13 meters 32n centimeters, or 43 feet 8 inches. David, Hungarian, was second.

This, with the stone-throwing, completed the events in which the Americans competed. In this Sheridan finished second to the Greek champion, Giorgantes, who threw the missile 19 meters 92½ centimeters, while Sheridan was credited with 19 meters 8½ centimeters.

The aquatic events, which it was expected would be brought to completion to-day, were still unfinished at the close of the day. Three rowing races and one swimming contest were decided, when a repetition of yesterday's wind storm kicked up such a sea as to make further competition impossible for the day. In the swimming race Scheff, the sixteen-year-old Austrian, sprang a big surprise on the knowing ones by beating the two English swimmers who were regarded as sure winners of the event by finishing first by about a yard, after leading throughout. His victory was received with the wildest enthusiasm, in which all joined irrespective of their sympathies in recognition of the wonderful achievement of the youthful performer. He swan the 400 meters in 6 minutes and 23 4-5 seconds.

There was some demonstration of ill-feeling to-day among the Greeks over the wholesale victories of the foreigners, but on the whole an excellent temper has been displayed by the competitors and spectators. James E. Sullivan, United States representative to the games, made light of the matter to-night. He said he was quie satisfied with the cordiality exhibited by all concerned.

All the Americans except James Mitchel appear to be in good shape now. While practicing jumping to-day Martin J. Sheridan of the Irish-American Athletic Club, tore his right leg with his spikes, but the injury is not serious.

AUTOS IN EFFICIENCY TEST.

One Commercial Entry So Far—Club Members to Drive.

Entries for the two gallon gasoline efficiency tests to be held on May 5 by the Automobile Club of America are being received in a manner that is very encouraging to the club committee. President Dave Hennen Morris and ten Governors of the club will enter and drive their own cars. This example set by the officers will be followed by a large number of members, and Secretary S. M. Butler has already sent out enough entry blanks to keep the technical members of the committee busy for the better part of the day during the contest, provided that half are returned properly filled out for the event.

The manufacturers awoke to the importance and real value of the test yesterday, and the first entry was received from F. E. Muscovics, who sent the specifications of one of the new Frayer-Miller cars. Mr. Muscovics, who has been selected to drive one of the Vanderbilt Cup cars being built at the Frayer-Miller factory, will pilot the car just entered in the efficiency test. He stated that a second car will probably be driven by Mr. Frayer. The latter is now at Atlantic City, and upon his return the entry will be made.

Owing to the failure of the manufacturers and agents to enter cars for the test, the report gained credence among some of the club members yesterday that the manufacturers were not inclined to enter an open, impartially conducted competition which would demonstrate beyond question just what an automobile with a certain amount of fuel can do. The rules have been carefully drawn so as to give the heavier horse powered cars every advantage as compared with the cars of lesser power, which, under general conditions will go further on a gallon of gasoline than the larger machines.

"The test is really made in the interests of the manufacturers," said President Morris yesterday. "The club proposes to issue several thousand printed results of the contest, and it will send copies to any one who asks for them. If certain cars are qualified to do what has been claimed for them, now is the chance for them to show it."

LOZIER

LEGITIMATELY

BECAUSE REMARKABLY HIGH-GRADE

In our catalogue we mention as one of the Notable Features of THE LOZIER MOTOR CAR the "Automatic Carburetor with Balanced Throttle Controlled by Governor."

AUTOMATIC SPEED CONTROL

The function of this mechanism is, briefly stated, to relieve the operator of the necessity of adjusting his speed as every little rise or downgrade is encountered. That is to say—the motor control adjusted for the time being, for any particular speed at which it is desired to run, maintains this speed up hill and down dale, through the automatic action of the governor, which supplies much or little fuel, according to whether you are climbing a hill or coasting a grade, or running on the level. The operator is free to devote his attention entirely to the steering.

It simplifies matters a whole lot—and the speed can be instantly changed as desired. One of the good things of THE LOZIER MOTOR CAR.

In this connection it might be mentioned that the irregularities in a road (the deep rut on one side and the hard rocks on the other), that throw a car into violently sudden angles, can in no way in THE LOZIER MOTOR CAR cause binding of the clutch shaft—as it is fitted with TWO Universal Joints—one at the clutch end and the other at the transmission end—which respond to every possible direction of movement.

THE LOZIER was the first car to use Double Universal Joints, and we would like to show you the car and explain its many notable features further.

FASTEST MILE IN AUTO ON NORTHERN TRACKS

Christie Drives Car in 35 1-5 Seconds at Atlantic City.

TOURING CARS SHOW UP WELL

Peculiar Accident Injures Rogers and He Loses the Free-for-All Championship.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 27.—Walter Christie, who has been the star competitor in the automobile races here ever since the meet started, Wednesday afternoon, did his finest piece of work to-day in the closing event, when he drove his 110-horse power car in the record-breaking time for Northern tracks of 0:35 1-5. This is the fastest mile ever made by an automobile outside of the Ormond Beach track. The best time made there this year was 0:28.

Christie's time reduces his own record for the Atlantic City beach track, made last year, by 2 4-5 seconds, and it also beats the best time made a year ago on the Cape May track. The car that Christie drove is the same that he used in the Vanderbilt Cup race last October. It has been much improved, and in its present state is practically the result of three years' experimenting. Christie employs a direct drive on the front wheels. His fast time was made in the mile trials for heavyweight gasoline cars.

The Darracq car used by Hemery when he won the Vanderbilt Cup last year did the mile in 0:39, driven by Guy Vaughn. William Wallace, Jr., driving a similar Darracq, did 0:39 3-5. Montague Roberts, with his 60-horse power Thomas car, did 0:51 3-5. The fully equipped English Daimler touring car made a trial and did the mile in the excellent time of 0:55 4-5, the best time mode on the beach for a touring car. The car was driven by H. N. Harding, and in the race for foreign touring cars of 50-horse power or less, Harding won handily, beating Walter E. Edge's Darracq in 1:14 4-5.

One slight accident occurred in the final heat of the free-for-all championship race for the Atlantic City Cup. H. E. Rogers, whose Stanley steamer had won the first heat in 0:49 1-5, was injured by the hood of his car being blown off as the cars neared the finish line. Although in the lead, and going at a fast pace, he kept control of his car and soon stopped it. He was slightly cut in the face. The cup was won by Guy Vaughn with the 80 horse power Darracq in 0:47 3-5. Vaughn had previously won the third heat and the second heat was won by William Wallace's Darracq.

An eighteen horse power White steamer won the chauffeurs' handicap. The car was driven by E. S. Johnson, with 40 seconds' handicap, in 1:25.

P. E. Rockett, in a thirty horse power Stoddard-Dayton, won the touring-car event for cars costing $3,000 or less, in 1:22 1-5. H. P. Bellew, in a twenty-four horse power Columbia, was second. The summaries:

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Heavy Liquidation Upsets Market—More Gold Engaged.

Following the lead of London, where American issues were up in many instances a point or more, prices in the local stock market yesterday opened substantially higher and displayed much strength throughout the first hour, there being in this period not the least warning of the wave of liquidation which, upon its conclusion, swept over the market, carrying prices away until there have been such declines as 26 points in Great Northern, 15 points in Northern Pacific, 5¾ points in St. Paul and Brooklyn Rapid Transit, 6 points in Reading, and 4 points each in New York Central and Union Pacific. As has been the case in practically every market which has followed the news of the destruction of San Francisco, the outpouring of stocks yesterday came from pools and individual operators, the urgency of their selling having been increased by the declines of previous days, which brought margins nearer and nearer to depletion.

The motives prompting this selling have been at all times obvious, the chief reason lying in the general recognition of the fact that the shock to confidence and the unsettlement of money markets destroyed completely the plans so carefully laid for an extensive campaign for the rise in stocks in the Summer months. It has been apparently simply a question of making a decision between throwing over accumulated stocks at present prices or reducing them from week to week in a sagging market, and the former solution seems in most cases to have been adopted. The severity of the declines in the Hill shares gave rise, of course, to reports that the long-pending ore deal between the Great Northern and the United States Steel Corporation had been definitely abandoned, but of these reports there was no confirmation and the probabilities are that the weak long account built up on the strength of such negotiations as there have been toward such a deal found liquidation necessary and no market upon which to accomplish it. The market rallied feebly at the close, but the buying which accomplished this seemed due in large measure to short covering. One development of the day deserves special mention, banking houses with foreign connections were persistent and heavy buyers of certain classes of securities for their clients abroad, this being a continuation of a similar movement under way on Thursday.

The day was singularly barren of news developments. No word came, up to the close of the market, of the reply which the anthracite operators are to make to the propositions of the miners' representatives. Reports of "trouble" among certain of the less substantial insurance companies involved in the San Francisco disaster were wholly unconfirmed, although no one doubts that such concerns have suffered crushing losses. The announcement of the engagement of $3,000,000 of gold in London for import was offset in sentimental influence by publication of preliminary estimates of the currency movements of the week, these foreshadowing a loss of from $7,000,000 to $11,000,000 in cash, as compard with a gain of $16,776,000 a week ago. Heavy transfers of currency to San Francisco and nearby points explain the cash loss, but just what the result will be upon today's bank return is somewhat doubtful, owing to the intervention of several indefinite factors, including the probable reduction of stock loans and corresponding increase in loans connected with the Pacific Coast shipments and the gold engagements of the week, which are covered, of course, by deposits of Government money.

CONDITIONS OF TRADE.

The enormous loss of capital in San Francisco has so far made no impression on the general business situation. Bradstreet's says, commenting on general conditions:

> Trade brightens in consonance with continued good weather. Trade, crop and industrial reports alike are favorable, and the Spring season, which started a little late, is making up well for lost time. Good weather has helped the farmers to catch up with a rather late planting season and regain lost ground, retail trade has been helped, jobbers report continued liberal reorders to fill depleted stocks, there is more doing in Fall business, iron and steel are very steady, with more confidence as to the third and last quarters, and, aside from the coal industry, which is still stagnated, though there is even here a better prospect, industry is as brisk as seldom if ever before. Building is certainly active beyond precedent for this season. There is some improvement noted in collections and bank clearings.

Dun's Review says:

> Weather conditions are favorable for retail trade and building operations, while the crop outlook is bright on the whole, although some sections report delay to planting on account of excessive moisture, and there is much complaint regarding the scarcity of labor. Manufacturing plants are working to their full capacity in the leading industries, especially iron furnaces and steel mills, and there is little idle machinery at footwear factories or textile mills. Railway earnings thus far reported for April surpass last year's by 8.2 per cent., and foreign commerce at this port shows a gain of $938,619 in imports and a small loss of $283,619 in exports, as compared with the same week of 1905.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 27.—In the generally weaker local market, which sympathized with the New York collapse, Illinois Brick shares received conspicuous support. The stock sold again as low as 50¼, but repeatedly the price rallied in a manner which suggested that shorts were being made to cover. Before noon, 52½ was reached. In the afternoon the shorts covered and put the price up to 55, but the close was at 52. Other local issues suffered to-day.

Chicago Telephone broke to a new low record at 101. Diamond Match found fresh selling and fell from 128 to 126. Can issues were easy. Chicago Subway started out strong and got up to 57½, but slipped back again when the Eastern market collapsed. In the afternoon, Subway ran off to 55½. Match broke to 125. Biscuit fell to 63¼. Shipbuilding fell to 55½ and Can preferred to 60. Pneumatic Tool lost 5 points, to 50. Carbon common lost 2 points. Telephone rallied to 105. Subway, after selling at 55, ran up to 56. Swift dropped to 104⅝. Match rallied to 126¼. West Chicago lost 2, at 28. Kansas City Light was easy. Money, 5½@6 per cent. New York exchange, 15c discount.

$6,000,000 IN GOLD ENGAGED FOR IMPORT

PAYMENTS TO THE TREASURY

Banks Return $1,500,000 of the Amount Specially Deposited—Estimates of the Currency Movement.

Gold to the amount of $6,000,000 was engaged abroad yesterday for import to New York, and an equal amount of money was withdrawn from the Sub-Treasury under the arrangement authorized by Secretary Shaw to facilitate gold imports. The gold engagements were made by the National City Bank, which took $3,000,000, and by Lazard Frères, who took an equal amount. The Lazard engagement was arranged, so far as the withdrawal of money from the Sub-Treasury was concerned, through the First National Bank.

The arrival of an additional amount of gold from abroad enabled the banks yesterday to pay off $1,500,000 more of the special deposits which had been made to facilitate imports. Transfers through the Sub-Treasury to San Francisco yesterday amounted to $1,501,000, or less than half of the amount which had been forwarded through the same channels on Thursday.

The usual Friday estimates of the week's movement of currency varied widely. The net loss to the banks was estimated all the way from about $5,000,000 to about $11,000,000. Discussing the currency movement, The Wall Street Journal says in its issue of to-day:

> The reported movements of currency this week indicate a loss in cash held by the banks of $5,821,800. Owing to the complicated transactions between the banks and the Sub-Treasury, and the manner of receiving special United States deposits and returning such deposits from receipts of imported gold, the analysis of the statement issued by the Sub-Treasury is made unusually difficult.
> The banks received from the interior $7,719,100 and sent to the interior $23,593,200, of which $11,981,300 was transferred through the Sub-Treasury to San Francisco, $1,200,000 to Chicago, $675,000 to Denver, and $100,000 to New Orleans. Shipments to the interior include also $3,615,000 currency sent by mail and express to the Pacific Coast and $2,085,000 National bank notes sent to Washington for redemption. The loss to the interior was $15,874,100.
>
> Receipts of new gold were $8,631,100, of which $8,115,600 was imported gold, $491,500 on New York Assay Office checks, and $24,000 on Seattle Assay Office checks.
>
> The total loss, to the interior $15,874,100 and United States deposits returned $7,100,000, was $22,974,100. Deducting from this the total gain, $17,152,300, consisting of $8,631,100 in new gold, $8,370,000 special United States deposits, and $151,200 from Sub-Treasury operations proper, the net loss was $5,721,800.
>
> The feature of the interior movement was the extraordinary shipments, direct and through the Sub-Treasury, to the Pacific Coast, necessitated by the earthquake and fire at San Francisco. The receipts from the interior were larger than in the preceding week, indicating the usual flow of currency to New York at this season on mercantile remittances.
>
> Pension payments fell off to $1,456,000, comparing with $3,291,000 in the preceding week.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, April 27.—Rates for money were easier in the market to-day and discounts were sympathetically weak.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was generally cheerful and the market was not affected by the announcement of a small failure. The transactions were limited, though there were some indications of broadening business. Consols had a better tone and Home Rails were in investment demand.

Americans opened dull, recovered to above parity, became unsettled, improved during the last hour, fluctuated, and closed firm, but not altogether at the best quotations of the day. Reading was exceptionally supported, a more hopeful view being taken of the labor situation.

Foreigners were firm. The new Russian loan was quoted at seven-eighths premium. Japanese were in demand.

Kaffirs were heavy.

Bullion amounting to £5,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day, and £7,000 was withdrawn for shipment to South America.

Hartford Fire Insurance Co.

While exact figures have not yet been received, information at hand warrants the statement that the net losses of the HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY at San Francisco, from all sources, will not exceed $5,750,000, and will be well within the policy-holders' surplus. In order to properly equip the Company for future usefulness, its capital has been increased under conditions which will not only enable it to promptly pay all San Francisco losses, but will also provide a handsome surplus.

GEO. L. CHASE, President.

NO N. Y. CENTRAL ISSUE NOW.

Rumor of $100,000,000 Stock Output Officially Denied.

Reports current yesterday that the New York Central management intended in the near future to issue part of the $100,000,000 additional stock recently authorized by the stockholders were officially denied. It was definitely stated, moreover, that there is no truth whatever in recent reports that the New York Central has had under consideration, in addition to the stock recently authorized, an issue of debenture bonds.

D. W. Pardee, Secretary of the New York Central, said yesterday afternoon that the suggestion of such a bond issue was absurd, in view of the fact that the New York Central has provided for its financial requirements for a long time to come by the authorization of a large amount of new stock.

In well-informed banking circles it was said yesterday that, in all probability, the first issue of new stock by the New York Central would be of a relatively small amount. It is considered likely that only $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 of stock will be issued at a time.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

BOSTON, April 27.—The local money market does not change much. Call loans, 5@6 per cent. Time loans, collateral, 5@5½ per cent. Time loans, mercantile paper, 5¼ per cent. Clearing House loans, 6 per cent. New York funds, 12½c discount. Clearings, $26,988,620. Balances, $378,054. Sub-Treasury debit, $27,580.

There was a strong opening in the copper shares this morning, and better prices were seen all around. Boston Consolidated led with a gain of nearly 2 points, advancing to 25. Bingham opened up fractionally, and made a further gain to 85¼. Both Amalgamated Copper and United Copper gained over a point.

After the early strength and higher prices selling orders came in and a reaction of some magnitude followed, prices losing all of their early gain and in some cases even more. Conspicuous in point of volume and fluctuations were United Copper, with a loss of 8⅛ from the high point of the day to 60, later gaining about a point; Amalgamated with a loss of about 4 points, and Bingham losing about 2 points. The closing was irregular, with prices slightly above the low point for the day.

HOCKING VALLEY RUMOR.

Preferred Stock May Be Replaced by 4 Per Cent. Bonds.

Reports were revived yesterday that plans are being matured by the Morgan interests for the retirement of the preferred stock of the Hocking Valley Railroad Company by an issue of 4 per cent. bonds. It has been rumored on numerous occasions recently that some such plan was in contemplation by the controlling interests in the Hocking Valley. The report was renewed yesterday in connection with further discussion of the negotiations which are in progress between the Morgan interests and the minority stockholders of the Kanawha & Michigan, which is controlled by the Hocking Valley Railroad Company.

It is believed in some quarters that the adjustment of the demands which the minority stockholders have made for a share in the company's earnings may be accomplished through a general scheme of readjustment of Hocking Valley affairs, which may possibly include the retirement of the company's preferred stock.

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Heavy Liquidation Sends Curb Shares Down.

Losses Not as Severe as on the Exchange—United Copper Down 2 1-2.

Curb stocks broke heavily yesterday under selling pressure that traced more or less directly to the slump on the Stock Exchange, though in no case were the losses correspondingly severe. Mining shares suffered most in the general liquidation, and the heaviest drop of the day was in United Copper, which sold from 63¼ down to 60, though a recovery of 1 point was made before the close. Boston Copper, which sold 13,100 shares, nearly double as many as United, and was by far the most active on the list, lost 1¾ points on the day's trading, closing at 23¼. This price was ¼ above the low of the day. Butte Coalition closed 1 point down, at 33, and the Greene shares lost from ¼ on Gold Silver to 1¼ on Consolidated Copper.

Among the industrials Mackay Companies lost 1¼ on sales of 2,608 and International Salt sold from 38¼ down to 37. Interborough receipts sold down from 224 to 222½.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Some of the stocks that were so mysteriously concealed have been coming to light this week. Yesterday, for example, there were more than enough to go around, the supply so greatly exceeding the demand that the market became badly demoralized under the liquidation of such as were obliged to sell. When one compares yesterday's conditions with those that existed only a few weeks ago, and thinks how little time has elapsed since sagacious men were asking each other what had become of the stocks, one realizes that in speculation there are vast deceptions.

When something happens to shake confidence it matters little where the stocks are. They come out. In this case they were concentrated in the hands of relatively few men, and the commission houses were not loaded up with them, but what difference does that make? Individuals whose names are hardly known in Wall Street have been swinging enormous lines of stocks, more than they were able to protect in a bad market, and the selling of these gentlemen, either of a voluntary nature or forced by their inability to produce margins, has been added to the strain of general liquidation. It was said yesterday that one bull account, liquidated at a heart-breaking loss, had contained 10,000 Union Pacific, 10,000 Northern Pacific, and 5,000 Great Northern preferred.

* * *

The extravagant and dangerous operations of individuals, most of them newly made capitalists, have played an important part in the bull market of the last two and a half years. Only during brief intervals, and those long apart, has the miscellaneous public participated freely in the speculation of this period. The bull market, almost throughout, has been supported by a class of very rich semi-professional speculators, operating on a scale which would stagger any but four or five of the most prominent manipulators in the Street. Referring to this matter, an operator of the old school said not long ago: "You have been writing for two or three years about the enormous speculative profits of a class of men who are so new to Wall Street that they risk their private fortunes in a foolhardy manner. They have made a great deal of money, I dare say, but I predict, nevertheless, that some day you will be writing the other side of the story. None of these gentlemen has ever gone through a really bad market, such as all of the old-timers have been through. They hardly know what it is for a market to slip from under them day after day and month after month, as a market sometimes will—as this market will some day. Let them have that sickening experience and they will not wonder afterward that many of us were content to sit still and see them take the risks alone."

* * *

One of the most discouraging features of yesterday's market was the timidity of the support. Those to whom Wall Street looks for support on such occasions came in repeatedly during the break to check the selling, but found stocks pressing so heavily that they either withdrew or lowered their buying orders. It looked as if the scale supporting orders had been lowered from one end of the market to the other. The most conspicuous instance of it was in Steel common, which for more than a week had been supported between 41 and 42 until the bull interests evidently were unwilling to take more stock except at concessions. The strain seemingly had become too great. Previously the stock had not been permitted to sell lower than 41⅝, in spite of extremely heavy selling. Yesterday it sold at 39⅝. Owing to the conspicuous manner in which this stock had been supported, the bull crowd having been wishful apparently to buy the capital stock above 41½, its break of nearly 2 points yesterday was extremely discouraging to the surviving bull element. It was as if a prop had been withdrawn from the market. There had been no other example of equally arbitrary support. It was quite plain elsewhere, however, as in Union Pacific, Pennsylvania, and Amalgamated Copper, that the supporting orders perforce had been lowered, and this contributed to the demoralization.

The market opened with an exhibition of feeble strength, but with no aggressive buying anywhere in sight. Once more the activity had gone out of it on a rally of 1 to 2 per cent. Presently acute weakness appeared in a number of high-priced investment stocks, such as Northern Pacific and Great Northern preferred, which led the decline, and also in such others as St. Paul, New York Central, Chicago & Northwestern, Delaware & Hudson, and Pennsylvania. The selling of these stocks was accompanied by rumors of serious trouble in fire insurance circles. At midday the whole list began to go, and as one stock after another broke through the limits of previous support, the selling became wilder and heavier. Brokers who were on the floor during the worst of it said that from what they were able to see there was an unreasoning desire among speculative holders of stocks to be out of them. The selling was general. Nobody could distinguish the short selling from the bona fide liquidation.

* * *

Such a condition as prevailed in the stock market yesterday arises from an overwhelming desire on the part of a great many people all to do the same thing at once. It is that which causes panics—bull panics as well as bear panics. It is that which causes stocks to seem closely held on a rising market and wanted by nobody on a falling market. The desire yesterday to sell—only to sell—was too nearly unanimous. A violent recovery in prices is usually the sequel, irrespective of the market's ultimate trend.

* * *

Such as are able to take a philosophical view of matters declare that when a decline is inevitable it is better for stocks to break 10 points in ten days than to decline gradually 10 points in thirty days. The violent decline brings in buying which would not appear on a gradual sinking of prices. As compared with the prices at which they sold only a fortnight ago, a good many stocks look cheap at yesterday's closing quotations. Some look cheap only by contrast, and others are, in fact, cheap. Who can deny that Union Pacific, a 6 per cent. stock, is reasonably cheap around 145, with its enormous equities, its further dividend prospects, &c.? Steel preferred, a seasoned 7 per cent. industrial stock, looks cheap around 105, and Pennsylvania, a 6 per cent. railroad stock, looks cheap at 135. These comparisons appeal to the semi-speculative investor. There are others which appeal to the trader. A stock may have been selling 40@50 points over its value, but if there has been a good market for it at the higher prices it will look cheap to traders after an abrupt break of 20 points.

Rights to subscribe to new securities begin to look unattractive. For example, Colorado Fuel is down 20 points from the price at which it was selling when the new securities were offered.

* * *

Pools hung up in unsalable stuff, especially industrial stuff, have been selling better stocks to protect the worse. There is a market for the better stocks.

* * *

Since the news of the San Francisco calamity there has not been one full day of recovery in prices. There have been several recoveries, but not one has lasted through a whole session, and each one so far has invited fresh selling.

* * *

One effect of the decline in high-grade investment stocks has been to create extreme uneasiness in the minds of insurance officials, who were debating whether to liquidate their securities to meet the San Francisco losses or borrow money on them. The only reason for keeping the securities and borrowing the money would be the hope that when the loans matured the securities would be worth more than when they were pledged as collateral. If it were thought that they would be worth less the thing to do would be to sell them at once. If an insurance company having investments in stocks like Great Northern preferred, Northern Pacific, or St. Paul had borrowed money on them last week they might have been called upon yesterday to pledge additional collateral, the market value of those securities having declined seriously since they were pledged. These are considerations which would be likely to determine insurance officials to sell their securities instead of borrowing money on them. That is what some of them have been advised to do—what some of them, in fact, have been doing.

* * *

There is no longer any doubt that the plans which were laid a few weeks ago for a bull campaign in the stock market during the late Spring and Summer have been greatly altered. Many of them have been abandoned entirely. Liquidation on this account has served further to demoralize the market.

* * *

The foreign investment buying of American stocks in the last eight or nine days has not been exaggerated. It is expected to continue on a scale down if prices go lower.

* * *

It would not be surprising if the calls made yesterday by brokers for more margins should produce fresh selling this morning, but an early recovery from yesterday's closing level is nevertheless expected by some of the market's shrewdest followers.

* * *

Houses supposed to be acting for insurance companies were heavy sellers of railroad securities yesterday.

Russian Loan a Success in Paris.

PARIS, April 27.—The Russian loan has proved even more successful than anticipated, although the Bank of France and other participants say that several days must elapse before the definite results are known. According to the first figures the allotments will be 1¼ per cent. of the amounts asked for, showing the loan to have been subscribed many times over.

MAY OPPOSE SCRIP PAYMENT.

United Railways Investment Co. Plan Said to Have Aroused Hostility.

A story gained some currency in Wall Street yesterday that the recent decision of the Directors of the United Railways Investment Company of San Francisco to pay the May dividend, and possibly others thereafter in scrip instead of cash, might meet with some opposition on the part of the minority stockholders. The action was taken in view of the damage suffered by the company's San Francisco properties in the earthquake, and, as was explained to the stockholders in a circular letter sent out by President Thalman, because it was thought prudent to conserve the $712,500, which is the dividend due next week on the preferred stock, for the needs of the reconstruction work.

The scrip bears interest at 6 per cent., and will be redeemed before any cash dividends are paid. The rumor gained interest from the fact that the courts in this country have never passed upon a case of this nature.

Officials of the company denied yesterday that any opposition to the Directors' action had developed. It was said on the contrary that a great number of letters had been received commending the board for its conservative stand.

Rumors of big insurance company failures, which were officially denied later, turned the tables yesterday in the cotton market in favor of the bears, causing a break of 16 to 18 points after an early 4 to 5 point advance. Tenders for the delivery of 60,000 bales on May contracts were issued yesterday, and brokers identified with the bull leaders promptly took up these notices. A prominent Philadelphia spot house only gave up 9,000 bales. Traders were at variance as to what will be the next move on the part of the bulls. Some are positive that the clique is heavily short of July, and will hold this cotton for that delivery. Others give equal assurance that the acceptances on May contracts will be taken care of by spot houses here, acting for the clique, and that the cotton will be sold to spinners. Southern crop accounts average up well. The cost of labor seems to be the chief drawback to increased acreage, but use of fertilizers will partially discount this. San Antonio, Texas, reports a condition of 98 per cent.

The local market started strong at 3 to 4 points advance in response to a 4 to 5 point advance in Liverpool. Prices here were bid up 4 to 5 points more by room traders, making the advance about 8 points; when commission house selling, bear hammering, and Wall Street liquidation on the disquieting rumors broke the market from 11.17 for May to 11.02, July from 11.02 to 10.84, and October from 10.47 to 10.36. A partial rally followed, and the close was unchanged on May, at 11.09, to 7 points lower on July, at 10.91, the May premium being 18 points at the finish.

New Orleans reported a further advance of 1-16 in the spot market and record exports from there were predicted for next month. Some of the selling of July options there was done through brokers who represent New York interests. The market recuperated from the pressure, but sagged back to about 6 to 8 points decline at the close.

Liverpool spot sales were again 10,000 bales at a further 2 point advance, to 6.07d., against 4.16d. last year; 2,000 bales were added to the previous day's sales, making the total 10,000 bales. Futures opened steady and closed steady at a 4 to 5 point advance. May-June, 5.89; July-August, 5.90; August-September, 5.88; October-November, 5.68, and December-January, 5.65. There was a fair business doing in Manchester yarns, and cloths were firm. The local market remained unchanged at 11.75, against 7.70 last year and 13.75 the year before.

Cotton Opinions.

E. F. HUTTON & CO.—We look for a more active and safer trading market now, pending the clearing up of the May option, although there may be somewhat of a good outstanding short interest still in this option. We prefer trading in the distant months.

CARPENTER, BAGGOT & CO.—The present market is so perplexing—there is little doing, and it seems only conservative to await further developments.

Following are the opening, highest, lowest, and closing prices:

January	10.50	10.51-10.41	10.44	10.47

December	10.46	10.48-10.35	10.40	10.43

Market closed steady. Estimated sales, 600,000 bales. New Orleans closed steady 8 points lower for May at 11.00. July closed 7 points off at 11.15, October 6 points down at 10.33, and December at a loss of 6 points at 10.34.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—Until disturbed by the weakness in the stock market, wheat displayed rather a steady undertone yesterday at about the previous night's prices. There was some commission house demand for the new crop months on the idea that about everything favorable to the crop was known, and a little covering among May shorts based on the Argentine shipments of 2,408,000 bushels, compared with 3,248,000 bushels last week, in connection with an advance of ¼d at Liverpool. Around noon, however, the market became sensitive to Wall Street conditions, and once started made rapid declines, falling a full cent under the high point of the day soon after 1 o'clock. Reactions then followed in which about half of this loss was regained, and the market closed fairly steady at a partial ⅝c net decline. Cash wheat in New York closed easy, as follows: No. 2 red, 90½c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 88½c, and No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, 87½c, both opening navigation.

CORN.—Trade in the local corn market was confined entirely to the late months, which were firm all day, closing ¼c net higher. The Western market was also considerably firmer than the previous day, as offerings were less active, receipts not burdensome, clearances more liberal, and commission house demand fairly active, notably from the Northwest. The decline of ⅛@¼d at Liverpool was due to the increase of 1,000,000 bushels in Argentine shipments over the previous week and had little effect here. The cash market closed steady on the basis of 57c, nominal, for No. 2 in elevator and 55c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 57c, and No. 2 yellow, 57c, nominal, free on board, afloat.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

Many of the large brokerage houses are opening uptown branches in the new Day and Night Bank building at Fifth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, which will be opened on Monday. The latest announcements of branches to be opened there come from Harriman & Co., Flower & Co., and Wasserman Brothers.

The stockholders of the Ridgewood Bank of Brooklyn have ratified the proposed merger with the Jenkins Trust Company.

NEW YORK'S GOLD DEMAND.

Report in London That the Drain is Being Diverted to Paris.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, April 28.—The Times in its City article to-day says:

"The question of the American demand for gold was still quite uncertain yesterday.

"One report asserted that New York meant to take a large amount from the Bank to-day and then leave the Bank to recoup itself out of the big parcel due on Sunday from the Cape. Another stated that the American demand already had been diverted to Paris, and that the Bank of France had already permitted a large withdrawal.

"We could obtain no confirmation of the latter story from the French houses in London, but it is admitted that Paris is likely to allow gold to be taken for New York so that the drain on London, if America persists in its demand, may be relieved to some extent. It is even hoped that sovereigns may come to London from Paris if Paris check rises a little more."

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

Enough Steel Shapes on Hand for Use in Rebuilding San Francisco.

Those who are decrying the agitation for the removal of the tariff on steel for the rebuilding of San Francisco, took considerable comfort in the announcement printed yesterday in the Iron and Machinery World of Chicago, and telegraphed here, that the steel shapes on hand in the Chicago market aggreagte 50,000 tons.

No more than this amount of steel was destroyed in San Francisco, according to trade estimates.

The iron market grows more active every day. Sales for the past two weeks are on a larger scale than at any time during the year, and prices, though still irregular, are distinctly firmer. Southern sellers seem stiffer in their ideas, and extremely hopeful for heavy business. There is no accumulation in furnace yards in spite of the high rate of production. In the Eastern Pennsylvania district furnaces dependent on anthracite fuel are continuing to bank or blow out, so that production in that quarter will be materially reduced until the labor difficulties are settled.

Business for the third and fourth quarter is on a larger scale. The heaviest tonnage has been in steel making irons, but foundry grades also show a very fair total.

COPPER MARKET REPORTS.

Copper metal found a quiet market in London yesterday. Spot closed at £85, a decline of 5s. from Thursday's last price, after sales of 100 tons. Futures remained stationary at £83 5s., the last quotation of the day before.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

PHILADELPHIA, April 27.—The local market did not fully reflect the slump in New York. Only the arbitrage stocks and those local shares which New York has lately acquired an interest in were affected to any marked extent, such as Reading, United States Steel common, Pennsylvania, Cambria Steel, Electric Storage Battery, and United Gas Improvement. The latter declined 1¼ points, Cambria Steel 1, and Electric Storage Battery only ½, to 73¼, but it was offered at the close at 72, with 70 the best bid. Other losses were ½ in American Railways, ½ in Insurance Company of North America, 1½ in Lehigh Valley, 2 in Lehigh Navigation trust certificates, ½ in Philadelphia Company unassented, (the stamped receipts held strong,) 2½ in United Railways Investment collateral 5s, 2 in Union Traction of Indiana, and ¼ in West Jersey & Seashore warrants.

The sales in United States Steel were very large, nearly one-half of the day's transactions. Reading was also heavily sold, and Cambria Steel and Lehigh Valley were also active, but elsewhere the dealings were not on a large scale.

Have you good appearance?
Have you good manners?
Have you tact?
Have you persistence?
You can turn these advantages into cash.
Do you want to make yourself into a successful business man?
Have you the courage of your convictions?
Do you want to get out of the ruck?
Would you be willing to put in hard, earnest, conscientious effort if you could be shown that you would reap a very large reward?
If you can write "YES" after all these questions, write me a careful explanatory letter, telling me who and what you are, your age, what you ever did or tried to do; tell me your aspirations. I can probably help you, and I will if I can. I have helped many. No money or capital asked. Do not inclose stamp. If your reply seems to warrant it, I will spend time and money to develop your ability. There is absolutely no "catch" in this advertisement, no attempt to get you to do something for nothing, or to get a list of names to circularize. I want to get a certain work done! If you can do it you can make a great deal of money for yourself—and a great deal more for me.

Distribution of Corkage Charges—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Judge Somerville, the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a protest filed by Francis H. Leggett & Co. of New York regarding the rate of duty to be charged on bottles. The protest related to the proper distribution of certain charges for corking, wiring, capping, and labeling bottles containing various kinds of merchandise, which were held by Collector Stranahan to be dutiable rather as a part of the bottles than of the contents.

The importers maintained that the Collector's ruling was erroneous and that these charges should be distributed so as to be dutiable at the same rate as that imposed on the contents of the bottles.

Other importers' claims overruled were filed by Spiegelberg & Co., Veit, Son & Co., Kaufmann, Aron & Warshauer, J. W. Hampton, Jr., & Co., Clement & Caulwaert, the H. B. Claflin Company, and B. A. Breidenbach, New York.

The board sustained claims by Bloomingdale Brothers, Ferdinand Bing & Co.'s Successors, R. F. Downing & Co., A. Steinhardt & Brothers, Nordlinger & Mamluck, and Goodfriend Brothers, New York.

RECEIVER FOR A HOTEL.

Criterion Company, Which Runs the Lincoln, Said to be Insolvent.

A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Criterion Hotel Company, which is running the Hotel Lincoln, at Broadway and Fifty-second Street, by Horwitz & Wiener for these creditors: Joseph Heidelberger, as the North River Beef Company, $2,003 for meat; Seth Heft, $100, money lent, and Fred H. Hatsel, $300, money lent. It was alleged that the company is insolvent and has made preferential payments of $1,000 to three creditors. Judge Holt of the United States District Court appointed Jerome S. Hess receiver of the assets, fixing his bond at $1,500, and authorized him to continue business twenty days. It was stated that there are 110 patrons at the hotel, one-half of whom are regular, the income from them is $130 a day, and from the bar $70 a day, while the running expenses are $129, including help.

Arthur Mayer, attorney for the company, said that the liabilities are about $19,000 and assets $3,000, not including good-will. The trouble was caused by putting too much money in improvements to fit up the place. The company was incorporated on Sept. 21, 1904, with a capital stock of $25,000, and formerly had a hotel at Broadway and Forty-first Street, which was given up last September, and a lease of the Hotel Lincoln was taken at $25,000 a year rental. Charles A. Swan is President and Treasurer of the company.

SUBWAY PAYMENTS TO BE MADE HEREAFTER

Only First Year's Installment in Dispute, Auditor Says.

COURTS WILL HAVE TO DECIDE

Belmont Employe Says Seeming Discrepancies Don't Exist and $432,000 is the Amount in Dispute.

Explanations of the apparent discrepancies in the reports of Subway earnings, as filed with the State Railroad Commission and the Controller were forthcoming from the Interborough Rapid Transit Company yesterday in the form of a statement from E. F. J. Gaynor, the auditor of the company. The company's statement leaves it to the courts to determine whether or not it was right in capitalizing the amount used to acquire the Subway lease and the Rapid Transit Subway Construction Company, but it declares that there is no question that sinking fund payments will be paid each year from now on.

Furthermore the company declares that, while only the first sinking fund payment of $432,000 is in dispute, ample provision was made in the contract for the redemption of all the Subway bonds by the city out of the operating company's payments for forty-five years, even if the payments should not begin until the end of the sixth year of operation, as might be the case under the contract. Before Auditor Gaynor made public his statement he had a conference with President Belmont of the Interborough.

"There are no discrepancies in bookkeeping in regard to any of the statements that have been submitted to the Controller or to the State Railroad Commission," declared Mr. Gaynor in his statement. "The so-called discrepancies are merely discrepancies in conclusions drawn by persons who have gone over the reports without full knowledge of the facts. The report to the State Railroad Commission showed that the net operating profits of the Subway from Oct. 27, 1904, to June 30, 1905, amounted to $1,330,528. These figures, it must be remembered, were for operating profits from Contracts One and Two. The report to the Controller for the year and four days of operation, from Oct. 27, 1904, to Oct. 31, 1905, amounting to $1,314,080, it must be remembered, was only on Contract No. 1—the section from Brooklyn Bridge to the Battery not being included in the lines of road on which payments to the city were involved. The figures on Contract No. 1, which were reported to the Controller, also covered the midsummer months—from July 1 to Oct. 31—when Subway traffic was at its lowest ebb.

"As to the alleged discrepancy between the statement filed with the Railroad Commission as of June 30, giving the cost of the Subway lease as $2,737,000, and the statement to the Controller showing the capital invested in the company as $12,100,000 for the acquisition of the Subway lease, this apparent discrepancy represents the capital used to purchase the Rapid Transit Subway Construction Company in its entirety with its then estimated $7,000,000 of profits on the subway construction, and was properly capitalized as a part of the money invested in the enterprise on which the company is entitled to earn 5 per cent. before beginning the annual sinking fund payment to the city.

"In view of the discussion that has arisen, it may be necessary to ask the courts to interpret the contract on this point, but it can have no effect, whichever way it is decided, on the redemption of the Subway bonds by the city out of the sinking fund payments required of the operating company.

"There is no question that the annual sinking fund payment will be made this year, as the Subway company is earning more than 5 per cent. on the capital invested. And when the Subway contract was drawn originally, ample provision was made for the redemption of all bonds through the 1 per cent. payments, even if no payments whatever were made during the first five years of operation.

"As the matter now stands, the only question involved is whether the sinking fund payment should be made on the first year of operation, leaving forty-nine years for payments instead of forty-five years, as figured upon by the city officials."

WOMAN SHOT DEAD ON STREET

Mary Louis, negress, 20 years old, living on West Twenty-ninth Street, near Seventh Avenue, was murdered about 2:30 o'clock this morning in front of 129 West Twenty-seventh Street. Four shots were fired into her body by a negro believed by the police to go under the sobriquet of "Buster Brown," but unknown to them by any other name.

The man and woman walked past Policeman Finley at Sixth Avenue talking quietly and no one paid any attention to them, no quarrel being observed, until the man suddenly pulled a revolver and fired a bullet into the woman's temple. She fell dead, it is believed, and as she lay on the sidewalk the negro stood over her body and fired three more bullets into her lifeless form. Then he disappeared.

The body of the woman was taken to the West Thirtieth Street Station. The murderer escaped.

CAR RAMS A FIRE ENGINE.

Three Firemen Painfully Hurt in an Eighth Avenue Collision.

Fire engine 23, which is now called the "skidoo machine," partly because it has been a bit unlucky recently, got in trouble again yesterday forenoon. The engine was struck by a surface car as it was crossing Eighth Avenue at Fifty-third Street, was overturned, and hurled upon the edge of an excavation at the side of the north-bound track.

Three members of the company were painfully injured. They were Capt. George J. Kuss, whose right shoulder was badly hurt; Engineer William Noble, who was badly bruised, and whose left forearm was sprained, and Driver Daniel D. Mahoney, whose right shoulder was painfully twisted. All were taken to the Roosevelt Hospital.

The firemen accuse the motorman of the car, William Herring, a south-bound one, of criminal carelessness. He was arrested and held on a charge of felonious assault.

The engine had been to a small fire at 411 West Fifty-third Street. Returning to the company's station in Fifty-eighth Street, just west of Broadway, Driver Mahoney steered his horses east through Fifty-third Street, and turned north at Eighth Avenue.

This corner is a regular fire crossing, and motormen are required to pause there. Herring's car, bound downtown, was crowded to the platforms and he was going fast. According to Patrick Murray of 553 West Fiftieth Street, a witness, Herring did not pause or look to see if any fire engines were coming. The front of the car struck the left rear wheel of the engine, overturned it, and nearly threw the machine into a trench that the gas company had made.

Capt. Kuss and Engineer Noble, who were on the rear of the engine, were thrown off and landed on a heap of gravel beside the trench. Driver Mahoney was strapped into his seat, and did not fall out, but as the engine went over he grabbed the side of the seat with his right hand, and the shock gave his arm and shoulder a hard jerk. He was able to extricate himself.

PAID BETS ON WRONG HORSE.

Poolrooms Again Badly Hampered in Getting Racing News.

The efforts of the New York poolroom keepers to obtain the news of racing, after it had been withheld from them by orders of The Jockey Club, were resumed yesterday at the Jamaica race track, which opened its Spring meeting.

The poolroom men had made elaborate arrangements for telephone service, and wires were strung to several houses back of and close to the race track. Through signals from poolroom agents inside the track the agents of the poolrooms managed to send out a little advance information early, but this was of so little value to them that Robert Pinkerton, head of the race track police, said he had reports from detectives stationed in poolrooms that errors were made as to the winners of the early races, and that in one case the poolroom men paid bets on the wrong horse, supposedly through a misunderstanding of signals.

The race track officials delayed the posting of scratches and jockeys over the usual five minutes when the activity of the poolroom men was discovered, and the additional delay seemed to defeat the plans of the poolroom agents, for after the third race the houses the lookout men occupied with their telephones were abandoned.

The poolroom service for the remainder of the day depended on messengers from the race track, these being permitted to leave the track whenever they wished, but being obliged to go a roundabout way, the regular entrances being closed.

HOT FIGHT OVER THAMES ST.

Justice Scott heard argument in the Supreme Court yesterday on the application of Dr. W. P. Simpson, who lives in West Forty-second Street, for an injunction to restrain the Board of Estimate and the city from exchanging the site of Thames Street with the corporation owning the Trinity Building at 111 Broadway.

The present Thames Street is 21½ feet wide and runs along the side of the Trinity building from Broadway to Trinity Place. The corporation wants to take over this land and give in exchange a new Thames Street, 30 feet wide further north.

Lawyer T. Harry Hull, counsel for Dr. Simpson, said he could find nothing in the law warranting such an exchange. Justice Scott said that the city could close the street entirely. Mr. Hull replied that the city could do so if the change was for its benefit, but that there was nothing to show that the city would be benefited. Justice Scott said the Board of Estimate would have to decide on that point.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Connelly said that the law of 1895 gave the city the power to close or exchange any street. Counsel were instructed to submit briefs on Monday.

SEEKS A SECOND DIVORCE.

Mrs. Alexander, Divorced and Remarried to Her Husband, Again Sues.

Henry Addison Alexander, formerly of this city, but now living in France, is being sued in the Supreme Court for divorce by his wife, Grace Greene Alexander.

Nicoll, Anable & Lindsay represent Mrs. Alexander. Inasmuch as the defendant has acquired a residence in France, the complaint will have to be served upon him there.

The Alexanders were married in 1888. They separated later, and Mrs. Alexander established a residence in California, where she got a divorce and the custody of their daughter, Eleanor Butler Alexander. The couple became reconciled and were remarried in this State on Dec. 31, 1895. They took up their residence in this city, living at the Langham, Fifty-second Street and Fifth Avenue.

On Dec. 12, 1900, Mrs. Alexander went to Pomfret, Conn., to stay overnight. Upon her return, she says, she found a note from her husband saying that he had gone to Mexico to take a position there. He instructed her to send letters to him at Ures, Mexico. Two weeks later, the complaint says, she got a letter from him dated Paris, in which he said that he had deceived her so as to get out of the country without interference. He said he would never return to her.

It is said that Alexander was in this city last Fall, but returned to Europe in December.

THE NEW FRENCH LINER ONE OF FASTEST AFLOAT

HAS MANY NEW FEATURES

Swiftest Boat Ever Turned Out of a French Yard—Last Word in Luxury and Comfort.

La Provence, the fastest transatlantic liner ever built in France, arrived in New York yesterday afternoon, having covered the 3,201 miles between Havre and Sandy Hook in 5 days 23 hours and 10 minutes, the fastest passage by several hours ever made between the two ports. On the third, fourth, and fifth days out the big liner encountered rough weather which made it impossible for her to maintain the speed she showed on the first and second days out, when she logged respectively 593 and 537 knots. As it was, the vessel averaged 21½ knots for the entire voyage, and there is little reason to doubt but that she will in the near future greatly improve on this very creditable showing, she having made twenty-three knots on her trial trips a few weeks ago.

The Provence landed her passengers about 4:30 o'clock, and there was not a man or woman among them who did not echo the opinions of Commandant Alix and his officers that in La Provence the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique possesses a ship that is destined to make a name for herself in the transatlantic trade. The days' runs of the new liner were respectively 593, 537, 484, 508, 519, and 537 knots. La Provence is the biggest passenger carrier ever built in France, and in appointment and decoration is without doubt one of the finest ever built for any trade.

A complete roof garden, resembling in appearance the amusement places so familiar to New Yorkers who have to stay at home in Summer, is one of the features of the new liner, the garden being aft of the café on the upper promenade deck. The biggest galley on any ship afloat is another feature of the new liner.

Although much larger, the new liner resembles in outward appearance the other fast vessels of the French Line, La Savoie and La Lorraine, having like them two red funnels, two masts, and six decks, the latter known, counting from the bottom, as the fourth, third, saloon, upper, promenade, and upper promenade. On the upper promenade is the café and terrace café, two beautifully furnished apartments decorated in pale-green after the style of the "Directoire." Also on this deck are the luxuriously furnished Louis XVI. suites, as well as the cabines de luxe, the library and music rooms.

On the upper deck is the first class smoking room, which, it is said, is the finest apartment of the kind on the Atlantic, finished in dark oak after the style of the Renaissance. A feature is the magnificent main stairway leading from the promenade to the upper deck, furnished in elaborately carved teak, the great dome surmounting it being supported by an allegorical figure representing "La Provence," offering to the world the "olive branch of peace," surrounded by young Tritons with garlands of fruits, flowers, and shells. Below the dome is a great mirror, on each side of which are paintings after the style of the masters of the eighteenth century, while above them are lights in the shape of lanterns fashioned after the Versailles style.

Most gorgeous of all the rooms, however, is the great saloon dining room, which is amidships on the upper deck. This apartment is 65 feet long, 45 feet wide, and has accommodations for 250 persons. It is a reproduction of the famous dining room in the Duke of Subise's palace, in Paris, the decorations being in light green, while the great fireplace is surmounted by a magnificent figure of Amphitrite seated on a float filled with flowers. The candelabra are of bronze in the style of Louis XV.

The ladies' boudoir, another beautiful apartment, is on the saloon deck. It is decorated in light-blue and gold, and is one of the most attractive apartments on the liner. Another beautiful apartment, also on this deck, is the dining room reserved for children.

La Provence's decks are connected by electric passenger elevators. Among the innovations to be found on board are a manicurist's parlor, flower shops, stenographic offices, and a complete plant for the printing of a daily paper which will contain the latest news of the day received by wireless telegraphy. The second cabin apartments are on the main, upper, and promenade decks, and are among the most comfortable and tastefully arranged apartments for this class of passengers to be found on the Atlantic.

La Provence is 627 feet long, 65 feet wide, 45 feet deep, registers 18,400 tons, and, it is expected, will average 22½ knots an hour on the voyage across the Atlantic. She has accommodations for 400 first, 204 second, and 1,000 steerage passengers.

8-STORY FRATERNITY HOME.

The cornerstone of the new Alpha Delta Phi Clubhouse that is being erected at 136-138 West Forty-fourth Street, was laid yesterday morning in the presence of about 150 members of the fraternity.

Owing to the absence from the city of Francis Lynde Stetson, President of the club, the exercises were conducted by Col. Charles E. Sprague, ex-President of the fraternity. A prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Joseph N. Blanchard of Morristown, N. J., and remarks were made by Joseph H. Choate, for many years President of the fraternity and also of the club.

Collin Armstrong, Vice President of the fraternity, responded for the society, and Louis F. Dodd read a list of articles deposited in the box which was sealed in the cornerstone.

The club building is being erected upon a lot, 35 by 100 feet, and will cost, including the land, about $265,000. It will be eight stories high, two stories of which will be used for club purposes and the remaining floors for apartments for members. There will be fifty-seven of these rooms and apartments. It is expected that the building will be ready for occupancy in the Fall.

The building, which is to be known as the Alpha Delta Phi House, is the first fraternity club building of its kind owned and erected in this country.

WEST SIDE EXPLOSIONS TRACED TO AUTO GARAGES

INSPECTORS FOLLOW ODORS

Garage Owners Warned and All Agree to Take Strict Precautions Hereafter—New Law, Maybe.

After a thorough investigation of the causes for the recent explosions on the west side, Dr. Ernst J. Lederle, ex-Commissioner of Health, made a full report last night to Borough President Ahearn. He declares that there were large quantities of gasoline stored in the district in question, between Forty-sixth and Fifty-fourth Streets, from Ninth Avenue to the river front, and that much of it found its way into the sewers. The odor of gasoline, he says, is plainly noticeable at the manholes.

Following his reading of the report Mr. Ahearn prepared an ordinance which he will introduce in the Board of Aldermen next week. It makes it a misdemeanor to handle gasoline on any premises not equipped with special sewer arrangements for disposing of it.

In the report which he received from ex-Commissioner Lederle the latter states that the people of the section in question have carried out his suggestion that the district be ventilated by the removal of manhole covers. He also states that in many cases iron pipes have been placed in position over the open manholes, so that conditions have been materially relieved and danger minimized. He also states that the Police, Fire, Health, and Tenement House Departments have co-operated with him in his efforts. The report says:

> Samples of air and of the liquid contents of the sewers at various points have been made, and are now being taken and examined, for combustible gases and vapors. In many of the samples of liquid the odor of gasoline is marked. At times the odor of gasoline from the manholes is very strong, and men from the Bureau of Sewers could not remain in the sewers at these points on account of gasoline vapors.
> Shortly after 8 o'clock last night we received complaints from tenants in the neighborhood that there were strong odors in their houses. On inspection, the complaints were verified and the odors found to be those of gasoline. These odors were traced from Tenth Avenue and Fifty-first Street, in which the main sewer of the district running west is located, to Ninth Avenue, and thence along Fifty-sixth Street to Broadway, near which location we found a truck with gasoline cans and learned that one of the garages of this district had just had the gasoline tank filled.
>
> I am now of the opinion that the explosions have been caused by gasoline or gasoline vapor discharged into the sewers of the district. The condition is one of extreme danger, and I would recommend that every effort be made to locate definitely the source of the gasoline.
>
> We will obtain at once from the Fire Department a complete list of all places in the district holding permits to store gasoline, and a careful inspection should be made of each of these places, particular attention being given to the method of storing all [illegible] bility of leakage of gasoline, either liquid or in vapor form, into the sewers.
>
> This morning I informed Dr. Walter Bensel of the above facts, and requested him to detail Inspectors to aid in locating the sources of trouble. I understand that these Inspectors are detailed to examine thoroughly the garages, with a view of determining whether gasoline or gasoline vapor is discharged from them into the sewers.

Health Commissioner Darlington made this statement:

> All managers, owners, and other persons responsible for the operation of garages in the neighborhood of the sewers where explosions have occurred were summoned to this office and informed that under no circumstances must any gasoline be allowed to escape into the house drains, and thus into the sewers of their premises; that they would be held directly accountable, and if any gasoline were found flowing from their premises into the sewer a prompt arrest would follow. Co-operation was promised to the extent of sending police from this office to make the arrest of any chauffeurs engaged in using gasoline for the washing of the machines on the washstands in such a manner that it might enter the house drains.

Borough President Ahearn also received a report from Dr. Bensel, in which he says that careful inspection has traced the gasoline to garages in the district between Fiftieth and Fifty-[illegible] Streets.

PROF. EGAN'S ESSAYS.

Shakespearean and Kindred Studies of the Distinguished Scholar of the Catholic University at Washington.

IN "The Ghost in Hamlet, and Other Essays in Comparative Literature," (Chicago, McClurg,) Prof. Maurice Francis Egan has gathered ten papers, of which seven are on dramatic subjects, and a large proportion of them are on some special point in Shakespearean study or criticism. They are interesting and suggestive little essays, that will appeal to a literary taste, and some of them, as those that treat of "the greatest of Shakespeare's contemporaries," Lope de Vega and Calderon, informing. The Shakespearean studies are valuable because of the sane and intelligent attitude they take toward the dramatist and his work. Besides "The Ghost in Hamlet" there are others on "Some Phases of Shakespearean Interpretation," "Some Pedagogical Uses of Shakespeare," "Lyrism in Shakespeare's Comedies," and "The Puzzle of Hamlet."

Prof. Egan's Shakespearean criticism is founded on the thesis that Shakespeare was first of all a playwright, writing for an actual audience, intending to move and interest that particular audience of that particular period; and that this must never be lost sight of in the criticism of the plays. It is too often lost sight of. He observes:

> From what we can discover of the English of the sixteenth century—and no great list of historical references is needed to show this—we know that they regarded a play as a play, not as an enigma to be thought about, written about, discussed as a problem of philosophy. All the reconstructions of the Elizabethan playhouse show us that the auditors went there to weep or laugh, to love the hero and to detest the villain, to applaud the good and to hate the bad.

None the less Shakespeare is to him also and above all else a poet; and it is his faculty as a poet that is dimmed by too much of the analysis to which he is subjected. Furthermore, Prof. Egan, Catholic and professor in a Catholic university, holds that four-fifths of the English nation in Shakespeare's time and Shakespeare himself, who represented them, were still Catholic at heart; their inherited ways of looking at things were not driven out by Reformation or act of Parliament. The beliefs of Catholicism were still vital throughout the nation. All these views he brings to bear upon his discussion. Thus we see in the study of the Ghost the influence of the Catholic opinion. To contribute to the understanding of this force in the drama of "Hamlet" Prof. Egan lays stress on this fact:

> It did not surprise the English of the beginning of the seventeenth century that the murdered King should come from the state of purgation in which many Englishmen still believed. * * * The announcement of King Hamlet that he had been murdered without chance of confession, with his sins upon his soul, did not imply, as it would have implied to the Puritan mind, that he was either in heaven or hell. He was in the middle state, suffering terribly.

The character of the Ghost must be made consistent with the Christian tradition of the time. It is far more than a stock figure; it is much more than a Christian father exhorting his Christian son to personal vengeance, for Church and State still held the Catholic traditions about marriage. The Ghost, to the London auditors, was the anointed King demanding justice for sacrilege—he speaks as King.

Prof. Egan turns, in the next essay, to oppose Father Bowden and others, who attempt to show that Shakespeare was the one Catholic poetic dramatist in a time permeated with opposition to Catholic teaching. In the first place, Prof. Egan reiterates, much of the Catholic teaching had not been rooted out, and consciously or unconsciously the public of that day was formed in its opinions by it. No religion "gives birth to a poet"; and there is a deal in Shakespeare as pagan as there is other that is Christian. In this, as in other matters, Prof. Egan is right when he declares that "chronic Philistinism" is the result of searching through the most vital of poets with a notebook to prove a cause.

He argues forcibly in one of his chapters for a more liberal and enlightened employment of Shakespeare's works as a means of culture in schools and colleges. In "Lyrism in Shakespeare's Comedies" he points out suggestively some of the most characteristic qualities of Shakespeare's work. What he says about the universal cultivation of music in England in Shakespeare's time is often overlooked by the literary critics. The poet who lives in such a time will set his cadences and pauses to the tunes he hears; and all England at that time was singing. Shakespeare was the most lyrical, the most songful, of all its writers. The essay has also some interesting suggestions as to Shakespeare's method. Thus he declares that the overwrought, high-strained appeals to the imagination which are not infrequently to be found in the plays are his way of appealing to the ear, where now we might appeal to the eye through scenic effects, forcing the illusion by the imaginative powers of the text.

The paper on Calderon and Lope de Vega gives a glimpse of the wonderful stage realism that was demanded of the dramatic productions of the Buen Retiro at the period when Shakespeare was producing his dramas within the four bare walls of the Globe Theatre. The other essays in the book are of a pleasantly literary flavor, and they are all the work of a scholarly and accomplished critic, who sees clearly and finds graceful and accomplished expression for definite and well-modeled opinions. If the book is not strongly original, it is interesting, and not without its importance to current literary discussion.

MRS. WHARTON'S NOVELS.

"The Greater Inclination," (copyright, 1899); "The Touchstone," (copyright, 1900); "Crucial Instances," (copyright, 1901); "The Valley of Decision," (copyright, 1902); "Sanctuary," (copyright, 1903); "The Descent of Man," (copyright, 1904); "The House of Mirth," (copyright, 1905).

THIS present reissue of Mrs. Wharton's works cannot properly be called a collective issue, or an edition at all, but only a reprint, distinguished, if at all, from the original and separate issues, only by the rubrication of the title pages. One might wish that the publishers, Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, had designated the order of appearance of the various volumes more accurately than by the mere notation of the dates of copyright. Because it is only comparatively recently that the disinterested lover of literature has been compelled to take notice of Mrs. Wharton's literature, has been "charged with knowledge" of her works. For a long time, say five or six years, such a reader had no other guarantee of her performance, short of reading it, than was furnished by the fact that her "things" appeared in Scribner's. To be sure that is a guarantee of literary quality, possibly, as things go, the best guarantee there is. But, after all, the certificate of the most competent of magazine editors is only one vote, no matter how much more it weighs than it counts. It cannot be reasonably pretended that everybody who gains admission to the "short story" department, even of Scribner's, is a writer of whom all readers who read only out of literary interest are thereby compelled to take notice.

As to Mrs. Wharton, it may be pretty fairly said that it is only with the appearance of her latest book, that powerful study of the social conditions of New York in particular, but also of the United States of America in general, which she calls "The House of Mirth," that her real vogue begins, and the lovers of English literature who are so distinctly to be distinguished from the ovine pursuers of the "best sellers," are compelled to take notice of her work. When they are once "put on notice," they are compelled, or impelled, to take notice of all her work, insomuch that they have a fairly distinct grievance against the publishers for failing to give them the order of succession of the things which they have been compelled roughly to compile from the dates of the several copyrights.

Considering the whole seven volumes, one has to say at once that what they have in common, and what distinguishes them from the output of "the mob of gentlemen," and still more of ladies, "who write with ease," is the artisticality of the workmanship. Most distinctly, this is all "literary." That implies a great deal, in knowledge and in conscientiousness. The "best sellers," whom the student is so apt to find negligible, are by no means apt to be distinguished by their perception of the tradition of English literature, a hold upon which is so necessary in order to follow it, and even more necessary, one may say, in order adequately to defy it. That Mrs. Wharton possesses this is the conviction which one cannot fail to draw from the very slightest of her short stories. And it is a most comfortable conclusion, especially in the presence of the "popular" things which are so far from betraying it that the bewildered "literary" reader who is dragooned into reading one of them is impelled to doubt whether the writer of it ever observed any literary standards more exacting than those of the "Fourth Reader."

It follows, perhaps, that such a reader has occasionally, if not constantly, to regret the "literariness" of his author; even to wish that she had not read so attentively her George Eliot, her Thackeray, most of all her Henry James, delightfully reminiscent of one or another of them as her work may be. But it does not at all follow that Mrs. Wharton has nothing of her own. She has, in fact, a great deal of her own. She too, like her masters, has

All human dealings in a learned spirit.

Sometimes the effect is cynical, as in the volume of short stories entitled "The Descent of Man," which one might fairly describe as a series of "Predicaments" or "Dilemmas," and which, in sooth, "leaves our poor humanity beaten like a rag." It requires a wider reading to force the recognition that the author is not a cynic, that she has no antipathy to the victims of the "human predicament," but, contrariwise, a helpful sympathy with them.

But, like any other writer, Mrs. Wharton is at her best when she is talking about what she knows about. One says, quite at his ease, that she is most of all "knowing," rather than loving, and one can quote many chapters and verses to that effect. It is true that her workmanship is very often "literary" to the point of sophistication, and that the merely human reader has to say, very often: "'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so." Did space permit, one might quote very many instances of this tendency. They would be all illustrative, all legitimate, all true. But they would give a total impression of a half truth, which would be equivalent to a total impression of an all falsehood, and would give a false impression of Mrs. Wharton's faculty. For the impression at which one arrives, after reading these seven volumes, is, most decidedly, that the author is "somebody," especially that she is an expert witness on our present social conditions, the circumstance that she is an unusual literary artist being, in a manner, "thrown in." Doubtless, a great part of her work may strike the observer as merely "knowing." But, when one happens upon such a story as that which depicts the woman who had in vain endeavored to raise her husband to her own moral level, but who succeeded in raising to it her child, one no longer says "knowing." One says "beautiful," and "true."

One judges, from the publisher's announcements, that the most "successful" work of Mrs. Wharton's, at least before "The House of Mirth," which has compelled all of us to take notice of her, was "The Valley of Decision." The contrast is very striking, and tends to bear out the contention of our dear "Doyen" that the historical novel is necessarily a fraud—if, indeed, that be Mr. Howells's contention. The plain fact is that, in "The Valley of Decision," Mrs. Wharton had the advantage of the clear topographical knowledge which was denied to Sir Walter when he wrote about anything outside of the British Islands. It is to be added that the period of the young Alfieri was a most interesting period—as interesting, at least, as that which George Eliot chose for "Romola." But, upon the whole, it is to yawn. Certainly, it is to yawn in comparison with George Eliot's "Middlemarch," her picture of the society which she really knew. Certainly, it is to yawn in comparison with "The House of Mirth," the picture of the society which Mrs. Wharton really knows. There is really no doubt about it. The testimony of a witness about a real condition to which he is an expert witness is immeasurably of more value than the conjectures of a subsequent volunteer about a condition of society as to which the subsequent volunteer is not and cannot be an expert at all.

Museum's Edinburgh Display.

Mr. Jesse Haworth of Manchester, England, has contributed $500 toward the expense of publishing in book form the photographs and descriptive letter press of the Brooklyn Museum's display at the exhibition of mediaeval architectural refinements recently held in Edinburgh. The Edinburgh contributions toward the same object aggregate $850, and the American subscriptions so far received have raised the guarantee fund for publication expenses to a total of $2,300. Although the entire sum needed is $3,100, the issue of the publication may be regarded as assured. The firm of B. T. Batsford, architectural publishers in Great Britain, has charge of the work, which will include not less than 250 plates in photogravure, with a text based on that of the Edinburgh catalogue, but considerably amplified and enlarged. This text and the observations represented by the plates are the work of Mr. William H. Goodyear, Curator of the Brooklyn Museum of Fine Arts.

THE MAGPIE.

IN "Chatwit, the Man Talk Bird," (Harper,) Philip Verrill Mighels, the author of "Bruvver Jim's Baby," has departed still further from the conventional ruts of fiction than even that charming and novel story ever hinted that he would or could. The title, to be sure, of this little idyl of a magpie seems needlessly unattractive, and the names of the other animal characters in the book have the same painfully mechanical ring—Sun-soke, the Lizard; Wo-cri, the Coyote; Feasive, the Skunk, and so on—but, in all the essentials of ingenious plot and interesting development, Mr. Mighels has a second time proved himself thoroughly competent with a difficult and unusual subject. He seems to know the hearts of beasts and birds as well as he proved before to know the hearts of a stray baby and his bachelor nurse, and a very moving little story is this of a wild magpie who lived as a captive long enough to make him an alien among his fellows without at all lessening in him the love for the wild and for his natural mates. Therein lay all the trouble which befell Chatwit and the possible tragedy which the author is kind enough to avert by sending the bird back to voluntary captivity and a peaceful old age among his human friends.

Day after day in his cage in a Nevada farmyard Chatwit, who had been caught when a mere magpie squab by a youth named Jonny Strong and had developed into something extraordinarily clever even for a magpie, sat and watched the ways of man and absorbed much knowledge into his inscrutable little mind. But the thing that appealed to him most was the man-tongue used by Jonny in endless conversations which they held together, and he set about learning it in his mocking, magpie way. It proved a tremendous task, worthy of a Chatwit, and it was a great day when he first succeeded in spanning the gulf between the ways of man and the ways of the wild, and called "Rats! Rats! Rats!" to an awe-stricken hen that had stopped to scratch for her brood before his box. His next triumph was "Jonny! Jonny! Jonny, git your gun!" when that same brood of chickens was threatened by a big gray blow-snake. So he went on, whimsically choosing what he considered of value out of all that Jonny bade him repeat until he had a thoroughly original but quite workable vocabulary. He could even sing some of the tunes with which the farmer's daughter accompanied her work in the kitchen, and his favorite was "Marching Through Georgia."

Then there comes a day when such an unnatural pursuit as imitating his neighbors palls on Chatwit and a longing for freedom possesses him. Chance soon grants his wish and a second chapter in his career opens. But the wonderful accomplishment that won him man's admiration brought only trouble out among the people of the wild. Beasts and birds, even the whole Chatwit tribe, feared and hated him and plotted his destruction, until in loneliness and despair poor little Chatwit was glad to fly back to Jonny Strong's little cage.

Mr. Mighels tells all this and much more in most entertaining fashion, and, moreover, with an air of reality that leaves not much doubt that Chatwit himself is not altogether a creature of the imagination. Incidentally he reveals a familiar knowledge of the forest denizens and a thorough understanding of their natures, and the story is one that will sensibly widen and deepen the reader's interest in wild creatures besides being interesting in itself. Children will find it captivating. The illustrations by the author are a distinct addition.

Leather and Bookbindings.

The report of the Committee of the Society of Arts and the Worshipful Company of Leather Sellers of London is now appearing in book form, edited by Viscount Cobham, Chairman of the Committee, and Sir Henry Trueman Wood, M. A., Secretary of the Society of Arts. The Macmillan Company is bringing the book out in this country.

The work of the committee and the scope of the report are indicated in the introduction. The work was directed to an elucidation of the following "points": "An investigation of the nature of the decay of leather used for bookbinding; an examination of the causes which produced this decay; a research into the best methods of preparing leather for bookbinding, and a consideration of the points required to be dealt with in the preservation of books." And a résumé of the results of the investigation follows.

The illustrations, many of them in colors, show the effect of dyes on the leathers used for binding books, and there are genuine examples of sealskin, pigskin, calfskin, goatskin, and sheepskin undyed and dyed and finished.

MR. WARDMAN'S STORY.

THE PRINCESS OLGA. By Ervin Wardman. 12mo. Pp. 315. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

SOME bad books begin well; many good books begin without great promise. In the latter might be included Ervin Wardman's "The Princess Olga." But one feels almost grateful to this author for beginning his novel without making the rash promises which are so often unfulfilled.

At the outset the reader gets the impression that here is another of these Boothby-out-Guyed and Anthony-out-Hoped stories of beautiful but tricky Princesses, castles in woods, horses that pass in the night, and dark dungeons and moats.

True, Mr. Wardman has all these in his stock, but only uses them to bring out his story, which relates to the little Kingdom of Crevonia—the name's enough—a concession, and an American engineer.

Just conceive for a moment an American engineer who has swung bridges, who has shifted rivers out of their courses, who has made flower gardens out of deserts and bored holes through mountains, who has no reverence for anything but a woman and the utility of God's green earth—just conceive such a man becoming mixed up in Hopesque intrigue and mastering the situation with his up-to-date disregard for ancient ethics. There you have a story that is worth picking up, if for no reason but curiosity to see what happens—to the Kingdom of Crevonia.

Of course Harding, the engineer, falls in love with the Princess Olga. In spite of Mr. Wardman's original and ingenious idea, one must forgive—in fact, demand—that. But even in this love affair the sense of utility in the American, his science and system in all things, as opposed to the almost sweetly pitiful belief of the Crevonian Princess in her own dignity, power, rank, castles, soldiers, and ethics, provides a situation that is at once fascinating and amusing, albeit powerful in its conflict.

In one of the passages of tongue-war between Princess Olga and the American engineer he sums up the situation very neatly for the reader:

> This sort of childish play went out of fashion generations ago in all parts of the world where men are competent to perform their work. It is done now only in preposterous plays, where the soldiers and bravoes behind the footlights cannot cross the stage without tripping on their swords. * * * Buffoonery, Madame, has lost crowns, no doubt; it never gained one.

The situation is not all buffoonery, however. As is hinted above, there is a crown at stake. The Princess is one of the claimants. The American engineer is in Crevonia to see that the one who gets the throne when the King dies is the one least likely to interfere with the bankers and concessionaires. Alas! poor Olga, with her ancient if honorable ideas, is not that one, so that the love interest of the book presents a peculiar situation for the lovers.

It would be unfair to tell how this story works out. The lovers are happy, of course, in the end. Whether the American became the Prince Regent of Crevonia or Princess Olga an American Queen is still Mr. Wardman's secret.

> The earth is still in its youth. The geographic changes will not be such as to menace the success of man. Man himself will not change structurally, but through his physical development he will become a geological agent of singular capacity. He will act as one vast economic sympathetic creature.

UNDER KING JEROME.

IF YOUTH BUT KNEW. By Agnes and Egerton Castle. Illustrated by Lancelot Speed. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

THIS is one of the prettiest of the stories of Agnes and Egerton Castle. There is a delicate wit, a lightness of touch about it which makes it a delight to the reader from the first page to the last. One enters almost immediately into the spirit of the wandering minstrel's violin, which sang: "To the devil, to the devil with postilions and valets! To the devil with prudence and forethought! O youth, enjoy your youth! O youth, be young!"

The scene is laid in Westphalia, in the time of the Kingdom of Napoleon's brother, Jerome. The principals are Geiger-Hans, gentleman minstrel, whose song and thoughts are of the glories and privileges of youth; little Baroness Sidonia, just seventeen, with long yellow plaits of hair; a German Burgrave Wellenhausen and his frivolous Burgravine, Lady Betty; and a young man, half English, half Austrian, Steven Lee, Count Waldorff-Kielmansegg.

It is not a historical novel, or at least it is not so in the strict sense of the word, and Jerome figures only slightly in the narrative. Wellenhausen is something of an ogre, a jealous husband, who believes that the safest place for young and beautiful wives is a castle on a rock, and here the Lady Betty lives in the companionship of her husband's niece, little Sidonia, till one day, her lord having apparently wrongfully accused her of a flirtation, if nothing worse, with the young Austrian Count who found his way to the castle in company with the musician, the old Burgrave is overcome with such remorse that he becomes as suddenly pliable as he has hitherto been stiff. Lady Betty insists that his only reparation is to take her to Cassel, Jerome's seat, and there she enters with all spirit into the dissipations and intrigues of that disgraceful Court.

The novel, however, is really but a youthful love story of Waldorff-Kielmansegg and Sidonia, and the course of their love runs not more smoothly than the course of other loves—indeed it is in the beginning a bit rougher, the young people parting on their wedding day through the lying of the jealous Lady Betty.

Geiger-Hans is the most quaint personality in the tale, and the story of his wanderings and the charms of his singing is particularly a dainty bit of work. He is the fairy godfather, always appearing when most needed by the one or the other of his young protégés, and it is he who finally brings them together, going away then into the distant darkness, a bent figure, saddened because of his own irreparable fortunes, yet finding always a happiness in the thought that while he is old, others are young, and that "if youth but knew" it could do all things because of its very youth. There is a delightful description of a stolen evening of dance and music in the old castle on the rock where Geiger-Hans plays, directing meanwhile a minuet:

> "You, Sir, bow with your hand on your heart. You take her hand and you look into her eyes. 'Ah,' say you, eloquent, though silent, 'to hold those delicate finger tips, madam, through life, * * * to have the rapture of your sweet company * * * then, indeed, would every step be music!' 'Oh, Sir,' says she in the same language, 'you overpower me!' And with this she sinks from you into a curtsy that is all dignity, all grace. * * * Again you bow * * * you hold her little hand aloft. The satin of her gown whispers to your damask. * * *"

But alas! The musician is interrupted. They crave a valse. "We do not dance the minuet in our days!" says Steven. So they waltz, and Geiger-Hans exclaims

> "Mon Dieu! It may be we were no better as to morals in my youth, but at least we took our pleasure like gentlemen. If we plucked a rose we did it with a grace—between two fingers. We did not seize a lady round the body and prance with her like hind and milkmaid. Oh, Sir, how little fragrance remains in the flower you thus mangle in your grasp!"

"Nancy's" Author.

Mrs. Elinor Macartney Lane, author of "Nancy Stair," whose new novel, "All for the Love of a Lady," will be published May 4 by D. Appleton & Co., spent the Winter at Asheville, N. C. She has nearly completed writing a long novel, which is expected to appear in the Autumn.

THIRTY YEARS AGO.

Miss Friswell's Thinly Entertaining Reminiscences of Great Men She Once Saw.

THE author of this volume, "In the Sixties and Seventies," (H. B. Turner & Co., $3.50,) was the daughter of John Hains Friswell, a newspaper man, who held thirty and more years ago a position almost unique among Englishmen. He knew, besides the journalists, all the literary men of his time, all the artists, and the better class of actors. He went everywhere, seemingly, and took his daughter with him. Miss Friswell, whose name really seems to be Myall, hides all dates with maidenly reserve, but it is probable from an unguarded remark that she must have been in her teens early in the seventies; and so it happens that she met many of the big guns in English art and literary history. Similar happenings are by no means uncommon; but Miss Friswell is one of the few persons to exploit her very thin acquaintance with the great. Yet her book is of interest, as these extracts show.

The Friswell family was intimate with Irving, who used continually to drop in on them without warning.

> My mother often used to point out little details that had been overlooked. I remember one in "The Bells," which my mother told Mr. Irving on the first night, when he returned to our house to supper. People who have seen the play may remember that the first scene is a small inn, and that there is supposed to have been a deep fall of snow. The innkeeper, Matthias (Irving) walked in, on that first night, in ordinary black boots, with no snow upon them. My mother spoke of it, and afterward Matthias wore high black boots, and stood on the mat while the snow was brushed off them. Remarks were made in the papers as to Mr. Irving's attention to the minutest details, and this was cited as an instance.

Toole's reputation for practical jokes has penetrated certain spots in Darkest America. Miss Friswell relates one of them:

> Toole was well known for his practical jokes. In "Dearer Than Life" he acted an old tradesman who had been ruined by the loss of some money, and takes a post as porter in a warehouse. Lionel Brough acted the part of a drunken reprobate, brother to the porter.
>
> One fine day Toole and Brough determined to have their portraits taken, so, dressed in their costumes—Toole in ragged, patched clothes, boots very much the worse for wear, and an old piece of sacking over his shoulders with "Glass, With Care" on it, and Brough in a workhouse suit, his face made up to look sodden with drink—they set out for the photographer's. Passing through Grosvenor Square, Toole proposed that they should call at one of the large houses there. This they did, knocking a resounding double knock. A smart footman threw open the door, and gazed in supercilious amazement at them.
>
> "Is your master at home?" asked Toole, quickly.
>
> "No, he is not!" said the man, about to bang the door.
>
> "Tell him that his brothers, the porter and the pauper, called; and we'll be back later in the afternoon."

Here is an interesting glimpse of Lord Lytton:

> Leaving the Literary Fund Dinner, my mother and Miss Stevens were escorted downstairs by some of our friends, and I was following with my father. I heard a voice say:
>
> "Do tell me who the beautiful girl is leaning on the arm of that aristocratic man."
>
> I turned around to see which girl, and met the keen eyes of Lord Lytton. We had his portrait in our album. I always called him Mephistopheles. I had seen him lingering around our sofa, but took care not to catch his eye. He had asked the question of Mr. Frederick Locker, whom I knew well, and who smiled and nodded as he answered:
>
>
> "That Hains Friswell, the moralist, the man who writes against thieves' literature!" exclaimed Lord Lytton in a very interested tone. "Why, he looks like a Duke! You know them? Do introduce me; she's the ——"
>
> "Hush, you're the last man in London Friswell would introduce his daughter to; he's d——d particular, I can tell you, and she's very young."
>
> "And why shouldn't I be introduced, pray?"
>
> "You know better than I can tell you, my lord," retorted Locker significantly. I turned my head again and saw them both watching us, Lord Lytton with a very nasty leer on his face.

Miss Friswell thus describes Tennyson, whom she saw on a station platform:

> He would have been tall, but his shoulders seemed somewhat bent; his hair was long, so was his beard; he wore an ugly Inverness cape and a large slouch hat; he looked like a bandit in a melodrama, and I thought him some poor actor who had come out in some of the stage properties.
>
> He seemed so sad I felt quite sorry for him, as I watched him walk up and down the platform. My father and I stepped into the train, and as we seated ourselves he asked:
>
> "Well, what do you think of your hero who wrote 'In Memoriam' and 'The Idyls of the King'?"

When one recalls that Henry M. Stanley had been a newspaper man for years before he went to Africa, the following story seems exaggerated:

> "This," said my father, laying his hand on the manuscript, "is Stanley's great book, 'How I Found Livingstone,' but Marston writes me that it wants great revising, that it will never do as it is; and he's about right there—it's not well written; it's ungrammatical and ill-spelt. I fear it will be a great task. Now, what I want you to do is to read it carefully through, and correct all the grammar and spelling."
> The manuscript was greatly cut and altered, and when it came out the critics were, I believe, somewhat surprised at the clear, concise style in which it was written; they would have spoken differently had they read, as I did, the manuscript.

A HISTORY OF MUSIC.

A COMPLETE HISTORY OF MUSIC. For Schools, Clubs, and Private Reading. By W. J. Baltzell. With portraits, reproductions of instruments, and musical examples. 8vo. Pp. viii.-564. Philadelphia: Theodore Presser.

THIS is a compact and well compiled little text book, that may not unreasonably lay claim to the quality of "completeness" that appears in its title, at least so far as this implies the setting forth of a large number of facts. The plan of the arrangement is intended for use with both the recitation and the lecture systems, and the paragraph headings and general division of the book are devised with this end in view. The book is arranged in "lessons;" at the end of each lesson is a series of questions to test the pupil's mastery, and from time to time there are review outlines. There are also references for further and more detailed reading.

The author begins at the beginning, with the prehistoric music of Assyrians and Egyptians, and follows down through Hebrew and Greek music, through the beginnings of mediaeval music, through the great period of the polyphonic ecclesiastical composers, and so to the modern schools, and the most modern schools. There are chapters on musical instruments, on singing, on the origin and development of the opera, and of the suite and sonata. His discussion is brought down to the most recent times, and includes the works of the most advanced of the modern innovators—Strauss, Elgar, d'Indy, Mahler, Debussy, Bruneau, Bossi, Wolff-Ferrari, Loeffler, and the Russians. His characterizations and criticisms are brief, and naturally not, in case of the later men, conclusive, but they are intelligent and liberal in view. There may be exceptions taken to some of his historical statements. In so cursory an account some things are likely not to receive a fullness of explanation that puts them in their true light and their true relationship. In some cases Mr. Baltzell has leaned too heavily on authorities that are not authoritative, as on Naumann, whose history he is constantly quoting. His references for further reading might advantageously have been extended beyond the more popular works that he chiefly cites. But for its purpose, and within its limitations, this history is unusually good, and an uncommon skill has been shown in its compilation and in the arrangement of its parts.

MY SWORD FOR LAFAYETTE.

THERE is a dash and vivacity about the title "My Sword for Lafayette," (Dodd, Mead & Co.,) which gives fair promise of what is to come. Much clashing of swords, many hairbreadth escapes, and more than one tragic death make up this stirring story.

Zaida Kay is a young American who, after the battle of Yorktown, because of his devotion to the Marquis de Lafayette decides to follow him back to France.

There is mutiny on the high seas; there is a miraculous escape; there is an idyllic sojourn in a quaint little village on the coast of England, and a romantic marriage with a young French girl in hiding there from enemies at home.

The humble love in a cottage is soon cut short by the news that Pauline is heiress to a considerable estate in Touraine. But matters in France are going from bad to worse. The idea of Liberty which Lafayette had given his services to see carried through to success in America is turning the Parisians into madmen. It is, indeed, a frenzied France. The King is in danger. Lafayette is obliged to flee. Zaida Kay and Pauline are with him, but they cross the border too late.

Lafayette is taken captive, Pauline is put into the hands of a French force. Kay makes a desperate fight to go with her, but is struck down and wakes to consciousness in a dungeon cell.

And where is Pauline? Who frees Lafayette, and how is the return journey of Zaida Kay to America accomplished? As to these facts Max Pemberton is the best authority in the world.

THE BLOODLESS WARFARE FOR MARKETS.

A Book About the Combat of the United States and Germany Which Cannot Be Settled by the Hague Conference.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by

EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

THERE will shortly meet at The Hague a second session of the Peace Conference which was summoned because war was too costly and deadly for the tenderness of modern nerves. But it is only waste of blood and national bankruptcy which affront our present-day susceptibilities. There has arisen no Bloch to head a movement against commercial wars which are costlier and deadlier than even that which has left Japan panting and Russia prostrate. No blood is shed, it is true, in the peaceful fight for markets, but national physiques are undermined until England is frightened at her lack of food for powder, and thoughtful Americans are wondering what will be the physiological effect of stunting 2,000,000 children in wage-earning occupations, chiefly in factories. Germany escapes best in this comparison for the worst reason in the world—universal military training, which gives educational and physical benefits lasting through life.

England fares worst in the financial comparison. We come off best because of the prodigality with which we are exploiting natural resources which will serve yet for some generations, but are a credit to God rather than to ourselves. We justly pride ourselves upon the nimbleness of our wits, and, reinforced with splendid stores of coal and iron and limitless land, they have carried us far. But let any honest American ask himself how far Yankee ingenuity, unaided by adventitious helps which are being fast consumed, will avail in a struggle against the solid German intellect which has caused the Germans to supplant the British as the world's best-hated race. Alas for our kinsmen, the struggle for cheapness has left them in the worst place of the three. Morally speaking, our motherland deserved the first place. For she has played the fairest game. Whoever would might sell to her. Wherever her influence prevailed trade was free. Her recompense has been that her trade was throttled by law. Nation after nation has fortified itself behind its statutes of exclusion, and schedules which prostrate industries as machine guns mow down men meet her exports at every frontier. Nor is this all her handicap. Much of her ore must be imported, her coal is fast going, the fibres for her spindles must be sought abroad, and her food must be bought. Yet she retreats stubbornly, fighting for every one of those commercial conquests which she owes to character and being first in the field.

These three are the world's chief contestants in the battles for trade among which there will be no Waterloo. Not that there will be any lack of victories and defeats. Upon the contrary, it is a struggle to the death, to seize honest profits which means the other's loss, and eventual national starvation, and bankruptcy, and loss of all that proud peoples hold dear. But it will be silent starvation and bleeding of resources, not murder. Only under the happiest conditions can any of these nations consume what it is able to produce. Whenever there is a surplus, it must be disposed of, and the sacrifice sale spells ruin to the weaker in the competition. In Secretary Shaw's very recent words: "We are approaching a crisis. We must have more markets for manufactured products or labor will walk our streets, looking for work, and, failing to find it, will beg bread."

None of these three antagonists can afford to make any false moves or to lose a single point. Yet there has been a singular lack of such work as is done by intelligence bureaus of a general military staff. Mr. Mosely's expeditionary corps of industrial investigators which toured the United States stands alone. It did not go to Germany, and we have sent out no industrial spies—meaning no offense—to either England or Germany. Multitudes are intensely interested in knowing the facts, and many of the facts have been observed by different observers for different industries. Mr. Shadwell's excellent book is unique in that it is systematic, and inclusive of all three countries by the same observer. Merchants, manufacturers, legislators, all interested, can here find set out better than elsewhere the basic conditions of that modern god—cheapness. How long can competitors work their hands, what wages must they pay, how far are they advantaged or prejudiced by legislation compelling sanitary conditions of factory or homes, what is the cost of living and raw materials, what is the provision for industrial wastrels, the wounded of the commercial world?—these are samples of the topics which these volumes discuss instructively and with scientific love of truth and lack of prejudice. The author is no faddist or theorist. Principles are the least of his concern in his objective and comparative study. How things are, not how they ought to be, is the object of his quest. There is no lack of precision and detail in the book, but it can be understood that this is not the place to reproduce the figures. They must be sought in the original, but useful and interesting notes may be made of some of Mr. Shadwell's observations.

There is plenty of praise of Americans in these volumes, but it serves no useful purpose to quote it. We think quite well enough of ourselves, and attention directed to some weak points will help to amend them. Fuss rather than efficiency is one of the things which Mr. Shadwell remarked here. Discipline, economy of effort, intelligent direction of men and means to ends, are poorly recompensed in their absence by readiness to make unusual efforts. Avoidance of effort in the human economy is like avoidance of friction in mechanics. The machine does more and wears less. The merits of our alert, inventive, adventurous temperament are more immediately obvious, and attract attention in the first place. It takes the skilled observer to look deeper and discern the results of hurried, careless, unthorough planning and execution. Industrially we are characterized by the same defects as marked our Cuban campaign. What would have happened to us had we had such an enemy as Japan the Lord only knows. But in Germany we have just such an industrial enemy, and we have need to prepare for the campaign if we are to avoid being submerged in the unconsumed products of our industrial capacity. We lack—not all of us, but most of us—the patience to do the best work, or the discernment to appreciate it. Our machinery is speeded so that it racks itself, and spoils material. Speed of that sort is economic waste, and the product could not compete with importations except for the tariff, which is another way to say that the world's markets are not for us in our present state of development.

For England as for the United States the German is the enemy, and Mr. Shadwell treats his merits with the greatest respect. Germany is strongest just where we are weakest. The German intellect is as reckless of trouble as an American manager is of expense. Germans spare no pains to see the end from the beginning, and to plan every step of the journey thither. Work, work, work is what has given Germany its place against advantages of mental endowment and material resources far superior. Germany has lived for generations in conditions expressed by our saying "there is no meat in the house." In another way of putting it Germany has suffered—or benefited by—a prolonged state of affairs such as led up to our present prosperity. It was in the nineties, when we were saving pennies and sparing no effort to increase product without increasing cost, that we began to make millions. Germany has never accustomed itself to prodigality like our own, and so long as she remains ignorant of prodigality and waste, her mental and physical fibres will retain that virility which is weakened by pleasures and indulgence.

England's weakness is the reverse of Germany's. She was the first of the very rich nations, and her energies have been sapped at one extremity by the exhaustion of competition and at the other by indulgence in games and luxuries. Kipling's "muddied oaf at the wicket" seemed to Englishmen like sacrilege, but it is as full of meaning and warning as Berard's picture of Birmingham magnates despising small orders because accustomed to larger, and so, when business suffers, turning to finance to make good loss of trade or manufactures. Now trade may sustain finance, but finance cannot make trade. Mr. Shadwell has compliments for England as well as for England's rivals. The "scrapping" of efficient but inferior machinery—which Americans so pride themselves upon—he declares was first practiced by British makers of textile machinery. British machine shops rival either American or German. Indeed England perhaps possesses no works of the first-class quite so bad as the Philadelphia locomotive works of which we are so proud. Just as we pride ourselves upon the interchangeable part principle, so England prides itself upon the variety of its product. Imagine a factory ready to provide in quantity 10,000 patterns of an article. Speaking generally, British industrial strength lies chiefly in the happy mean. British intellect is neither so solid as the German nor so penetrating as the American, but it is of high quality. Britons are scolded because lacking German science and American enterprise; but they are quicker than the Germans and more careful than the Americans. The solidity and durability of their work is a standard, and its finish is also first class.

It would be interesting to quote further, but it is impossible. Our captains of industry will turn to this work without disappointment if they are farsighted enough to seek to be forehanded against that reaction which is certain to come, although its portents are not yet to be discerned. When those times come the suggestion of a Hague conference for the wasteful methods of modern commerce will seem less fantastic than now. Only faddists now lament bargains whose costs should be reckoned in blood rather than in pennies. In counting rooms and factories war is being made as truly as at Mukden, and taking the world through the dreadful toll exceeds any of the world's Mukdens. We are dominated by a false competition, not a competition of production, but of distribution, where one man's sale is another man's loss. Where there are hundreds of millionaires there are hundreds of millions in discontent. There is unfair competition just as there is unfair warfare, and if The Hague is able to forbid the poisoning of wells or the use of explosives from balloons it may be able to provide a means whereby the few shall not fatten upon the many, and better distribution shall establish a fair price for all labor and for every product. Then the multitude shall be well to do, even though always some will be, and should be, richer than others. God's gifts are generous enough and human effort is laborious enough to make the distribution of blessings far more general. Speed the day.

LADY BALTIMORE

By the Author of "The Virginian"

"Mr. Owen Wister's 'Lady Baltimore' stands out in the weary waste of present day fiction like a palm tree in the desert. . . . Here is taste, here is wit, delicacy, humor . . . , tempting one to apply many rather extreme expressions of approval to this book." —Baltimore News.

"It is a love story, pure and simple, dainty and full of grace. . . . Very rare, indeed, is it to come upon a novel which gives one so much satisfaction as does 'Lady Baltimore.'"—Brooklyn Eagle.

"Owen Wister has accomplished the unexpected, he has written another novel equal to 'The Virginian.' . . . The worst thing Mr. Wister could possibly have done would have been to write a second story of the West. . . . But he has done the unexpected, he has traveled far from the West, far from cowboys and heroines courted on horseback. Equally unexpected, he has produced a second piece of fiction which is likely to be almost as good a seller as the first and certain to rank higher as a literary product." —The Register and Leader, Des Moines.

"A delightful story. . . . It's a worthy successor to 'The Virginian'—although entirely different." —The Post-Dispatch, St. Louis.

BOSTON NOTES.

Sandpeep, Otherwise Keren-happuch—Frances Baird, Detective.

A HEROINE who is rustic from her finger tips to her innermost cerebral atom is rare indeed; but such a one is Keren-happuch Bronson, the Maine girl whose diary, written "to read when she is an old woman," composes Mrs. Sara E. Boggs's novel, "Sandpeep," published this week by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. Keren-happuch, Keren, as she is called when not addressed by the coast equivalent of "sandpiper," so persistently follows Dr. Hale's counsel of perfection, "confess ignorance," that she asks the meaning of every second word used by educated interlocutors; she sets herself the task of reading the Encyclopaedia, "such an interesting book," and she imitates every phase of refined speech or manner which her ignorance permits her to note; but her judgment of persons and events remains that of the fisherman's daughter, of the girl who can sail a boat as well as a man, and has "fished and lobstered for her living." She is a fearless, loyal, artless young creature. Miss May Bartlett's four illustrations of the story include two excellent portraits of the heroine. The story is a compound of "Jane Eyre," with a beautiful heroine and a virtuous Rochester, and the modern plot of the wife who maliciously starts a rumor that she is dead; but Mrs. Boggs gives a new aspect to both plots by keeping Keren's innocence constantly in the foreground. It is a sad comment on the twentieth century American's knowledge of the Old Testament that she spells her name "Keren Happuch," and even writes it Keren H. The sixth daughter of Job has been ill-treated lately. Not long ago her name was given to a magazine hero.

From "Sandpeep" to the extreme sophistication of Mr. Reginald Wright Kauffman's heroine, "Miss Frances Baird, Detective," is a wide interval, for Frances is suspicious to the point of doubting her fellow-detective, and unscrupulous to the point of using every weakness of all whom she encounters to help her accomplish her work. In striving to discover who in the space of a few minutes stole a priceless bridal gift of diamonds and murdered the bridegroom, she suspects both the living and the dead, and is left triumphant over both. Mr. Kauffman does not yet possess the art of conferring moderate ability upon his minor detectives, and gives his heroine all the professional cleverness in the story, but there is quite enough of it to make her a striking figure. This book will come from Messrs. L. C. Page & Co.

⁂

Mr. Nathan Gallizier's historical romance, to be published by the same firm, still lacks a title, but it tells the story of Crescentius, that descendant of Theodora, under whom the Romans twice rose against Otho III. The heroine is Stephania, the wife of Crescentius, suspected of poisoning Otho in revenge for his having treacherously beheaded her husband and eleven of his friends. Mr. Gallizier represents Crescentius as hanged from the ramparts of Sant'Angelo by Otho's General, Ekkardt, whose capture of the fortress is vividly described.

⁂

Mr. Ruel P. Smith's "The Rival Campers," the boys' story published last Winter by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co., is to be made the beginning of a new series bearing its name. The second volume will be "The Rival Campers Afloat." This tale culminates in the recapture of the prize yacht Viking from certain mysterious enemies, the old yacht Surprise being raised and put into fighting trim for this purpose.

⁂

Messrs. John W. Luce & Co. will begin sending the early copies of Mr. Haldane MacFall's "Sir Henry Irving" to the booksellers next week. Histell's portrait, with the haunting eyes, is the frontispiece, and accords best with the enthusiasm of the text, which although formally arranged under three heads, "The Man," "His Career," and "His Art," never far departs from the vein of almost adoring admiration for the actor's untiring, consistently directed energy in improving his talents, and his unfailing, generous kindness to the needy of every species. Of the other portraits, nine in number, the seven by Mr. Gordon-Craig require some sympathy from the observer, for he may find the artist, rather than his subject, in their eccentricities.

⁂

Besides bringing out Mr. Herbert W. Hopkins's "The Mayor of Warwick," Saturday, Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will produce Mr. George W. Alger's "Moral Overstrain," Mr. William B. Weeden's "War Government, Federal and State," and Mr. James M. Hoppin's "The Reading of Shakespeare." Among new editions in preparation is the twelfth of Mr. John Muir's "Our National Parks"; the seventeenth of Miss Eugenia Brooks Frothingham's "The Turn of the Road"; the fourth of Mrs. Mary Austin's "The Land of Little Rain," and the second of Mr. Charles F. Holder's "The Log of a Sea Angler"; of "The Clammer," and of Prof. W. J. Rolfe's "Satchel Guide to Europe." Miss Frothingham's second novel, "The Evasion," is not only selling well in the shops, but is the object of steady pursuit at all the leading libraries.

⁂

Mrs. Alice Prescott Smith, whose "The Legatee" contains so spirited a description of a forest fire, was living in San Francisco when last she addressed her publishers. By the way, on comparing notes with one another, the Boston publishers discover that San Francisco has been an even larger consumer of Boston books than any one had judged from his individual experience, and they had always been conscious that, notwithstanding the comparative youth of the city, her orders were both large and discriminating to a degree far beyond the average.

⁂

Among the novels coming from the Gordon Press this Summer are "The Whitest Man," by Miss Carrie J. Makepeace, a Western story, and "Shadow Land," stories of the South, by Miss Florence H. Robertson. A volume of poetry already proved by the acceptance of magazine editors will appear with the name of Miss Zibella Cocke on the title page. Miss Cocke has recently been an industrious contributor to The Transcript, but she never neglects her art.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

Boston, April 27, 1906.

THE LADY OF THE WELL.

TO weave fiction around a Troubadour seems a little like piling Pelion upon Ossa, so thoroughly do the mere names Troubadour or Trouveur imply the very essence of romance.

However, in "The Lady of the Well" (Longmans, Green & Co.) Eleanor Alexander has put just the proper amount of realism and humor to make a pretty and fairly plausible tale.

Bernart is about to drink from a wayside well when he meets a face reflected there. In true troubadour fashion he plights himself to this face as the Queen of Beauty whom he will serve the rest of his days.

Whereupon the most enchanting of conversations is cut off by a humorously disposed frog, and things are so disarranged that two ladies appear to be struggling together in the well and Bernart feels his own identity matter for doubt.

The next instant the Countess Gemma is giving him certain orders which she bids him obey or else be "so soon forsworn."

He pulls himself together sufficiently to ride on down the hill and into the jaws of a couple of soldiers. The rencontre ends in his being carried captive to the castle, where he must prove before no less a personage than the Emperor Frederick that he is not a traitor but a genuine minstrel.

The test is to be a song, the subject metre and rhyme to be set for him, and at a whisper from the fair Countess Gemma's lame cousin Adelaide, that subject is made "The Lady of the Well."

It is a matter of singing for his life, and Bernart sings to such good effect that he is not only released, but is adopted into the retinue of the Countess.

The adventures which follow hereupon have to do with a little brown Saracen slave girl and a hooded hermit, who proves later to be the famous Pierre Vidal himself.

As the Countess shows more and more distinctly her real pettishness and cruelty, the reader discovers far sooner than the poet-hero who the true lady of the well is, and what must have happened when the frog made his inopportune appearance.

It was the Emperor who said when he was giving the right couple his blessing, "Marriage will be the spoiling of him. He will forget how to sing."

As marriage is usually if not the destruction, at least the ending of most novels, it is high time we took leave of the happy Bernart and his lady Adelaide of the golden tresses.

The House and Garden for May.

The May issue of House and Garden will include articles by W. P. Jervis, on "Pottery Flower Vases"; William C. Hazlett, on "The House and Its Site"; J. M. Haskell, on "The Importance of Cement and Its Products in House Building"; Ernest Hemming, on "Garden Work in May," &c. There are to be many illustrations, including photographic views of estates of Americans and others. The frontispiece will show the terrace and steps of the gardens of the late Empress of Austria.

MAYOR OF WARWICK.

Herbert M. Hopkins's New Novel About the Street Car Conductor and the Bishop's Daughter.

IT is not easy to characterise precisely Herbert M. Hopkins's story "The Mayor of Warwick," (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) The narrative opens with considerable promise of sustained dreariness, but it develops in quite unexpected directions, and introduces some quite unconventional situations and several curious questions of ethics. The style is decidedly ponderous, as may be guessed from the following sentence descriptive of the leading young man—a native of the West, who has come to teach mathematics in a New England college: "Verging upon the sixth lustrum of his age, he had passed through that vernal period when the face of every woman of more than ordinary charm suggested possibilities of the heart's adventure." Yet the book is by no means so bad as such a sentence might indicate, and the author, though he never goes quite lightly, is not always so sesquipedalian. He deals with an odd medley of material; with the architectural aspects and financial aspirations of the small college, with the ecclesiastical temperament, with the politics of the town of Warwick, beneath the college hill, and with the fortunes of a Bishop, a Bishop's daughter, a street car conductor, a servant girl, and the young professor already mentioned. The Bishop's daughter is rich and beautiful, and hard upon 30.

At the time the story opens she is openly, and to the scandal of her respectable family, championing the cause of the street car conductor, who, for his part, is running for Mayor of Warwick, with the labor unions behind him and the elect of the town against him. It is suspected that the Bishop's daughter's interest in the candidate is of a nature somewhat romantic, but exactly what that interest is does not immediately appear. However, the young college professor from the West promptly falls in love with the lady. Then the servant girl appears—the conductor's sweetheart—and takes service with the Bishop's daughter. Also the election comes off and the conductor is triumphantly elected Mayor. Later the President—Mr. Roosevelt himself—visits Warwick and makes a speech with the Mayor by his side. The author has made a good deal of that scene, and managed a striking pen picture of the President. That, however, is quite beside the mark. The new Mayor is a good Mayor, but Mr. Hopkins has involved him in a triangular love affair, which is a heavy handicap. It appears that the Bishop's daughter, weary of ecclesiastical decorum, has secretly married her conductor, and then, hastily repenting, run away from him at the church door, continuing, however, to meet him and to inspire his political ambitions.

It appears also that the conductor has fallen in love with the maidservant, who is pretty and clinging—not dictatorial like the other—and that the Bishop's daughter has found it all out and gone off to Bermuda, leaving both the conductor, who is Mayor, and the young professor, who is deeply in love, in a state anything but happy. The professor has no consolation except a telescope mounted on the principal tower of the college, the Mayor has his office and—the pretty maidservant. Naturally the author's object is so to redeal the cards as to give the Bishop's daughter on her return to the professor—and so he does. He is not, it seems, quite able to perceive the enormous selfishness and folly of his Bishop's daughter—she is beautiful, and he looks at her with lover's eyes. Curiously enough he is equally lenient with the conductor-Mayor, though he denies him common honesty and marks out for him a line of conduct peculiarly indefensible in a reputed strong and able man. In short, the whole development of the narrative is so illogical that one is tempted to think Mr. Hopkins took his plot whole from life. He has, of course, a deal of philosophizing on New England characteristics, on municipal reform, on the clash of class and mass—none of which is very illuminating—and he has some intensely dramatic scenes. There are even touches of satire and moments of insight, but it is best to call it as a whole a pedestrian reflective novel built of melodramatic material.

BETWEEN TWO MASTERS.

SHALL we never be done separating the goats from the sheep in fiction land? Of course, in the present novel of modern life in and around the Hub by Gamaliel Bradford, Jr., "Between Two Masters," (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,) the saints are the people who are trying to make the world over, the sinners those who have not yet felt the call to interfere.

Young Harvey Phelps on leaving college has the choice before him of going into his uncle's firm and becoming heir to multi-millions. He refuses it all because he believes it to be tainted money, and sets out to do good to the masses.

But here the trouble arises. The problem is what line of action will really do good, and in this uncertainty young Harvey is perhaps not so different from every-day live heroes.

Of course, as in life, there are young women in the case, but here we are reminded of a certain old game called stage coach where there was an amazing amount of jumping about and changing places. We seem to be watching a progressive game of affection, for the three most important characters manage to propose to the three wrong women, and had it not been for the fourth woman (the saint of the College Settlement) every one might have got back presto change into his proper niche.

However, the saint scored, and that left the Reverend Marcus and the frivolous Milly in the limbo of unmated souls, concerning which two persons the reader might have suggested—

But to be sure the author had so much on his hands to make Harvey come out on the saintly side of the fence that we could hardly expect him to attend all the loose ends of his several romances. Moreover, it may be we are taking liberties with a would-be serious study.

However, if Mr. Bradford could have shown us a little more logically just how tainted the heritage really was, and just why Diana was a saint for working in the slums and Ethel a sinner for finding life a fair thing when she woke each morning, and breakfast very good to taste, then we say we might have more sympathy with our hero's soul struggles.

But then to be sure we might have had a politico-moral treatise and not an entertaining sentimental novel.

TWO AUSTRALIANS AND A WOMAN

TO read "The Snare of Strength" (Boston: Herbert B. Turner & Co., $1.50,) and lend it to a neighbor is not merely to be obliging. And it is not the end of the volume, as is often the case. The author, Randolph Bedford, has turned out a good story for men, and one which is bound to linger in the mind with a strong physical moral.

The whole story may be summed up in the title and in the following paragraph relating to a barroom scene in a gold camp:

> The bar almost emptied of men. The six stayed a few minutes longer, willing to sleep, but noting the unconsciousness that sleep brings—the nightly waste of an hour of the glory of life—even as sleepy children cling to their toys and weep, begging for but another minute of life.

The two distinctive types in this story of Australian life—social, political, and bush—are Gifford and Abbey. They are both strong men, the former headstrong and lovable to women, the second purpose-strong and retiring from all women—but the one whom both love. Gifford, of course, is the preferred lover by reason of his very temperament, but Abbey, although not the hero, wins. But years probably follow after the last page sees Gifford's death before her love for him becomes a memory.

The story is of minor detail, but, absorbing as it is, and vigorously told, it never leaves the track of "The Snare of Strength." How Gifford rises to political and social heights, only to fall by his very power and by one act of his own reckless and passionate nature, leads naturally to the climax wherein the woman of his heart, who has forsworn him once, forgives him and is ready to break her engagement with the temporarily accepted Abbey. Like Lochinvar, Gifford takes her on his saddle, but only for a short ride in the moonlight. The stallion bolts and races in the glory of its own strength, until it crashes over a rock. Even here, in the shooting of the fiery animal, the theme is not forgotten. And the pity of the strong man's death is bound to leave that theme stated, argued, and settled in the minds of those who are still youthful spendthrifts of force.

> "To think of all the men I've seen go under," said Gifford, lying with his head in her lap, his back broken, and the cool dawn blowing away the stars, "and here I lie at last. There was a lot at Nigger Creek one night; we mulled our grog with a red-hot dray-axle. Billy Matthews was there—he's gone; John Sampson—he's gone; Ned the Prodigal was there—he's gone, and they all loved life so much they used to grumble like babies about missing a little of it."

The pen pictures of Australian society and bush types are acceptable additions to what is in its very being a book "worth while."

IN ALASKA OF OLD.

WARREN CHENEY'S latest production, "The Challenge," (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company,) is original. It is a novel with a new idea, if there is such a thing in the world, and a new field, which is worth while in itself.

On the cover of "The Challenge" is a bell. That bell is the strength of the tale, which is laid in a bit of Alaska where Russians have stations. The author succeeds in drawing a graphic picture of life in one of those desolate spots, and where there is life in such a place it can be safely assumed, that the love interest is charged with the same old passions, but robbed of their civilized dress, and refreshingly close to the primitive fire of humanity.

But about the bell. A priest comes to the station early in the story and brings the prayer-clarion with him. He expects to find his son, who, however, has just been executed because he was a menace to the port. The priest calls it murder and tells the Lieutenant in charge that he will pray for his (the Lieutenant's) soul, which God will soon gather in.

"Every time you hear the bell, which I am going presently to swing," he says in effect, "you will know I am praying."

It must be cheerful for an apparently healthy man living in a desolate port on the Russian Alaska shore, to hear a bell announce three times a day that his soul is being prayed for. A doctor would say that Mikhail Etolin died of apoplexy; the reader may form his own conclusions. It is an uncanny thing, to say the least, lacking the courage to confess superstition.

The death scene permits the introduction of some of these curious rites which have survived the darkest days of dark Russian beliefs—such as the casting of melted wax to ascertain what shape of thing is pursuing the dying man. The wax hardens in the shape of a bell, but the demoniacal priest assures the dying man that Heaven is just reminding him of his sin.

Ivan Egor, the Lieutenant's aide, is the hero of the story. His strong character is well drawn, as is that of Motrya Petrovna, the girl he loves and who is the younger sister of the girl he once loved. From which it may be judged that there are no poetic twistings of human affection in this book. It abounds with simple truths, and the desolate atmosphere surrounding the port in which the reader must live for the time forces one to see and acknowledge these truths.

IN THE NORTH WOODS.

AN old Spanish luck piece would not create much excitement in New York City, but in the mountains of the Adirondacks things happen differently, and, to be sure, it is pleasant to think there are some places left where a talisman can work like a true Aladdin's lamp and turn the world into an enchanted land.

When in the second chapter of our story "The Lucky Piece," by Albert Bigelow Paine, (New York: Outing Publishing Company,) we are introduced to Constance and to young Frank Weatherby, rich, idle, and with apparently no ambition but to marry the said Constance, we wonder what all this can have to do with the simple little happening of the first chapter, the actors in which were a nameless handsome boy in a mountain stage, a lonely mountain girl with a basket of berries for sale, and the lucky piece.

It takes two or three hundred pages to discover it, and there is another girl, Edith Morrison, and another man, Robin Farnham, to become entangled in the matter. There is also an old hermit named Robin Gray whom Frank and Constance stumble upon by accident when they are lost in a fog on the mountain side.

About him they learn a romance that takes deep hold on both of them. For the past dozen years this strange man has lived alone save for his books and an occasional visit from the young Robin Farnham, who also had come upon him accidentally when hunting in the woods. And yet this strange way of living is not the most romantic fact about the hermit.

The strangest part of it is its relation to Constance and the young Farnham, not to mention the effect his narrative has on Frank. That effect is to revive all the old ambitions that seemed to have died out after his leaving college.

It is after Frank more than fulfills Constance's renewed belief in him that she tells him the story of the lucky piece.

The telling brings up an old, long-forgotten memory in his mind, but that the reader can only fully appreciate after he has read the last as well as the first and intervening chapters of this woodland love story.

POEMS ON MUSIC.

THE poets have always had much to say about music, which they esteem as an art nearly cognate with their own. They have spoken in various tones about it, and with various degrees of intelligence. The compiler of this little volume has had the idea of extracting from the literature of poetry some of the more striking poems and poetic passages that relate to music, and collecting them in a little anthology. She has done it with intelligence and good taste, though perhaps with considerable indulgence toward the little people of recent days, whose measures are sometimes incongruously consorted with those of bigger men.

For there is a rather surprising abundance of material for this purpose in the great poets' works. Every student of Shakespeare knows how full his works are of allusions to music; from him, however, there are not many extended passages taken. Herrick, Richard Edwards, Dryden, Milton, Congreve, Pope, Collins, Leigh Hunt, Landor, Shelley, Coleridge, Tennyson, the Brownings—and Robert Browning recurred to music with special frequency in his poems, though only his "Abt Vogler" is given in this collection—Longfellow, Lowell, all furnish verses for the collection; and there are many more from contemporary writers. They are, of course, of greatly differing value as poetry; but the compiler has generally succeeded in avoiding the merely commonplace or distinctly bad, and the anthology is pleasing.

"A Tale of Two Cities."

Dickens's "A Tale of Two Cities" has been added by the Macmillan Company to the Pocket Classics and furnished with an introduction and notes by Huber Gray Buehler and Lawrence Mason, head master and master in English, respectively, in the Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Conn.

Life Insurance.

Following up its special insurance number, The World's Work has inaugurated a Life Insurance Service Department for its readers, in which will be answered queries for information about the proper kind of life insurance for any person of any age and income.

Elementary Logic.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out "An Elementary Logic," by Prof. John Edward Russell of Williams College. The book aims to help students to gain a comprehension of the essential principles of correct thinking and to assist teachers who find a text book useful.

The New York Times
SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS

LITERARY SECTION OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, APRIL 28, 1906.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

PROF. JOHN SPENCER BASSETT contributes to the current number of The South Atlantic Quarterly, a periodical which steadily maintains its high literary quality, an estimate of the personality and influence of James Anthony Froude, which is worthy of the attention of all students of history, especially the younger ones. Froude is readable, and will, therefore, be read; moreover, there is much to be gained by reading his brilliant historical books. One gets a point of view from them, and the intelligent reader of history, in this epoch so rich in facilities for reading and study, should be able to comprehend the point of view as he reads, and to judge of its reasonableness. The present outcry against Froude will surely be followed by a revulsion of feeling in his favor. His history is not always misleading; his point of view is sometimes the best, and his eloquence and descriptive skill rarely fail him. Prof. Bassett points out that Froude's lack of balance and self-restraint was largely due to his early associations and education. He missed the severe training such a mind as his needed in "accuracy of thought." To the end he was not a man of well-balanced judgment. But he had the imagination and the literary training which enabled him to portray a splendid epoch splendidly.

HERBERT HOPKINS'S new novel, "The Mayor of Warwick," which is reviewed in this number of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, recalls, by contrast, a short story that caused discussion nearly thirty years ago—"Rosamund and the Conductor," by Katherine Carrington, published in The Atlantic in 1879. In the new book the hero is a conductor, elected Mayor of his city by the labor vote. The Bishop's daughter, temporarily Socialistically inclined, marries the Mayor, though she never lives with him, and in time gets rid of him to marry the local professor. In the short story of over a quarter century ago the acquaintance between Rosamund and the conductor was viewed askance by the readers of The Atlantic. The lines of society were drawn very tightly then; to-day they are no less tightly drawn in theory, but more persons than ever before manage to pass them. There are fifty Laborites in the British Parliament, and one of them is in the Cabinet; there have been labor men in power in this most conservative of Republics. The two stories, one of the seventies, the other of to-day, show how the world has changed. The story of the marriage of the Bishop's daughter and the conductor recalls its reverse—that of the millionaire and the cigar girl of last year, and neither of those causes to-day so much discussion as the mere acquaintance of the country girl Rosamund and the conductor nearly thirty years ago.

FOR centuries Cato the Censor has been held up as an example because he began to study Greek when he was eighty years old. Since his time various persons of ripe age have given up former occupations and taken new ones, in which they have gained repute: Dr. William A. Hammond, who, after being Surgeon General of the Army and a distinguished physician, made a new name as a novelist; Dr. Weir Mitchell, who followed his lead, and is better known among the readers of to-day as the author of "Hugh Wynne" and "Constance Trescott" than as the inventor of the rest cure; Capt. Mahan, who left the navy to write books about sea power. None of these men was so young as the average man who changes his occupation. Now Mr. Louis P. Gratacap, who is not so young as he was fifty years ago, joins the short procession that began with Cato. He is assistant curator of the American Museum of Natural History, and has been engaged for thirty years in geological and mineralogical investigations, and has written on religious and scientific subjects. His latest book is "The World as Intention," a scientific and religious book; but his next one is to be a novel, "A Woman of the Ice Age," which Brentano's will publish shortly. His predecessors have done so well that his success may be anticipated.

LEON FRAPIE, one of the younger French novelists of the present hour, has something of the inventiveness of Guy de Maupassant and something of that master's outlook on life, though Frapié's works lack exquisite finish, and it is said of him that since the great stir he made two years ago with "La Maternelle" he has written too much. Frapié chooses his subjects as George Gissing chose his, or those he treated best, from lower middle-class life. Board School teachers, small Government clerks and the like, are his favorite personages. "La Ténacité du Bonheur" is the title of a new volume of such social studies Frapié has lately published in Paris, and the story which gives the book its title is an excellent example of his quality. It reminds one of Maupassant's tale of the diamond necklace. Mme. Cadenas is an aged talloress, plain of feature, shapeless as an oyster. She works hard, and has but one holiday a month, when she dons her freshly done-up cap, with violet ribbons, and goes cheerfully in the omnibus to the Direction des Sanatoriums, to inquire about her dead husband's niece, Mlle. Charme, an invalid in the hospital at Pau, and to leave for her the two francs she so laboriously saves each month. For fifteen years Mme. Cadenas has this one day of happiness each month, and then she learns by accident that the Mlle. Charme to whom she has been sending her little savings is "Charme, Alice, née à Bordeaux," and not the real niece, "Charme, Jeanne, née à Paris." The last-named lady, in fact, quite unconscious of the existence of her uncle's wife, has long been leading a gay and prosperous life at Neuilly. After a period of great unhappiness, with no one to care for, with no concierge to chat with, Mme. Cadenas returns to the Direction des Sanatoriums with her monthly two francs for the unknown Alice, born in Bordeaux, and bed-ridden for life at Pau.

IN John Lane's edition of the novels of Anthony Trollope (belonging to the New Pocket Library Series) we have in two handy little volumes, excellently printed, and with a sensible introduction by Algar Thorold, "The Small House at Allington." In the edition of Dodd, Mead & Co. we have just received the two volumes containing the second of the Manor House novels, "The Vicar of Bullhampton." This is a rather more elaborate edition than Mr. Lane's, with attractive pictures by Walter Everett as frontispieces, and a better quality of paper. No one can wonder at the continued popularity of Trollope who picks up either of these novels, which are among his best. The humor and pathos of human life are set forth in both, with all the modesty of nature. They are true portrayals of a country and an epoch, and they retain their vitality because of their verity. They show the fleeting fashions and manners of a particular age, but they have in themselves no oddities of manner, no ephemeral peculiarities to cause them to grow old and out of fashion.

A FORTHCOMING book that will doubtless be read as widely here as in England is Edith Sichel's "Life and Letters of Alfred Ainger," Canon of Bristol Cathedral, and Master of the Temple. As a biographer of Charles Lamb, editor of Lamb's work, and an agreeable gossip of Eliana, Canon Ainger was well known in the United States by many others than the little host of traveling Americans who have felt it their duty, when in London, to hear him preach in the historic Temple Church at least one Sunday morning. Besides his writings relating to Lamb, St. Elia of the Temple, Canon Ainger published little, but his life was active and richly varied, he knew many of the eminent men and women of his time, he was a chaplain of the King, and a man of the world in the best sense. Lamb has been read in this country from the very beginning of Elia's career, and Ainger's views of Lamb are familiar to nearly all the gentle essayist's American readers. Ainger was a capital letter writer, and he had the letter-writing habit.

A REALLY important theatrical work, soon forthcoming, is H. S. Wyndham's "Covent Garden Theatre, 1732-1897." Covent Garden Theatre still exists, but only as the opera house of London, and it cannot be long now before it is superseded, for the annual season of grand opera, by a new structure more eligibly situated. The opera house of London should face the Green Park on the slope of Piccadilly, or ornament the circle at Hyde Park Corner. As the second of the patent theatres in London, as long as the patents which served, measurably, as a Government endowment, lasted, Covent Garden often occupied first place in the public esteem. Not infrequently the actors and the "entertainments" were accounted superior to those at Drury Lane. It was the outgrowth of the Duke's playhouse of early Restoration days, the rival of the King's. John Rich was its first manager, he who in a period of desperation produced Gay's audacious "Beggar's Opera," which "made Gay rich and Rich gay." All the famous actors of the halcyon age appeared there, Barton Booth, Spranger Barry, Garrick, the Kembles, Kean, Munden, Cooke. Macready was manager (with the highest artistic aims and a sad deficit at the end,) for two years. Charles Mathews and his first wife, Mme. Vestris, managed the theatre for a brief term, and produced "London Assurance." The history of Covent Garden will be a rich chapter in the history of the English stage, recounting the rise and development of the Christmas pantomime, the revival of Shakespeare, the best efforts of a host of famous players, the institution of accurate stage pictures, historical costuming, and "archaeological accuracy."

WHAT is the most learned book in the English language? Has any one, except a writer in a recent number of The London Academy, ever decided that point to his own satisfaction? For that matter, one may as well ask what is learning? Not, surely, a mere accumulation of facts and opinions. Bacon, Ben Jonson, Landor, Thomas Love Peacock, Macaulay and Bishop Stubbs, were all men of great learning who wrote books, not to mention Hume, Huxley, Darwin, Tyndall, and Spencer. The learning displayed in Peacock's novels is prodigious. But the writer in The Academy clearly is thinking only of the great, everlasting works of English literature, books that are incontestably books of the best sort, in Charles Lamb's category of books. He fancies that "Paradise Lost" is "probably" the most learned work in the English language, except Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy," and he explains his idea so clearly that nobody may miss his exact meaning:

> One thing that Milton resolved to do so early as 1640-42, when he was laying plans for a great poem, was to increase his learning for the purpose. And of that learning it has often been complained that we find too much in "Paradise Lost." Milton wants a simile: he finds not one, but a hundred; he gets started, so to speak, and continues references, allusions, instances for a whole page, many of which none but a man as learned as himself could elucidate in footnotes.

CHARLES LEVER, the Irish novelist, is not idealized, by any means, in Edmund Downey's new biographical work, "Charles Lever: His Life in His Letters," just published by the Blackwoods in London. The book is said by the English reviewers to be full of life and humor, and Lever is exhibited as he was, his own Harry Lorrequer, open-hearted, open-handed, magnificent, roystering, frequently impecunious. He had his black moods, of course, when he condemned his own conduct, and harshly criticised his own writings, but these did not last long. His letters are most agreeable reading, and they are full of good anecdotes.

ONE of the London newspapers informs us that "the one-hundredth anniversary of Emerson's birth is to be celebrated impressively in the United States May 25." The statement is made with such assurance that it almost takes away one's breath. One cannot always remember all things, and it takes a little time to recall the Emerson festivals of three years ago. As a matter of fact, May 25 this year is the 103d anniversary of Emerson's birth, and the 100th anniversary was celebrated, impressively enough, May 25, 1903.

HERBERT SPENCER'S daily life is pictured intimately in a new book called "Home Life With Herbert Spencer," by "Two," which is published in England by Arrowsmith. The authors are two ladies, sisters, who kept house for Spencer for eight years at 64 Avenue Road, Regent's Park, London. They play Boswell excellently in their harmless and by no means superfluous book, which exhibits the great philosopher as a humane, genial man, with little weaknesses and large virtues, and a keen sense of humor.

The Slave Trade.

The results of the recent investigations by Henry W. Nevinson into the conditions of the slave trade in Africa will be published in book form by the Harpers about the middle of May. The title is "A Modern Slavery," and most of the material has already appeared in Harper's Magazine and in Harper's Weekly. Mr. Nevinson, who is a special correspondent of The London Daily Chronicle, was sent into Portuguese Africa in 1904 and he found the negro there quite frankly in bondage. "In his progress into the interior it was no uncommon thing to meet with the caravans children who had been stolen by the traders from their parents. Women, too, some of them with babies strapped to their backs, were driven along with whips by brutal overseers. Arrived at the marts, these poor creatures are sold at low rates to plantation owners in the Islands of San Thomé and Principe." In Harper's Weekly for the current week, there is much interesting matter dealing especially with the habit among the blacks of selling their wives and children. The price of a native woman is placed at forty yards of cloth and a pig.

FIVE NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

IT is rather interesting to open a volume of "Songs of America" and find within a certain attention paid to the America that was before the end of the fifteenth century. Miss Proctor is always most inspiring when she is interpreting the thoughts of the American Indian by the symbolism of his own legends, and her "Song of the Ancient People," which is included in the present collection of her verse, is particularly full of folk lore. The notes of explanation were made by the late John Fiske and are as good reading as the verse itself. The Pueblo Indian of the poem can

> And wile the wolf from his den,

which is meant to signify that he utters the peculiar sound made by the female wild turkey to call the wolf, and that he gives half-imitative, half-musical cries to allure birds and beasts to within shooting distance, and then holds his victims motionless by flashing light into their eyes from prisms of rock crystal, a method of hunting less noble than ingenious. It is also interesting, from the collector's standpoint, to learn that when the Ancient People deck their blankets and jars with "crosses, terraces, slanting bars;" they symbolize by the red cross, the morning star; by the white cross, the evening star; by the terraced pyramid, the clouds; by slanting bars, the rain. One extremely pretty bit of symbolism is connected with the prayer stick, or prayer plume, which may be deposited wherever the Indian is in a mood to address himself to the higher powers. The sticks are painted in colors, each of which has an especial significance, and the feathers attached to the stick are the symbol of human thought which carries the prayer to heaven. Miss Proctor's familiarity with the red man has not been of a kind to breed contempt. Her poem, "Citizenship for the Red Man," is a plea, more fervent than musical, that the names of "ward" and "alien" shall be exchanged for the higher title "citizen."

> And Sioux, Apache, and Cheyenne > Merge proudly in American.

In "Ad Matrem" the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant expresses the modern feeling toward the Christian religion that it is the teaching of a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief. The early exaltation and calm have largely passed out of it to make room for the later conception of it as a creed of suffering and pity. Mr. Grant writes with sensitiveness to the suggestions of Greek mythology, as the opening lines of his title poem indicate:

> O Christ, you left not even Cynthia.
> The stars are empty now,
> Their gods and goddesses are gone.
> In leafy glade, on shadowy hillside, are
> No longer nymphs at play.
> Thy sorrow-saddened brow,
> The tree you died upon,
> Frightened those happy ones away.
>
> * * * * * * *
>

His answer to the question is in the final stanza of the poem, which is so purely poetic in conception as to make the reader wish it had been written with a more exacting sense of poetic form.

⁂

THE poems of Trumbull Stickney, edited by Mr. George Cabot Lodge, Mr. William Vaughn Moody, and Mr. John Ellerton Lodge, are open to no charge of carelessness in form, the author's natural tendency and severe training in Paris, (where he earned from the university its highest degree, that of the Doctorat ès Lettres,) having led him toward the most sensitive rhythms, the most delicate choice of words, and the passionate workmanship of the artist to whom the thing done and not the intention is the mighty matter. As he died at the age of 30, the thing done in his case was wonderful, and we owe to the excellent judgment of his editors, no doubt, that nothing commonplace or unworthy has crept into this posthumous book of his verse. So many notes of poignant music are struck that to choose one by which to represent the whole is singularly ungracious; yet these stanzas entitled "Pity" are not wholly amiss to quote, since they show the same curious blending of the painter's vision with the reflective mind shown long ago by Rossetti in his much-discussed, much-reviled poem "Jenny," with a difference so personal as to give to a comparison of the two poems a special and rewarding interest. In Mr. Stickney's lines dwell all the delicacy and reticence of the New England mood, with the lovely color and flowing line of the early Italian picture makers, like whom Rossetti fain would have been and like whom he never was.

> An old light smolders in her eye.
> There! she looks up. They grow and glow
> Like mad laughs of a rhapsody
> That flickers out in woe.
>
> An old charm slips into her sighs,
> An old grace sings about her hand.
> She bends: it's musically wise.
> I cannot understand.
>
> Her voice is strident; but a spell
> Of fluted whisper silkens in—
> The lost heart in a moss-grown bell,
> Faded—but sweet—but thin.
>
> She bows like waves—waves near the shore.
> Her hair is in a vulgar knot—
> Lovely dark hair, whose curves deplore
> Something she's well forgot.
>
> She must have known the sun, the moon,
> On heaven's warm throat star-jewels strung—
> It's late. The gaslights flicker on.
> Young, only in years, but young!
>
> One might remind her, say the street
> Is dark and vile now day is done.
> But would she care, she fear to meet—
> But there she goes—is gone.

To have produced even one thing so enchanting in form as this, so subtle and quiet, yet so flowing and rich, is to have won fairly and completely the great names—so lightly worn—of artist and poet.

CARDUCCI'S odes translated with a frank neglect of the special character of the versification are not, of course, to be considered with reference to their form. The translator gives an interesting account in his preface of Carducci's life. The poet passed his first fourteen years in the sombre atmosphere of the Tuscan fens, then went to school in Florence during the four years following the insurrectionary war of 1848. As a youth he was "impetuous, bitterly impatient of shams of any kind, with a devouring passion for books, an ardent worship of the great classic writers, and of those modern authors who dreamed a new life for Italy." The new life for Italy has been attained during his lifetime, and his verse commemorates the successive steps toward freedom and flings a spirited challenge to the petty political intriguers who have more or less marred the beauty of the victory. "Carducci's genius," his translator says, "has an extraordinarily wide range; it is satirical, patriotic, classical, but its most characteristic and subtle quality is its impressionism—its power of creating atmosphere through the medium of words. This quality is apparent to a greater or less degree in all our poet's work, but chiefly so in such descriptive poems as those which are here selected. 'Miramar,' 'Rome,' 'Before the Old Castle of Verona,' are not specific word-pictures, but rather poetic evocations of the significance latent in castle, campagna, and river. And because it seems to me that this interpretative faculty, this power to present the 'living soul' of things is a peculiarly precious literary attribute, I have taken for translation poems that offered striking examples of its presence without regard to the fact that they nearly all belong to one type." The poems thus chosen give almost no opportunity for quotation, but the final stanza of the poem to the Adige River ("Before the Old Castle of Verona") will serve to give the poet's grave accent and the method of the translator. Reviewing the scenes through which the river has sung its way he ends:

> I, too, fair river, sing, and this my song
> Would put the centuries into little verse;
> And palpitating to each thought, my heart
> Follows the stanza's upward quivering flight.
> But with the years, my verse will dull and fade;
> Thou, Adige, the eternal poet art,
> Who still—when of these hills the turret crown
> Is shattered into fragments, and the snake
> Sits hissing in the sunlight where now stands
> The great basilica, St. Zeno's fane—
> Still in the desert solitudes wilt voice
> The sleepless tedium of the infinite.

The collected poems of Mr. Wilfrid Campbell are not so large and vigorous in feeling as the odes of the Italian patriot or so haunting and learned as those of the student solicited by the more austere aspects of poetry, but they have a pleasant ease and a very true and sensitive feeling for nature. Of this the lines called "In the Spring Fields" are a characteristic example:

> There dwells a spirit in the budding year—
> As motherhood doth beautify the face—
> That even lends these barren glebes a grace,
> And fills gray hours with beauty that were drear
> And bleak when the loud storming March was here:
> A glamour that the thrilled heart dimly traces
> In swelling boughs and soft, wet, windy spaces,
> And sunlands where the chattering birds make cheer.
>
> I thread the uplands where the wind's footfalls
> Stir leaves in gusty hollows, Autumn's urns.
> Seaward the river's shining breast expands.
> High in the windy pines a lone crow calls,
> And far below some patient plowman turns
> His great black furrow over steaming lands.

THE VOGUE OF BACH.

THE new Bach Society was founded when the old Bach Society in Germany completed its task of publishing its monumental edition of Bach's works complete. Its objects are to forward the understanding and appreciation of those works by performances of them, and to study the master's music and the facts of his life and activity in various ways. This Year Book, the second, is a contribution to the biography of Bach, and justifies its existence by the publication of some important matters for the first time. Rudolf Bunge of Cöthen has succeeded in unearthing a mass of facts about Bach's work when he was kapellmeister to the musical young Prince Leopold of Cöthen-Anhalt, that Spitta, the great Bach biographer, sought and could not find. These relate to the orchestra that Bach conducted and for which he composed music. Many interesting details are given about the organization of this band and the players in it, with official documents, letters, orders, &c., concerning its management.

Bernhard Friedrich Richter contributes an article giving the details about Bach's election to the post of cantor by the Municipal Council of Leipzig; his competitors, the trials they had to go through, and the narrow escapes the great master had from being beaten by men of more note at the time but now pretty well forgotten. Dr. Fritz Volbach has a study on the cantata "Ein Feste Burg ist unser Gott." The volume is closed with a catalogue of all the literature published concerning Bach and his works that purports to include not only all books, but magazine and even journalistic articles as well. Entire completeness is almost excluded by the very terms of the undertaking; but the list is of great value to all who have occasion to study Bach in general or any special side of that many sided genius and his work in particular.

THE EARLY LIFE OF

By her great-great-Niece, EMILY J. CLIMENSON
With 16 Portraits in Photogravure and other Illustrations. 2 vols, 8vo, $8 net.

Mrs. Montagu was one of the most distinguished ladies of literary and social life in London during the latter half of the 18th Century. She has been called the Mme. Du Deffand of London Society, and at her house in Portman Square used to assemble the most illustrious persons in rank and in ability under the reign of George II. and George III. Among her friends, correspondents, companions and admirers were all male or female, English or foreign, who were distinguished for attainments or talents.

Four volumes of letters to and from her were published by her nephew and executor, Matthew Montagu, between 1731-61, but fortunately her correspondence has been most carefully collected and preserved, and this work will consist of materials from that great store which have not hitherto been made public.

Two critics of the highest standing said last week of
by G. B. Lancaster:

"The story is one that gets the reader firmly by the human part of him and plays upon his emotions and his sympathies."—New York Times Saturday Review.

"A story that lives and throbs like the hot New Zealand air that backs it, like the fervid, tortured soul of whose real-seeming agony it is shaped and built."—Chicago Record-Herald.

THE INTERNATIONAL COOK BOOK

Alexander Filippini, author of "The Table," has written what might be called "The Cook Book For the World." So carefully has this book been prepared it may be properly regarded as the final work on this subject. A chef of many years' experience at Delmonico's, Mr. Filippini in 1898 made a tour of the world, and aided by letters from Secretary of State John Hay, secured entrance to the greatest kitchens on three continents, with the result that he has been able to select over 3,300 recipes which he has adapted to the American taste and arranged in diary form, and so carried out that the book is of the greatest value in even the average household. $4.80 (Postage 48c.)

POETRY.

The Poet Is a Jeweler Hammering the Gold of Life Into Ornaments for Mental Wear.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I AM prompted into the discussion of poetry by the headline "Still Seeking a Definition of Poetry," which aptly appears in a recent issue over several interesting but indefinite letters. To everything of transcendent or extraordinary worth there is an interrogation point. Every mundane intellect is a quest. Even poetry, the lullaby of the universe, is subject to the intrusion of the eternal what?

In the common experience of mankind there is in every breast of us a mysterious yearning for something which seems to our blinded vision afar off, yet near and within us; something which no man has yet defined, but which every man secretly knows is simple and clear as the light of day, but because of this very simplicity baffling and elusive. This yearning forever haunts us. It is the whip and spur of our ambitions. It urges us forever onward; feeds us with power; impels us into diverse actions. It is with us in the cradle; it hovers in our sad spirit on the brink of the grave. It clothes men with glory the nearer their lives come to its fulfillment. To-day, filled with the glorious energy of a temporary euchymy and spiritual ecstasy, we cry, Eureka! write poetry, or irradiate splendors of character, which to-morrow, under some inherent stupidity, vanish and leave us sadly, reflectively, with the yearning. This wonderful, indefinable yearning of the human soul is the mother of all actions, good and great actions being its positive, evil and base actions its negative result. It is strongest in the man we are pleased to call poet, making him, as our old friend Teufelsdröckh would say, "no longer a chaos, but a world," and impelling him to such action that the utmost he has in him comes out. This utmost, subject to individual finitenesses and diversities of talent, comes from some limpid and sweet as spring water; from some heavy, solemn, and majestic as a river; from some swollen, sluggish, and obscure; from some involved and subtle. The product is, however, always the man transmuted.

The poet is he who fashions his rude individual self into an immortal picture of beauty. He acquires skill by patient hammering and cutting the workshop of life. He is a jeweler, hammering the gold of life into ornaments of exquisite design for the mental wear and adornment of posterity. He is the lapidary who cuts and polishes the rough pebbles picked from the shores and dug from the mines of life into priceless gems. He shows us the beauty that is latent in us. He stands for man. He burnishes the world. He exalts life. He paints our worth in glowing colors.

From out the circumambient darkness and mystery of life the past gazes upon the ineffable external beauty and goodness. He is man transfigured. The wonderful irradiance in the eyes of poetic genius is the reflection of this vision. He cannot measure the sidereal sweep of his beholding soul. He never perfectly expresses. He resorts to forms, which, circumscribed and stilted, fail to give an adequate picture. But the multitudes groping in the darkness, themselves having occasional glimpses of beauty, are pleased, soothed, gratified. Sound still guides. We hearken to a voice that calls us out of the rut. As philosophers are the schoolmasters of humanity, poets are its pilots. Understanding is the philosopher's mentor, quest his calling. He is the ultimate discoverer, must know the reason, and moves slowly over the sea; but the poet leads us out of the chaos and into the light with the aid of that mysterious thing we are pleased to call intuition. He utters everlasting truths without knowing it, in a form that pleases; and he is the beloved of men because he remains as one of them. He is the jet of humanity from which perpetually flows its mead. He reads the open book of life and nature. He feels the pain and the travail of the world. He is not soured or embittered thereby. He is joyous, ascensive. Hope is his paradise; harmony his guide; sympathy his motivity. His brain, mysteriously registering the feelings of humanity, seems a multiplex instrument of ethereal communication. He is the world's psychographist. His song is the blazed trail of the individual struggle for freedom, for unfettered self-government.

Is there a real poet in the world to-day? Parnassus is thronged with ambitious singers. They live in dream grottos on its slope, laboriously weaving dreamwebs for unwary human flies cloud fed to satisfy, and pitifully self-complacent, alas! they paint their pictures on a canvas of air and write their words upon water, so far as the yearning, sensing world is concerned. The heights are giddy. Fugacious forms of fantasy and golden smoke delude the raptured eye. He who would enchant must know disenchantment. He must have descended into the depths, known joy, thrided the labyrinth of tears, and drank deeply of the tangy springs of life that bubble at the base of Parnassus. Beauty is seen from the centre of life; elsewhere the vision is lost. The world that feels, fearfully feels but cannot express, will not abide the spurious, and spurious indeed is the hodiernal mass of stuff that passes for poetry. Only the dilettante seems to derive pleasure from the glut. Maybe he finds an occasional nugget, which justifies his faith and rewards his diligence.

Poetry is the geography of the human heart. It is action glorified. It is the jubilation of young life. It is the song of things that have been done or are yet to be done. It is a vision of the life that is, or a prevision of the life that is yet to be. The lilts of universal song that sound so sweetly and melodiously upon the lutes of time are winged transmutations of multitudinous experiences; some of heroic deeds, stout feats of arms, self-abnegations, martyrdoms; some of ecstasies and anguishes of love; some of mirth, gayeties, revelries, sorrows, sufferings, afflictions; or, far nobler, more enduring, humanitizing, they are lowly and humble aspirations touched with fire.

How are we to know poetry? It must please the intellect and the heart of us; its matter primary, its form secondary. Its distinguishing characteristic, yea, its very essence, is truth, which, in every written or spoken word is the fruit of spontaneous and harmonious ideation. The penalty of form is that the poet has to make concessions to established standards, or trust to time to vindicate him if he dares an innovation. But truth blazes a path of its own, establishes a new form, and, lo! a work of beauty, lucidity, and strength, gushing from the poet in live and vibrant lines of rhythmic flow. The veil is rent; we behold the glory of the world. Nature has voice in this work. We hear the rain, the storm. We see the lightning; the crash of the thunder falls deafening on the ear. We hear the sough of the wind as it strikes the innumerable, intricate frets of the forest. The birds sing, the bees hum, the horses whinny, the kine low, the sheep bleat in this wizardy of words, as they did when we were children, and our souls were rapt with the joy of the bucolic euphonies. We see the world anew. We see ourselves, too, the good that is in us triumphing over the bad. Onward goes the song, we with it, rippling softly and sweetly in the valleys of desire; leaping torrential from the mountain peaks of indignation against the wrongs of man; disporting with the fairies of delight in nooks and groves illumed with riant joy, curveting upon flaming steeds, whose hoofs strike golden sparks from rock-ribbed error and ignite the world. No marvel the world loves a poet!

The aching world awaits a song that lives and moves. Its cry is for a healing word. It has grown tired of anodynes of cryptic chemistry, musings compounded into subtle words that lull the soul to sleep, but never heal. It wants canticles of rapturous euphony, translucent harmonies, sincere and simple song distilled of human woes, suffering, sorrows, pains, joys, laughter, tears, toils, love, hate in the alembic of the innate, mysterious sympathies.

The world wants a true poet. It needs a pure stream of song, if it were but to rid it of torpor for a single day.

The tender moon o'er Ottaray swings high
Perplexed of eye, with weary sigh,
He goeth to and fro.

"A rule of thumb! A rule of thumb!
A rule to make all clear!
Music and Time, and Rhythm and Rhyme,
Poetical atmosphere!

"Pebbles from Pearls! Pebbles from Pearls! How shall the backwoods

Lacking the rule, many a fool
Reaps Fame he does not sow!

"A rule of thumb! A rule of thumb! I'll

A pretty pass that 'Leaves of Grass'

The rising sun o'er Ottaray flings wide his crimson glow.

He, still, goes to and fro. JAX.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Since we can produce no more poetry, isn't it rather silly to be perplexing our breakfast-food brains about the technicalities of the art? Of all the arts, poetry to my mind is the one that should be the most untrammeled, the most free from "rule, precept, and example," free as its own beauteous, ethereal spirit. It is all a mistake, this idea that poetry must be laid out on certain mechanical lines, for the letter "killeth" in poetry as well as pietics. As I have previously contended, our poetry has all been written, but one of the reasons why the verse turned out by our coterie of 5 o'clock tea poetasters is not a trifle less inane than it is, is because they're all slaves to "form," to "rules," to precedents, to certain metres and standards, and what little merit their piping commonplaces might otherwise have is snuffed out by the devil of convention. The "poet" must first be free, and next he may be great.

Some one wants to know "what distinguishes poetry from prose." This query shows how the old literary superstition as to some mysterious difference of character between prose and poetry still flourishes. The distinction between poetry and prose is like the famous "rind" on the watermelon—"there ain't no distinction." No more than between one part of the body and the other, between light and heat, morning and high noon. Prose bears the same relation to poetry that walking does to dancing. You can put a more or less limited amount of grace, of beauty into gait, and no more—prose; into waltzing you can put limitless grace and beauty—poetry. We have plenty of poetical prose, plenty of prosy poetry—in fact mainly the latter at present. But prose has certain physical and visual restrictions for the true poet. Poetry has none. So that the true poet will never willingly adopt the inferior medium; he will adopt the form which serves best the lyric, rhythmic spirit. It is a question only of degree. I am sure these will admit this who have their Bible and their Bunyan by heart, who have joyed in the wonderful tracts of Milton and the equally wonderful letters and diaries of Coleridge.

The whole trouble is we have got to thinking that "form" is everything, whereas its importance is small. If the poet has substance style will take care of itself. Substance first, style next, for style without substance is dead. Only the very greatest geniuses can contrive style without danger. This was the truth Whitman fought for, Whitman who climbed higher on the Parnassus acclivity than any other American. His soul lived and was fed in the inner sanctuary of poetry. With prophetic insight, itself the truest rhythm, he saw that the message was all which mattered. He left style to the dull dilettantes who carp at greatness they little understand, and to the kimonoed bluestockings who fill the corners of the magazines with their jingling sentimentalities.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

THE TIMES'S (New York and London) reviewer of M. F. Barbey's book, "A Friend of Marie Antoinette (Lady Atkyns)" says that "the probability is that the Committee of the Republic secretly put an end to the son of Louis XVI.; the possibility remains that he was allowed to go free," &c. But Jules Ferry, the advocate for the Naundorf claim that a German tailor was the Bourbon's "removed" heir, has said, precisely as a jurisconsult of his calibre should do, that on his becoming a member of the French Revolutionary Government he exercised his privilege as such to examine archives previously forbidden him. He found documents establishing that he was advancing the claims of the true Prince. Unfortunately for the latter, and history, the law compels such high officials to swear solemnly not to use for other than home State purposes papers thus seen. H. L. WILLIAMS.

Shall and Will.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

That so sturdy an American as the President should be a little hazy about his shalls and wills is perhaps not to be wondered at, for the universality of the misuse of these auxiliaries on this continent is as striking to the Englishman as is the Cockney misapplication of the "h" to the American. But I should think that in his admirably tasteful letter to Earl Grey accepting the Franklin portrait the President has exceeded his average. You will see by the clipping inclosed that in the short space of two inches he uses the word "shall" four times—three of them are wrong.

It is a very strange thing, this persistent misuse of shall and will. It pervades not only the spoken, but the written, speech of the United States and Canada—in this Province of Ontario it is, I should say, even more prevalent than over the border. I know many natives of Scotland and Ireland who never lose an opportunity of misusing the words. I see instances of the misuse in almost every American or Canadian newspaper which I pick up.

Can nothing be done in the schools to put American youth straight in this respect? It would be a more worthy task to uproot this weed from our literary pastures than to spend money in hurrying the reform of our spelling. But to Mr. Carnegie it would be useless to appeal, for, being Scotch as well as American, he is probably the chief of sinners in this respect.

Is the conjoint wisdom of THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS readers equal to grappling with this evil? Suppose we start an association, the members of which will hand a card containing an intelligible rule for the use of "shall" and "will" to every person found misusing them; also to every teacher, every newspaper writer, and especially to every proofreader. I lay stress on the proofreader, because I know a case in which the help of one of these useful persons proved very efficacious. I was once on the staff of a Canadian journal at the head of which there was a famous Scotchman. He did not take kindly to any interference with his English by any other member of the staff, so we quietly suborned the proofreaders to substitute "shall" for "will" and "will" for "shall" in all the writing of the chief. If he ever observed the changes he said nothing about them. A. P.

Toronto, Ontario, April 20, 1906.

[As a matter of fact, in the letter to Earl Grey the President uses "shall" five times. The three phrases in which our correspondent objects to the use of "shall" are these: "I shall send up an officer," "I shall then formally thank you," and "I shall have placed on the portrait," &c.]

The Villa Palmieri.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Alexandre Dumas the elder wrote "Une Année à Florence" and the Italian story and play of "Lorenzino" (same subject as Musset's "Lorenzaccio") in the Villa Palmieri. He hoped that the shade of Decameron Boccaccio would inspire him! Let readers decide.

A Story with Action

For romance, for action, for humor, and for character drawing this new tale by the author of "Wolfville" is a rare contribution to present-day literature. The story deals most fascinatingly with the deeds in love and frontier daring in the early days of the Great Southwest. You'll lose your heart to the hero along with the heroine.

QUESTION OF SPELLING

Mr. Hudson Is the Anvil Now—A Defense of the Reform Board.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

MR. C. E. Hudson deserves the thanks of all who take interest in the proposed simplification of spelling for calling attention to the remarks upon amended spelling, which, together with the ten rules and list of words, appear at the end of Volume VI. of the Century Dictionary.

Even the "Englishman" exiled, let us hope temporarily, in Waynesburg might there have found a certain consolation had he not unfortunately known so very many things that weren't so.

The declaration, the rules, &c., I take to be the result of many years of labor on the part of the foremost scholars and philologists of England and America. After the lapse of some twenty years is there any other tangible result?

Mr. Hudson thinks that we lack the courage of our convictions.

The great mass of English-speaking people have no convictions on this subject; they know little and care less about it. The comparatively small band of enthusiasts devoted to "amended spelling" has both convictions and the courage of those convictions. But there stands across the path like a stone wall the majority, a great and I think not altogether unintelligent majority. There it has stood for fifty years, and there it will stand in all probability for fifty more.

Those of the majority do not often trouble themselves about the logical basis of their position. It is wholly a matter of sentiment and association with them, I think. The language that they love is to them neither a thing wholly of the ear nor wholly of the eye. Seeing and hearing go together hand in hand.

When they hear Waller's exquisite "Go, Lovely Rose" the words take their accustomed form before the eye of the mind, and when the physical eye reads the words the mental ear hears them. To present to the eye this thing of beauty in a sort of dialect garb would give unspeakable offense to both eye and ear.

The garb that we are accustomed to is absurd philologically. Perhaps. But that garb has become so closely identified with the thing we love that to change the garb is to change the thing. To tell us that the proposed change is not nearly as great as the change that has taken place in spelling since Waller wrote affects us not at all. The natural, wholesome, slow change that comes with the growth of a living language troubles no one.

Nor in truth are we much troubled about the results of the present agitation. We have faith that in a free country philological societies, even with plenty of money in the treasury, can neither unduly hasten nor unduly retard the natural growth of a language. That is a stone wall against which, as it seems to me, philologists have vainly run their heads many times in the past, and will, equally in vain, run their heads many times in the future.

II.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I was much interested, but much more puzzled, by the letter in the issue of April 21 from your correspondent "C. E. Hudson." If I rightly understand the object of "simplified spelling" (so called) it is not so much for the aid and benefit of experts like Mr. Hudson as for the mass of common people who lack, first, his educational advantages, and, second, his keen susceptibility of the varying sounds of the letters in pronunciation. And here is where my puzzle comes in. I have only a common school education—in fact a town school in Canada was my seminary—but I have graduated in spelling from that greatest of all spelling universities, the printer's case, becoming so proficient that I have spelled down lines of American school ma'ams, doctors, lawyers, ministers, and professors.

And yet, for the life of me, I cannot distinguish between the sound of "a" in "ace" and in "paid," "par" and "are," "haul" and "aught." It may be that he means it requires a different combination in each word to produce the same sound, but if that be his object why does he introduce such words as "whey," which contains no "a," and "weather," where "a" is not sounded at all?

Why does he take "many" from the "a" list and put it among the "e" words, and "are" from the "e" list and place it with the "a" words? Or why put "cur" among the "e" samples and "fern" among the "u's"? Where does he get either sight or sound of "f" in "diphtheria," as pronounced by the great mass of Americans, including physicians and other wearers of degrees? I know the Standard Dictionary gives the "f" pronunciation, but most other authorities do not.

But the pith of my criticism is this—spelling reform rules, to be of any value, should be conformed to the intelligence and phonetic comprehension of the average public school graduate, and not governed by such hair-splitting differentiations, and to discern between the sound of "u" in "tub" and in "turn."

In fact the first great requisite for simplified spelling is uniform pronunciation. For instance, if I pronounce the "a" in "patent" as in "pay," and my friend as in "pat"; if I say "as-ma," and he says "asth-ma," and a third says "ast-ma" (good authority for all;) if I say "bat-un," and he says "bat-on," and you say "ba-ton," and another says "ba-tong," how will we make the spelling uniform phonetically?

"First catch your hare" was the old lady's recipe as the prerequisite for hare pie; "first systematize your pronunciation" is the absolute prerequisite for universal phonetic spelling.

III.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

If the people who are contributing sneering letters to certain daily papers would only read the admirable bulletins of the Simplified Spelling Board they would discover that their arguments are all wasted. There is really no quixotic "spelling reform" movement under way. The board is simply helping along in a practical and sensible manner the process of simplifying English spelling that has been going on for generations, and will continue to go on, faster now, let us hope.

Mr. Richard E. Mayme, who accuses the undersigned of "reproaching" Col. Sprague, seems not to have understood my last letter. My views are identical with Col. Sprague's, and the letter merely furnished some additional illustrations to prove what he had said about the etymological blunders preserved in English spelling by retaining silent letters.

Demands a New Dictionary.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The interesting discussion on spelling in your recent issues suggests a kindred subject—a dictionary which shall be standard for all English-speaking people. All literary persons, authors especially, and every scholar and reader are interested in having such a work. The present plan leaves authors to be governed by lexicographers whose methods are to a great extent arbitrary, whose influence is more or less local, whose dictionaries represent opinions, and whose modes of spelling are at variance. In their dictionaries are found words with two spellings quoted, from which the inquirer can only make a selection or be guided by inference. Funk & Wagnalls have a list of over 900 words with disputed spellings, giving the various authorities for each.

The spelling on the two sides of the Atlantic is frequently so different as often to jar the reader and lead to complications and disagreements. Yet when a publisher will tell you that a book that will sell well here may be expected to sell with almost equal readiness on the other side, it affords a strong reason for uniformity. The advantages would be endless. Only think what a load of responsibility would be taken off that well-informed person, the proofreader, who is in a quandary all the while where he is not under arbitrary rules. Imagine how the compositor will be relieved when he does not have to consult with his fellow-printers about a particular spelling. And how rejoiced the author would be when he would not have to worry about the mistakes that other people think he is making. Consider the joy of the stenographer when he will not have to write a word a certain way to please one employer, and then write it different to suit another.

What is wanted is a dictionary which shall be authoritative for the West and the East, for the North and the South, in every place where the English language is spoken, and that would settle every dispute. If a publisher or a number of publishers could not be found who would be willing to finance the undertaking, the Governments of the United States and Great Britain could subsidize the publishers and give the new standard the weight of their united authority. We have very properly had a revision of the Bible. Why cannot we have a revision of the dictionaries? A number of eminent literary characters could meet at some agreed centre and settle every disputed question.

The benefits resulting would warrant the expenditure. A strong public agitation is all that is necessary to start the movement.

The All-Essay Magazine.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The opinions that have recently been expressed regarding "an all-essay magazine" have been interesting to the writer. Magazine editors and publishers will agree with me, I think, when I say that while an all-essay magazine would undoubtedly interest some, it would not appeal to enough readers to warrant its publication on a paying basis.

The magazines published to-day fill the wants of at least 95 per cent. of the reading public. While I enjoy reading a good essay occasionally, the variety of material that appears from time to time in such magazines as The World's Work, North American Review, Public Opinion, Harper's Monthly, McClure's, and others of a similar nature, satisfies me, and I am quite certain satisfies the majority of readers. A magazine with two or three essays in addition to other matter might be salable, but an all-essay magazine, I fear, would receive a poor reception and have an existence of uncertainty. Thus, from a business standpoint only, which is primarily a very important factor, the outlook for such a periodical is unfavorable.

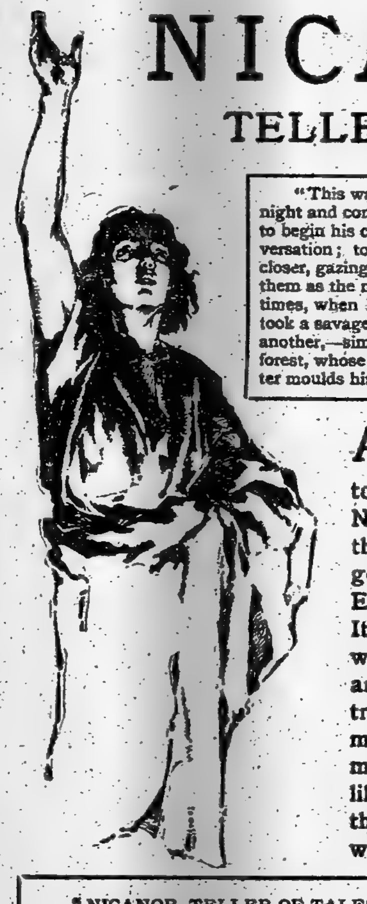
NICANOR
TELLER OF TALES



"This was what he loved,—to fare forth at night and come upon some group about the fire; to begin his chant abruptly, in the midst of conversation; to see his listeners draw close and closer, gazing wide-eyed, half in awe; to sway them as the marsh winds swayed the reeds. At times, when his sense of power shook him, he took a savage delight in seeing them turn, one to another,—simple-hearted children of moor and forest, whose emotions he could mould as a potter moulds his clay."

AND if you are a lover of old romance you will want to follow the adventures of Nicanor the story-teller, of the lord's daughter who forgot that he was a slave, and of Eldris, who loved him best. It is a novel for those of us who have not forgotten Scott and Kingsley and the nobler traditions of historical romance. It is especially commended to anyone who would like to forget for a time the hard commercial age in which we live.

"NICANOR, TELLER OF TALES" is a tale of Roman Britain by C. Bryson Taylor, with beautiful illustrations in full color and other decorations by the Kinneys. A. C. McCLURG & CO., Publishers, Chicago.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINES FOR MAY.

As is our custom each month, today we give up considerable of our space to printing at some length the tables of contents of the leading magazines—not at full length, but in sufficient detail to show the chief features of these monthlies of which we Americans are so proud. We have omitted only the titles of the regular departments, of the illustrations, and of the less important articles, but the space required by the tables of contents, in spite of the omissions, shows the great amount of periodical literature from which selections are to be made. The high standard long ago reached by the American monthly is easily maintained by it in its May number, as all will agree who study these lists.

Wall Street—that is, the railroads.

For the sake of a few more dirty dollars and the temporary interests of a couple of railroads, they are doing their best to hold up this magnificent undertaking.

Fair means or foul: the latest is sending labor-agitators to upset the already difficult labor-arrangements.

A New L. C. Page Issue.

L. C. Page & Co. of Boston will bring out the last day of the month Vol. IV. in G. Waldo Browne's Woodranger Series, entitled "With Rogers's Rangers." It deals with the adventures of some members of Capt. Rogers's band of scouts who took part in the battles and skirmishes around Lakes George and Champlain during the French and Indian War. The band included William and John Stark, Lieut. Berne, Benjamin Browne, an ancestor of the author, and others named in American histories. Much of the material in the story is family tradition.

Silas Strong

Irving Bacheller's new novel is everywhere declared an advance over his first great success, Eben Holden.

The Spoilers

Nobody who reads The Spoilers will waste breath asking whether or not Rex Beach has 'arrived.' This novel places the author among the chosen few who can tell a story of sustained power and breathless interest. There will be more sleep lost over this book than over any other since The Masquerader." —Chicago Record-Herald.

Women and Things

Those who have read "Men and Things" know what perfection of fun this succeeding volume of Mark Twain's Library of Humor must contain. All the world's greatest humorists have contributed to it. It is illustrated by the best artists—Newell, Frost, Kemble, etc.—and is undoubtedly the most notable work of humor ever published. Mark Twain has made two laughs grow where none grew before.

The Princess Olga

Ervin Wardman's new novel recalls The Prisoner of Zenda. The hero is a plucky young American engineer. His adventures in Crevonia, a little independent kingdom of Europe, which proves to be a nest of plots and intrigues, are thrilling indeed. It is the most absorbing kind of modern romance.

Chatwit

"Philip Verrill Mighels has achieved a positive and lasting triumph."—Portland Oregonian.

"Nothing better has been done in the way of animal stories since Kipling's Jungle Book."—Houston Chronicle.

The Genius

"By far the best work Margaret Potter has done."—Albany Argus.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must be prepared to await their turn.

READER, South Bethlehem, Penn.—Where is this quotation to be found? "Can a pig see the sun?" or possibly, "Does a pig see the sun?"

We doubt if the origin of this question can be found. There is at least one other like it in English: "Does a duck swim?" and probably more than one. We think there are French parallels to, if not originals for, the saying.

H. H. B., Philadelphia.—Please state names of publishers, place of publication, and date of the first editions of the following works by Gerald Griffin: "Tales of My Neighborhood," "Talis Qualis, or, Tales of the Jury Room," "Gisippus," "Poetical Works," "Poetical and Dramatic Works." Also dates and publishers of the collective editions of his works published in London.

"Tales of My Neighborhood" was published in 1835 by Saunders & Ottley, "Talis Qualis" in 1842, "Gisippus" in 1842 by Maxwell; "Poetical Works" in 1851, and "Poetical and Dramatic Works" in 1857 and 1859 by Duffy of Dublin. His collected works were issued in London in 1842-3, and reprinted in Dublin the same year, and they have been reprinted since then in England as well as here.

G., New York.—In 1853 G. P. Putnam published a thick volume, entitled "Homes of American Authors," with a promise of a future volume. The book was filled with colored woodcuts, steel plates, and fac similies of manuscripts. The contributors were Curtis, Bryant, Hillard, Tuckerman, Briggs, Godwin, Hale, &c. Can you tell me of what financial value the volume is, whether a second volume was issued, and whether there is any way of determining the authorship of the unsigned articles?

The book was edited by H. T. Tuckerman and Frederick Saunders, the latter of whom was afterward librarian of the Astor Library. One volume only appeared; it is of no especial value.

WEST VIRGINIAN, Long Island City.—(1.) Please inform me where I could secure a book—or have the privilege of reading—entitled "Chances to Make a Million," by Capt. Charles Leib, Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army, Clarksburg, West Va., during the civil war. I understand the book was published in Cincinnati, Ohio, in the sixties. (2) Please mention the best books on the history of the Confederate Navy in our civil war, treating of its personnel, officers and men.

1. "Nine Months in the Quartermaster's Department; or, the Chances of Making a Million" was published at Cincinnati in 1862, and was out of print within ten years. If you do not find it at the Astor Library you will come across it only by chance. 2. "The Records of the Union and Confederate Navies," published by the Government, gives much information on the subject, especially the first three volumes, which cover the operations of the cruisers, and the Confederate Navy was composed almost wholly of cruisers. Admiral Semmes's "Service Afloat," "A Rebel War Clerk's Diary;" and other books on the war will throw light on the history of the Confederate Navy, the story of which has never been written.

R. L. D., New York.—Can you tell me whether Ambassadors or Consuls of the United States of America in foreign countries were ever officially known as "Ambassadors of America," or anything to that effect?

A Minister or Ambassador or Consul sent by the United States is known generally as the American Minister, &c. Legally he is the United States Minister. Mr. Hay's cards read: "The American Ambassador"; but there was a good deal of ill-feeling among the other American diplomats, and we think his example has never been followed officially by our Government.

T. C. MORFORD, Long Branch, N. J.—I have a copy of "Leaves of Grass," with imprint "Brooklyn, N. Y., 1856," which belonged to a friend of Whitman's and was presented to him as a first edition of his work, when first issued. It contains a portrait of the author, thirty-two poems, with opinions and correspondence, and on the fly-leaf in the back it refers purchasers to Fowler & Wells, 308 Broadway, N. Y., for a supply of the book, or to communicate with the author. The friend referred to would like to sell the book if its value has been enhanced by the difference between the reception it received at publication and in after years, when a more searching criticism had revealed originality and uniqueness in its make-up and inception. Have there been any recent sales? If so, what price was made?

This is the second edition, with an inserted portrait, seemingly; two years ago a copy of this edition brought $8, and last year brought as much as $15.50. There is a portrait in the Boston edition of 1861-2.

E. W. W., Old Orchard, Me.—In "St. Elmo," by Augusta Evans Wilson, at the end of Chapter XII., Pp. 166-167, in Dillingham's edition, occurs twice this proverb: "Bithus contra Bacchium." I would gladly know its meaning, and from what book and author originally taken.

It means "Bithus against Bacchus," or, figuratively, "Water against wine." We find no origin for this, and we doubt the correctness of Mrs. Wilson's Latin.

C. G. D., Tampa, Fla.—Can you inform me where I can get a history, or the facts, of the lives of Mary Chaworth and Lady Caroline Lamb of Byron nativity?

You will find an account of Lady Caroline in the Dictionary of National Biography; we do not know of any life of Mary Chaworth, but her marriage to John Musters, Esq., Byron's alleged grief, the birth of her child, and her death, are mentioned in any biography of the poet.

E. L. M., New York.—Will you kindly tell me the author of these lines:

"The poem hangs on the berry bush,
When comes the poet's eye;
And the whole world is a masquerade
When Shakespeare passes by"?

This was asked for some months ago, but no one could place the author.

B. S. B., Brooklyn.—Please tell me where I may find the poem beginning "Is it true, O Christ in Heaven," and let me know the author's name.

This is a poem by "Sadie" Williams, who died in 1868. It was published with her other poems in a volume called "Twilight Hours." This is out of print, but may be in some library. The Astor Libary, which does not care for poetry, has no copy.

H. LOUIS W., Philadelphia.—Can you tell me where I may obtain Arthur Symons's plays, "Tristan and Isolde," "The Death of Agrippina," and "Cleopatra in Judea"?

You can order them through an importer. They are not published here.

D. HENRY, Asbury Park, N. J.—"The Phantom Army," for which W. D. Ryan asked, is probably Bret Harte's "Second Review of the Grand Army."

Other friends ascribe the poem "My Rosary," also desired by W. D. Ryan, to Father Ryan and to Robert Cameron Rogers.

EVELYN CABLE.—On March 31, "A. M. J., Brooklyn," asked the origin of the phrase, "The long arm of coincidence." It occurs in the play "Captain Swift," which ran long and successfully at the Madison Square Theatre a number of years ago.

JOHN L. SCHMITZ, Chillicothe, Ohio.—On April 7 "C. H. L., Brooklyn," inquired concerning the author of the lines beginning, "The lark-like voice that sang so long." The author is William Hamilton Hayne, and the lines are from a poem entitled "Beyond the night." (In memory of Margaret J. Preston.)

EDWARD C. WILEY, Scotchtown, N. Y.—A. M. Bacon will find the proverb, "Better is an handful with quietness than two handfuls with labor and striving after wind," in Ecclesiastes iv.-6. (R. V.)

M. C. L., Plainfield, N. J.—The author quoted on April 7 by "W. G. R." evidently did not follow the good rule, "Verify your references." As told by Suetonius, it was the Emperor Titus—not Vespasian—who used to exclaim "Diem perdidi," (not "perdidi diem.") To "verify" my own remembrance I turned to King's "Classical and Foreign Quotations," quotation No. 521 of his 1904 edition, and found there beneath the Latin reference the couplet:

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun

with the attribution, "Staniford's 'Art of Reading,' third edition, Page 27, Boston, 1803." While this does not lessen the probability that Sylvester's translation of Pibrac's quatrain with the evident allusion to Titus's phrase was the model upon which this variation was formed, it carries back the exact words sought for to the beginning of the last century. King is almost invariably accurate.

S. FINKELSTONE, Glendale, Ariz.—On March 21, 1906, "A. A. G." inquired for a poem which I believe is "The Stranded Bugle," by Leroy E. Mosher, published in the Aldine about thirty years ago. If "A. A. G." will send me his address I will gladly forward a copy.

JAMES MILLS, Montreal.—I have a very pretty picture, painted by C. Rogers in oil in 1847. The canvas has the dealer's name and address, 99 Washington Street, Boston, on the back. Can you tell me anything of the artist?

We find no record of C. Rogers as an artist. He probably never gained fame.

I. L. M. Y., Cleveland.—The poem asked for by "Allie Kanaar" is one by the Bishop of Derry and Raphoe—G. A. Chadwick—entitled "The Scorn of Job," and was published in The Outlook of Oct. 15, 1898. The first line is: "If I have eaten my morsel alone," and the second line quoted is from the third and last verse.

J. W., Boston.—The song inquired for by C. E. Daniel, Monterey, Mass., was very popular in England about the middle of the eighteenth century. It was sung to the tune, "I am the Duke of Norfolk," a favorite air for songs written in this metre. It may be found either in whole or in part in early editions of "Mother Goose's Melodies."

Other friends give the same provenience. One of them, however, doubts that the poem is really from Mother Goose, as the wordly wisdom of the "little maid" was not like the old lady's ingenuousness. It does not ring like a genuine product of the eighteenth century, we think.

Appeals to Readers.

AMANDA T. JONES, Junction City, Kan.—About 1862 a poem appeared in Bonner's New York Ledger, ascribed to John G. Saxe by some blunder. My grandfather recited it to me about 1842, as a poem he had learned in childhood seventy years before. It had been a favorite with New Englanders. I wish to recover the poem. There were four stanzas. In the first two a little girl solicitously inquires of a Catholic priest why there are no marriages in heaven. He answers in the third stanza that there are no women there.

"Then did the little maid reply,
As quick she turned the jeest, (sic!)
'Women are there, but I'm afraid
They cannot find a priest.'"

LIFE.

"Born of love and hope, of ecstasy and pain, of agony and fear, of tears and joy—dowered with wealth of two united hearts," &c.

Mrs. E. B. SYMONS.—Can you tell me where I can find a ballad about two Cornish miners, who went to London to try and sell their bal, (or mine?) I remember this verse:

"We are two Cornish miners
Going to Pall Mall,
To see for some gents
To take shares in the Bal."

It must be nearly a century old.

C. P. H., Boston.—Who wrote these lines:

"Yet Love will dream and Faith will trust,
(Since He who knows our need is just,)
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine thro' his cypress trees!
Who hath not learned in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That Life is ever Lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own."

J. T., New York.—If Cotty Goott's poems have not been published, perhaps O. G. can tell me where to find the poem beginning:

"A draveler who vonce did roam,

C. K., Hartford, Conn.—Who wrote these lines, and where may they be had:

"Come it slow or come it fast,
It is but Death that comes at last"?

M. A. S., Snow Hill, Md.—Can you tell me where I can find the rest of the poem

John Addington Symonds's Study of Whitman—A New Novelist on Brentano's List—Notes of New Books.

With the growing intensified interest in Walt Whitman in England, and with something of a revival in Whitmaniana in this country, a little half-forgotten volume written by John Addington Symonds in Davos Platz in 1893 has come to light. Although unpretentious in form, it is one of those most careful and illuminating studies which the great art connoisseur and critic knew so well how to make of literary personages who appealed to his sensitive yet finely discriminating nature. The volume is about to be republished in this country by E. P. Dutton & Co.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out the first of a three-volume work on "The Taxation of the Liquor Trade," dealing for the most part with Great Britain, by Joseph Rowntree and Arthur Sherwell, authors of a number of volumes on the subject. The taxation of public houses, hotels, restaurants, theatres, railway bars, and clubs is treated of in the present volume. Volume II. will be devoted to other retail and the various wholesale liquor licenses, while the third volume will give a detailed examination of the beer and spirit duties.

Charles Scribner's Sons are adding to the new series "The Scholar as Preacher," "The Eye for Spiritual Things, and Other Sermons," by Prof. Henry Melville Gwatkin of Cambridge University. The author shows that a knowledge of God cannot be gained by sacrificing reason to feeling, or viceversa. He says one must have what Paul designates as "faith" in the "personal influence of Christ."

Allyn & Bacon, publishers of school books in Boston, Chicago, and this city, have sent receipted bills to all their San Francisco customers.

"Days and Deeds" is the title of a volume of verse compiled by Burton E. Stevenson, author of mystery stories, which the Baker & Taylor Company will shortly publish. The book contains poems on the important days and events of American history.

A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago are issuing to-day "Nicanor, Teller of Tales," a story of Roman Britain, by C. Bryson Taylor, with colored illustrations on detached leaves and with decorations by the Kinneys. Nicanor is a slave, and it is his adventures that are told in the book, as well as those of the Roman lord's daughter who forgets who Nicanor is, and of a Greek girl. The story belongs to the class of "The Ward of King Canute," "For the White Christ," and "The Thrall of Leif the Lucky."

A new biography of Poe is being issued by Frank M. Morris of Chicago. It is "Edgar Allan Poe: The Man, the Master, the Martyr," by Oliver Leigh ("Geoffrey Quarles,") who, it may be remembered, published the 950 line satire on "Poets and Poetry of America," by "Lavante," and tried to prove that Poe and "Lavante" were the same man. The new book will contain a study of many portraits of Poe, illustrated by drawings by Mr. Leigh.

The story of a Summer tour through France and Switzerland, "Three Men in a Motor Car," by Winthrop E. Scarritt, which the Duttons will publish immediately, will also include observations on "The Fuel of the Future," "The Automobile of the Future," "Good Roads," "The Most Dangerous Animal in the World," "Man's Ancient Foes," "Practical Suggestions," and other allied topics. C. N. and A. N. Williamson, in their introduction to the book, say much in praise of the narrative and the author, who was at one time President of the Automobile Club of America.

Charles Scribner's Sons have down for early publication "James, the Lord's Brother," by Dr. William Patrick, of Manitoba College, Winnipeg, Canada. This is believed to be the first book to present in full the life and career of the Christian disciple.

C. P. Farrell of this city is bringing out a thirty-two page brochure on "The Agreement Between Science and Religion," by Orlando J. Smith, author of "Eternalism," "Balance," &c., bearing the imprint of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Such subjects as schools of the Roman Empire, catechetical systems of the primitive Christians, the Christian's attitude to Roman learning and education, &c., are discussed in the volume on "Primitive Christian Education," by Miss Geraldine Hodgson of University College, Bristol, England, which the Scribners publish here. It is intended for students who have no time for research.

Vol. II. in the Special Campaign Series, published in this country by the Macmillan Company, is now appearing. It presents a strategical sketch of "The Russo-Turkish War, 1877," by Major F. Maurice. It has not been the author's object to give a history of the war, but to bring out the strategy and major tactics of the decisive portion of the campaign in Europe. It has been his endeavor to show that the lessons of the war are not unimportant. At the end of each of the ten chapters a list of books has been appended dealing "most completely" with the incidents described. There are three maps. In the volume to follow Major G. W. Redway will treat of the American civil war.

A new edition of William Hazlitt's volume of dramatic criticisms, "A View of the English Stage," is appearing in Bohn's Library, through the Macmillan Company in this country. It is edited by W. Spencer Jackson, and is a reprint, with errors corrected and necessary dates and notes added, of the first edition of 1818.

A new department begins in the May number of The Critic. It will be known as "Idle Notes," and will be conducted by "An Idle Reader." The writer, whose identity is hidden behind this nom de plume, is said to be a novelist, short story writer, and critic of wide reputation.

G. P. Putnam's Sons will shortly publish "Poetry and the Individual," by Hartley Burr Alexander, Ph. D., of Columbia University. This book is an "analysis of the imaginative life in relation to the creative spirit in man and nature." Its aim is to be practical.

The Frederick A. Stokes Company announces for publication May 11 "By Wit of Woman," a romance by Arthur W. Marchmont, author of "By Right of Sword," "A Dash for a Throne," &c. This is a story of modern political intrigue. The heroine, who has spent her girlhood in America, returns to Budapest to vindicate the name of her dead father, who has been accused of murder in connection with a plot to restore the ancient Hungarian monarchy. Frank T. Merrill has made the colored frontispiece and other pictures in the book.

A new edition, revised, enlarged, and corrected according to the United States Pharmacopoeia of 1900 of Dr. Matthew D. Mann's "Manual of Prescription Writing" is about to come from the Putnams, who also have in active preparation "The Muscles of the Eye," by Dr. Lucien Howe, in two volumes, with numerous illustrations and a bibliography.

Charles Scribner's Sons are publishing this week Frederick Palmer's new novel, "Lucy of the Stars"; Robert Grant's latest volume of tales, "The Law Breakers," and the translation of Ewald's "My Little Boy," by A. T. de Mattos, the translator of Maeterlinck.

The ethical and economic aspects of "A Living Wage" are pointed out by Prof. John A. Ryan in his new book, which appears with the imprint of the Macmillan Company, and for which Prof. Richard T. Ely has written the introduction. The work does not profess to present a complete theory of justice concerning wages. Its aim is to defend the general conviction that "wages should be sufficiently high to enable the laborer to live in a manner consistent with the dignity of a human being" by setting forth the basis of industrial, religious, and moral fact upon which it rests.

"The Shock of Battle" is the title with which the Putnams will shortly issue the novel by Patrick Vaux. The story is based upon an imaginary war between Great Britain and Germany after the opening of the Panama Canal. A newspaper reporter is the principal character.

Dodd, Mead & Co. will publish next Monday the Baroness von Hutton's new novel, "Pam Decides"; B. E. Stevenson's "Girl with the Blue Sailor," Burton Emmett's "Magazine Articles I Have Read," printed on writing paper, and Carolyn Wells's "Rubaiyat of a Motor Car."

Doubleday, Page & Co. will send out Aug. 1 "Anthony Overman," a new novel by Miriam Michelson, author of "In the Bishop's Carriage." The story will be of special interest and will be awaited with eagerness owing to the fact that its scenes are laid in the San Francisco the author knew so well before the recent disaster.

At the end of next week Charles Scribner's Sons will bring out Harrison Robertson's novel, "The Pink Typhoon," and Charles Stedman Hanks's ("Niblick") book of the woods, "Camp Kits and Camp Life."

The Garden Century.

The May number of The Century Magazine is to be a veritable "garden number," and most of its articles will deal in some way or another with the garden. Mr. Charles A. Platt, a well-known architect, argues for a cause that will at first appear curious, that the architect should have a voice in planning the landscape setting of a house which he has designed, as well as in its interior. Mr. Cable contributes an article that will attract attention, "Where to Plant What;" and there are many other articles on the especial subject of the number. Yet those who care nothing for gardens are by no means overlooked, and will find much to enjoy in the number.

PAGES IN WAITING.

IT TOOK Mrs. Emily J. Climenson, author of "A History of Shiplake," "Historical Guide to Henley-on-Thames," &c., five years to compile the two volumes of correspondence (1720-1761) of "Elizabeth Montagu, the Queen of the Blue-Stockings," which E. P. Dutton & Co. are to publish next week. The book gives only the story of the early life of Mrs. Montagu, (née Robinson,) for she lived until 1800. Mrs. Climenson, it may be here remarked, is the great-great-niece of Mrs. Montagu.

Most Famous English Blue-Stocking. The material in the two volumes was gleaned from some sixty-eight cases, in each of which were from 100 to 150 letters, written by Mrs. Montagu or received by her. There are letters to and from the most learned and celebrated personages in England and France and other countries. Among the names mentioned are the Duchess of Portland, Laurence Sterne, Dr. Johnson, Sir Robert Walpole, Mrs. Freind, Elizabeth Carter, the translator of Epictetus; Gilbert West, Nathaniel Hooke, Mrs. Pococke, David Hume, Lyttleton, Lord Bath, Dr. Young, and a number of others.

The book is fully illustrated with portraits of some of Mrs. Montagu's most notable correspondents and views of some of her homes. The editor hopes to bring out further volumes of epistles down to the close of her relative's life, which include some from and to Hannah More, Edmund Burke, Mrs. Vesey, Dr. Johnson, and others.

The First History of Japan for Foreigners. A reprint of the first history of Japan for foreigners, in three volumes, is being published here by the Macmillan Company. Until now J. G. Scheuchzer's translation from the Dutch of Dr. Engelbert Kaempfer's "History of Japan, Giving an Account of the Ancient and Present State and Government of that Empire, Together with a Description of the Kingdom of Siam," has never been printed in full. The present edition gives the entire work as it appeared in April, 1727, with the "imprimateur" of Sir Hans Sloane, and, in an additional appendix, "Part of an Authentick Journal of a Voyage to Japan, made by the English in the Year 1673," the chief interest of which is in its account of an attempt to revive the English trade with Japan which had ceased since 1623-24.

The new reprint contains all the maps and illustrations of the original edition. In addition, a biographical note on the family of the translater has been written by Sir Archibald Geikie. John Gaspar Scheuchzer came of good Swiss stock and gained distinction during his brief life—he died at the early age of 27, shortly after the publication of his translation of Kaempfer's History.

The work contains a "general description" of the Empire of Japan—its divisions, (provinces and islands,) flora and fauna, birds and animals, fish and shells, metals, &c.—accounts of the political state and the religion of Japan, a description of Nagasaki, "the place of residence for foreigners"—their trade, accommodation, &c.—and the account of the author's two journies to the Emperor's Court at Jedo. Besides the original illustrations, there are fac similes of various title pages of the work.

In addition to the appendix containing the extract from the journal mentioned above, there is another in which are some observations concerning "ambergreese," the "natural history" of Japanese tea, the paper manufactures of the empire, the cure of the "Cholick," and an account of the "moxa," a Japanese and Chinese caustic.

An American on the Thames. "The River: Its Name. Its Source. Thames Head," is the opening chapter of Henry Wellington Wack's new book, in press by the Putnams.

One could hardly fancy an England without the Thames, (Mr. Wack says in this first chapter.) It is the source, the inspiration, the participant in so much that distinguishes England's sylvan beauty. In the centuries that have lived upon its banks it has been a potent factor in the civilization of this island kingdom. It cuts in twain and laves the burliest city in all the world, a dark mass of human structure impenetrably profound. It rides a vast commerce from London to the sea, and along its jutting wharves nights are often made darker with its tragedies. Years agone Kings and Princes and the fairest women in the land rode upon its tide in functions of State or in the idle pose of pleasure.

To him who has been on the Mississippi, the Missouri, the St. Lawrence, or other rivers of North America, the Thames, writes Mr. Wack, "when first beheld above the City of London seems hardly a river at all."

To him it appears to be a well-groomed, quaintly banked park rivulet, an aqueous dwarf with a picturesque swagger and a pride typically British. Just as many Englishmen believe that their race and civilization constitute the only force which renders the world a planet worth abiding in, so does this sinuous little creek go winding on from a disputed source in Gloucestershire to the sea on which rides Britain's might.

In succeeding chapters the author describes various cruises along the Thames, small towns by the way, interesting buildings, &c. He has supplied the volume with many illustrations. He will be remembered as the author of "The Story of the Congo Free State," &c.

Seekers of "Glory." "True stories" of the romance of would-be founders of empire in the early days of the Southwest are told in the volume entitled "The Glory Seekers," by William Horace Brown, which A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago are publishing. The author explains the object of the book in his opening chapter:

This is mainly the story of men, who, standing on the rugged confines of civilization in America at an early period of our National life, sought distinction by attempting to hitch their wagons to the star of empire. In the tales of early American adventure we encounter some picturesque characters, and frequently have fairly to gasp for breath at the audacity of their schemes. Especially is this true of those daring spirits who operated in the Southwest, that grand theatre of historic melodrama.

And then Mr. Brown goes on to tell of the "treasonable enterprise" of Wilkinson, the doings of "Citizen" Genet from France, Senator Blount's disgrace, the schemes of Aaron Burr, Philip Nolan's expedition to Texas, the buccaneering expeditions of Reuben Kemper, and stories of other seekers of glory in Texas, Mexico, Florida, and elsewhere.

Over the scenes of the exploits traced in these pages the sun of glory is now high risen. The wilderness has been transformed into proud and populous States. Men whose daring and ambition outweighed their sense of justice prevised in early days the quick dawning greatness of the land. * * * Sheep now browse over the thousands of unmarked graves of adventurers who invaded Spanish territory bent on conquest, for in almost every raid they paid the mortal penalty of their rashness, and their doom in some degree absolved their transgression. * * * Yet * * * among them are numbered youths of education and respectable connections, whose brief lives lend to the annals the glamour of wild romance.

Besides the sixteen portraits the book also has sixteen illustrative initial letters. The frontispiece is a half-tone portrait of Aaron Burr.

Scotland's Mountains and Islands. A. R. Hope Moncrieff, the well-known English editor and author, has completed his second volume on Scotland, which the Macmillan Company is adding to the series of colored picture books. In "Bonnie Scotland," which was illustrated in colors by Sutton Palmer, Mr. Moncrieff dealt with the main body of Highlands and Lowlands, more familiar to "the gentle tourist for whose patronage it was a candidate."

This one, (entitled "The Highlands and Islands of Scotland," and painted by W. Smith, Jr.,) whose title might have been qualified (writes the author) as "West" Highlands, deals with the less visited side that is still Highland indeed, both in ruder and natural features and in a life holding out longer against the trimming and taming of Sassenach intremissions. The author, as before, has tried to weave a pattern of entertaining stripes and checks upon a groundwork of information, all making a darker-hued tartan than is worn in the centre of Bonnie Scotland. Another metaphor would put it that he has prepared a brisk, perhaps frothy, but, it is hoped, not unpalatable, brew of "heather ale," which contains in solution more solid ingredients than may be manifest to every reader.

There are chapters in the book on "Tartans," "The Holy Isles," "The Land of Lorne," "Pibrochs and Coronachs," "Tourists," "The Outer Hebrides," "Children of the Mist," &c., in which Mr. Moncrieff describes little trips from one place to another in Scotland's Western Highlands, the dialects of the people, their manners, the opinions of some celebrated poets, &c. The forty colored illustrations show some very beautiful spots described in the book, including Glen Rosa in Arran, Loch Linnhe, Glencoe, Ben Nevis, the Hills of Jura, some castles, natives and their homes, views of rivers, falls, lakes, islands, and other places.

Tewkesbury on The Avon. The forthcoming book on "The Idyllic Avon," by John Henry Garrett, which G. P. Putnam's Sons have in active preparation, begins with a description of the town of Tewkesbury, situated near the end of the River Avon "in a rich vale near the confines of Worcestershire, and watered by four rivers, like the Garden of Eden." The four rivers are the Severn, the Avon, the Carrant, and the Swilgate. The appearance of Tewkesbury, writes the author, with its immediate neighborhood, is "suggestive of Paradise," and he continues:

The bright green grass of the meadows is partly hidden by a covering of the most brilliant gold. Never did gold in vestment or chalice of Emperor shine so brightly as do the buttercups at Tewkesbury, and it is a gold that awakens no avarice, or desire to clutch it all for self, but only a pure delight, which every one who can see may share. Beyond the buttercups and over the Severn rise low hills clad in verdure of darker green, over which hover white clouds; but further away the misty purple of the mountain line of Malvern makes a background more or less clearly visible. On the other sides of Tewkesbury there is a repetition of the bright green and wealth of gold, and on the higher ground, still within hearing of the Abbey bells, are cultivated fields and farmhouses with orchards about them, where the apple trees are now showing their pink and white bloom; and that way there are other hills, the green Cotswolds, also within sight.

After "doing" Tewkesbury, the traveler visits Tewkesbury Abbey, and then begins the journey along the Avon to Twyning and Bredon, to Strensham, Defford, and Eckington, and so on, all the way up. The book is profusely illustrated, and at the end of each chapter is a piece of verse illustrating its contents. Throughout the volume, too, he has distributed numerous extracts from Shakespeare.

A Friend of Silas Strong.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Having read your review (April 14) of "Silas Strong, Emperor of the Woods," and having in the meantime read and reread the book itself, will you permit me to say that the wonder grows upon me how you came to publish just what you did concerning it?

The preliminary remark that the novel "breathes of the woods" is literally true, though to this could have been added that its respiration is pronouncedly normal, and therefore most wholesome to hear.

The claim, however, that the opening chapter gives rise to expectations that are left unfulfilled by the body of the work reveals, particularly in view of the confessed nature of these expectations, a peculiar state of mind on the part of the reviewer. Socky and Sue were not ultimately disappointed in their hero; and it is difficult to me to understand how a mature reader can fail to see a grander "Uncle Silas" in the man they came to know than in the prodigious picture which had filled their earlier dreams.

As to the nonchalant manner in which Strong is finally disposed of as "a nice old man—really a nice old man—with a bad stutter," &c.—to one who has carefully read the book this is simply amusing—no, it is exasperating.

The story is a powerful character sketch. Incidentally only does it plead for the woods. Its best work lies in the portrayal of a type of manhood which, whether it has the Adirondack wilderness for its background or the maze of metropolitan life, puts the National heart under tribute of gratitude such as it cannot overestimate nor overpay.

THE HOME OF THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

¶ Would you prefer to purchase a homesite in the centre of a beautiful borough six miles from New York, peopled by aristocrats, to buying a crude "lot" in a houseless territory being "boomed" by land speculators?

¶ MAYWOOD is composed of splendid country estates—a magnificent park. Its residents are the sort of "nice people" you like best to meet; exclusive, yet democratic. Motoring, golfing, boating, tennis, riding, driving—the life of the country club is the keynote of Maywood.

¶ MAYWOOD is to-day but forty minutes from New York City, the commutation but a trifle; 40 trains a day. It is as quickly reachable as Harlem, and upon the completion of the North River tunnels will be but twenty-five minutes from the business and shopping centres of Manhattan. Three trolley lines afford a 40-minute service to Manhattan—a delightful ride. Its water is absolutely pure, gas and electric light service cheap.

¶ Our lots on Maywood Heights are in the very centre of the borough, immediately adjoining the School and Borough Hall. Buy now; this property is increasing in price every month, for as the work on the three tunnel lines progresses, the already brisk demand grows constantly more keen. If you delay your purchase till the Fall, you may lose a profit of from $100 a lot upwards, and have to pay vastly more for home sites. Each lot fronting on a wide, macadam street, with stone and cement sidewalks. They are offered at prices from $200 to $600; terms to suit purchaser; which prices are no higher than those asked by other companies for lots in a barren wilderness, where the entire development depends on the sale of the property.

Trains leave for Maywood from Pennsylvania Station, Jersey City (reached via 23d St. or Cortandt St. Ferries), as follows:—8.25, 10.25, and 11.55 A. M.; 12.55, 2.10, 3.10, 3.40, 4.10, 4.25, 4.35, 5.25, 5.55, 6.25, 7.25, 8.25, 9.55 P. M. Trains leave Sundays 8.25, 10.25 A. M., 1.25, 6.55, 8.55 P. M.

XVII. THE BEARS ADVERTISE FOR A GUIDE

But its name and place they wouldn't tell.
They came to New York, they said, to see
Its boys and girls and to be entirely free
From club engagements and street parade,
And fashion calls and speeches made

Or walking Brooklyn Bridge to view
The ships beneath go sailing through,
Or climbing up on buildings high
To view the city from the sky;
Or resting themselves in Union Square
Smoking pipes and free from care.
They were seen on the street nearly every day,
But where they slept no one could say

"We'll advertise," said TEDDY—B.
"For a guide to take us round to see
The Hippodrome and the wax Musee,
And Coney Island and a circus show,
Who knows the city and where to go."
"I have heard it said," spoke TEDDY—G,
"That advertising pays," said he;
"I'll write the Ad and then I'll see
If the morning papers will print it free."

And board thrown in and clothes as well,
And other things this Ad can't tell.
Call around to-morrow at half-past nine
In Central Park where you'll see a sign
In the pasture lot if the day is fine,
On an old oak tree near the roadway there,
Written on card-board two feet square,
And signed below by a Roosevelt Bear."
TEDDY—B went up to the Park that night
And put up the notice, square and white,
In the pasture lot on the old oak tree
Where every boy who came could see.

To Central Park to hire their guide.
They sent a wagon on ahead
With cakes and fruit and baker's bread,
And stools and table and camping tent,
And other things they got on rent.
They reached the Park at half-past eight;
The boys were entering by every gate,
And crowding towards the old oak tree
The written notice there to see
Some were dressed in their Sunday best
And came prepared for the hardest test;
While others with scarcely a thing to wear,
And without a nickle to pay their fare,
And with hair uncombed and dirty face,
Had walked for miles to get the place.

For an hour the Bears rode up and down
Watching the lads from every town
Who had come by train and trolley car
And scores on foot from near and far
To get the job and earn the pay
And take a week each month for play.

But he owns a dog this terrier white:
He's Pete's companion day and night."
Said TEDDY—B, as the lad stepped up,
"How much will you take for your terrier pup?"
But Pete replied, "Not much you don't;
Sell Cribs for chink? Well I guess I won't;
But Cribs and me will be your guides,
And shine 'em up, your shoes, besides."
"How old are you?" said TEDDY—B,
"And your address you'll please give me."
"I have no age," said Muddy Pete,
"And my home is always on the street.
We know the postmen all around;
If you send a letter, we'll get found."
The lad and dog were told to take
A basket full of fruit and cake
And wait around for an hour or two
Till every boy had an interview.

The next in turn was Homer West,
In a summer suit, the very best,
And collar white, and tie of blue,
And eyes so clear he could look you through.
And following him came Bobbie Hoe,
The biggest boy in all the row;
And then a lad from New Rochelle,
Whose name, he said, he wouldn't tell,
And Charlie Smith and Tommy Gore,
And Edward Brown and hundreds more
"It's my busy day," said TEDDY—B,
As he entered nine hundred and ninety-three,
"Seven boys more and then we're through;
But what in the world are we going to do
With a thousand guides and a terrier pup?
The sum's too hard. I give it up."

At half-past nine, said TEDDY—B,
"Let us pitch our tent by the old oak tree
And line up the lads for an interview

The boys were grouped around the tree
And lunch was served by TEDDY—G
Then TEDDY—B spoke up and said,

MRS. GRANNIS GUILTY; MUST QUIT THE CHURCH

So Say Elders, Who Give Her Two Weeks to Get Out.

SHE SAYS SHE WILL STICK

Defies Them All and Declares She Will Be in Church To-day—Bitter Feeling Yet.

The three out-of-town Elders of the Church of the Disciples of Christ who sat as trial judges in the case of Mrs. Elizabeth B. Grannis handed down a verdict yesterday afternoon finding Mrs. Grannis guilty of being a disturber of the peace of the congregation of the First Church of the Disciples of Christ.

The verdict was announced at the offices of Jacob H. Banton, one of the Elders of the Church, who is a lawyer, at 85 Nassau Street. Mrs. Grannis and her sister, who had sat up until 2 o'clock yesterday morning awaiting news from the session of the Elders, was present in Mr. Banton's office when the sealed verdict was opened. Elder F. H. Moore was also present. Here are the findings in full:

In the matter of Samuel W. Hoke we censure him for using the Lane letters.

Statements by Mr. Christie at the meeting of June 28, 1905, about Mrs. Elizabeth Grannis are sustained by the evidence.

The charges of F. M. Applegate against Mrs. Grannis are all proven with the exception of the twelfth specification, and we believe it impracticable for the First Church of the Disciples of Christ to have a successful future under present conditions, and advise that Mrs. Elizabeth Grannis resign from membership thereof within fifteen days, and upon her failure so to do within the specified time that the church withdraw from her.

J. B. VANDERSLOOT,
G. P. LEMONT,
ARTHUR CATTERMOLE.

"Well," said Mrs. Grannis, "the verdict is just as I said it would be. I shall not withdraw my membership, however, but will go to church as usual to-morrow."

Mrs. Grannis, who is President of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Purity, has been a member of the church for more than forty years. She was a member long before the present church edifice was built in West Fifty-sixth Street. She and her friends declare that the trouble in the church first appeared when Mrs. Grannis adopted the colored child known as Christian, and brought Christian to church. The child, many said, had been in the habit of wriggling around in Mrs. Grannis's pew, disturbing the service on Sundays. Some one suggested that Mrs. Grannis leave the little colored girl at home, but Mrs. Grannis insisted on bringing Christian up as a Christian should be brought up. Then there came a split in the congregation, some folks siding with Mrs. Grannis and others with the pastor of the church, the Rev. B. Q. Denham. Mrs. Grannis was charged with circulating scandalous reports.

Finally charges were made against the Rev. Mr. Denham, and he was arraigned in the West Side Police Court, many women and children being brought forward to back up the charges. Magistrate Mayo held him for the action of the Grand Jury, and in June, 1904, the Grand Jury dismissed the case and discharged the minister from custody.

Mrs. Grannis declared that she would not support the church while the charges were pending against the minister, and then followed much casting of stones, one of which hit Mr. Denham. It was in the form of a story to the effect that he had been in trouble in North Tonawanda before coming to New York to take the pastorate of the Church of the Disciples of Christ, in Fifty-sixth Street. To back up this story letters were obtained from a man named Lane, and it was then alleged that one of Mrs. Grannis's supporters, Samuel W. Hoke, had made use of the Lane letters in circulating the story. It was for this that Hoke was censured yesterday.

The findings yesterday as to the statements Mr. Christie made against Mrs. Grannis as being true simply means that the elders who tried Mrs. Grannis investigated as far back as June 28, 1905, at a memorable meeting at which certain things were said as to Mrs. Grannis being a disturber of the peace of the congregation. Mr. Christie is an elder in the church, and there was a dispute between him and Mrs. Grannis as to who had told the correct story of the occurrences at that meeting.

The trial of Mrs. Grannis was held in the Bible class room on Friday and lasted almost until 2 o'clock yesterday morning.

As to Specification 12, referred to as "not proven" in the court's findings, that was an accusation against Mrs. Grannis of making innuendoes and casting reflections on the characters of such persons as had been opposed to her.

One of the surprises that greeted Mrs. Grannis at the trial was the appearance of a former pastor of the Church, the Rev. B. B. Tyler, who appeared as a witness. It was said that he had been brought from a great distance especially for the purpose of declaring before the Elders that he knew Mrs. Grannis to be a disturber of the peace of the congregation. Elder Banton said yesterday that this was not so, but that he was simply passing through New York, and had been invited to remain over to preach here on Sunday. He had been pastor of the Fifty-eighth Street church for fourteen years. Mrs. Grannis's friends said he was brought here especially for the purpose of helping to get rid of the Grannis faction in the congregation so that the Rev. Mr. Powell might have clear sailing in becoming pastor, he having been credited with saying that he would not accept the call unless the church first got rid of Mrs. Grannis. The Rev. Mr. Tyler will occupy the pulpit at the services to-day.

"I'll be there in my pew as usual," said Mrs. Grannis last night. "I am not going to do anything about that report. I shall not withdraw my membership, but the church may withdraw from me if it wants to. I have no plans in view looking to a vindication, because I need none. If Christ could endure treachery I certainly can. I presume the church will allow me to attend the services and to partake of the crumbs that may fall from the pulpit. However, if any physical force is used, as I am a frail woman, I suppose I will have to yield. I go to church to-morrow, Sunday, at the invitation of Christ, and I shall partake of his bounty as I have done for the past fifty years. I have been a member of the church for forty-six years and a communicant for fifty years."

Mrs. Grannis said that she was in Europe when the police court case about the Rev. Mr. Denham was brought into court, and that when she returned, all she knew about it was what she had read in the newspapers. She said she had been accused of being the only woman of the congregation who had not defended the Rev. Mr. Denham, and added that this was true. The fourteen specifications in the charge, she said, consisted of a tissue of falsehoods and misstatements of facts.

Trustee Hoke, who all along has been with the Grannis faction, said that Elder Banton had written a letter to the Rev. B. L. Powell of Louisville, stating that he, Banton, had plans of ridding the church of Mrs. Grannis.

"From that verdict," said Trustee Hoke, "it is evident that the plans were successful."

4 HURT IN PARK RUNAWAY.

Isaac Meinhard, a member of the real estate firm of H. & I. Meinhard of 320 Broadway, and his wife, who live at 106 Central Park West, were injured in a lively runaway which occurred in Central Park late yesterday afternoon. Several other mishaps occurred during the runaway, which culminated in the smashing of the victoria in which the couple had been driving.

Mr. and Mrs. Meinhard are elderly. They had been taking an airing on the East Drive in the victoria, to which was attached a single horse, driven by Martin Cunningham. The animal took fright at a passing automobile opposite Sixty-fifth Street and bolted.

After going a block the victoria struck another vehicle with such force that one of the shafts was broken off. The driver, Cunningham, was thrown to the drive, where he lay in a semi-conscious condition.

At East Sixtieth Street, Mounted Policeman Faney of the Park Squad rode across the path of the runaway and attempted to stop it. As the mounted man reached to grasp the bridle, the remaining shaft of the victoria struck his horse on the flank. Next moment both Faney and his mount were rolling in the dust.

The policeman, somewhat bruised and shaken up, scrambled to his feet, remounted his horse, and started in pursuit. At the Fifty-ninth Street entrance to the East Drive, just as Faney was about to make another attempt to stop the runaway, the horse in the victoria slipped and the carriage was overturned. Mr. and Mrs. Meinhard were thrown out. They were both considerably bruised and cut. The animal was stopped before it reached the avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Meinhard were carried to the house of Henry Meinhard, Mr. Meinhard's brother, whose residence was fortunately just across the street, at 784 Fifth Avenue. There the aged couple were attended by Dr. Loizeau of Flower Hospital, and after a few hours' rest they were able to go home.

Cunningham, the driver, received a severe scalp wound. The victoria was wrecked beyond repair.

PROSPECT PARK RUNAWAY.

The Cobines, Father and Son, Thrown Out and Severely Injured.

The throng of automobilists and pleasure drivers passing in and out of Prospect Park, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon was thrown into a state of excitement by a runaway, in which two men were injured. The horse, a big black trotter, was being driven to a runabout by William H. Cobine, a hotel keeper, of Liberty Avenue and Enfield Street. In the vehicle with Cobine was his father, Joseph H. Cobine, 72 years old, of the same address.

Crossing the plaza from the park entrance, the horse took fright at something and bolted. Motorists and drivers scattered before the runaway, which headed for the Eastern Parkway. As the horse made a sudden swerve the Cobines were thrown from the runabout. Both sustained scalp wounds and contusions of the body. They were taken to St. Mary's Hospital.

NO TRACE OF MUENTER.

Chicago Searched for Harvard Instructor Accused of Murder.

BOSTON, April 28.—District Attorney Sanderson and Chief Inspector Hurley of the Cambridge police were in consultation with District Judge Almy this morning in connection with an application for a wrannt for Erich Muenter, the Harvard instructor accused of the murder of his wife. It is understood that the Judge did not issue the warrant. The police procedure will now probably be through the channel of the Grand Jury.

The chief development in the case to-day was the discovery that Muenter, a fortnight or so before his wife gave birth to a child, which was April 6, bought corrosive sublimate at a drug store in Cambridge.

It appears from the letters which Muenter sent to Cambridge after he reached Chicago that he was not mentally sound. He had been working hard at the university, not only teaching in three elementary German courses, but studying for a degree and tutoring. His close friend in Cambridge, F. E. Bryant, expected him to return, but it now seems apparent that he had no intention of doing so. Mr. Bryant received two letters postmarked Chicago, but neither disclosed any address. Each letter was so incoherent that its recipient was convinced that Muenter had broken down under the strain of overwork and the shock of the bereavement. Early this week another came from the young man, inclosing his resignation, but this, like the others, made no mention of his plans nor asked for any answer. No address was given.

Everything in the case is now waiting for Muenter's apprehension, as his version of the death of his wife will be considered of extreme importance.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 28.—Every effort of the police of Chicago and Cambridge to find Erich Muenter has failed. Late this evening the police of Los Angeles were called upon to look for him. It was learned that he had contemplated a visit to that city.

LONG ISLAND WOODS AFIRE.

SPEONK, L. I., April 28.—A severe forest fire has been raging all day in the pine and scrub oak wilderness to the north of this village. The flames, fanned by a strong gale, swept through the underbrush and threatened many of the houses in the neighborhood.

At times the smoke from the fire was so dense that the men fighting it were completely hidden. The fire is still burning to the north of Westhampton, but it is thought it is now under control. Several hundred acres of woodland were destroyed and many cords of wood ready for removal were lost.

PARIS STRIKERS DRIVEN FROM JEWELRY STORES

Dispersed or Arrested After Fight with Soldiers and Police.

ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP BRIDGE

PARIS, April 28.—The Government has completed final preparations for dealing with the May Day situation and is confident that the day will pass without serious disorder, but, at the same time, the public, which is not in the least reassured by the elaborate military concentration, is again showing great uneasiness as the May 1 approaches.

This uneasiness was accentuated to-day by the explosion of a bomb Friday night under the Western of France Railway bridge at Argenteuil, in the suburbs of Paris, and by an attempt this evening of a band of a hundred striking jewelers to penetrate the populous centre of the Place de l'Opera for the purpose of making a demonstration before the great jewelry establishments in the Rue de la Prix.

The activity of the police in making more searches and seizures, although designed to insure the public safety, also has had the effect of increasing public apprehension, many persons believing that such extraordinary efforts indicate the seriousness of the situation.

Government, military, and police officials give the most positive assurances that order will be maintained, and the calmer heads accept these statements; but the nervous element of the city is hastily preparing for eventualities, some persons leaving town and taking their valuables with them and others laying in stores for an emergency. The scenes at the great supply stores are unprecedented, hundreds of persons invading them and clamoring for emergency supplies.

The sensational press increases the unrest by publishing alarming reports of Anarchist designs, while the serious press gives prominence to the military concentration and police plans, all of which leads the public to apprehend that something is about to happen.

The explosion of the bomb under the Argenteuil bridge is the first overt act in what the revolutionaries term "direct action." Scores of trains pass over it daily. The bomb used was cylindrical in shape with a slow fuse. The deafening explosion shattered windows in Argenteuil and awakened the sleeping town. The railroad was torn up and the signal on the bridge was smashed, but the solidity of the structure resisted the force of the explosion.

Although there is no clue to the perpetrators of the explosion, the police have pronounced it to be an Anarchist attempt, and connect it with warnings that have been received of other similar attempts, and accordingly rigorous orders were immediately issued for detachments of military engineers to guard all the bridges and tunnels on the western railway system contiguous to Paris.

The appearance of the striking jewelers in the fashionable shopping centre this evening caused considerable excitement. The strikers proceeded in a body from the Labor Exchange to the Rue de la Paix, the richest short street in the world, the windows of the stores being literally lined with diamonds. They reached the Place de l'Opéra, where a force of Republican Guards and police barred their advance, and a lively scuffle ensued, in which the strikers were separated, turned back, and dispersed, though a number of them were arrested.

In the meantime the police had made searches of the domiciles of six persons suspected of having Anarchist connections and of the offices of several inflammatory newspapers.

The wholesale searches continue to arouse excited discussion. Some Royalist suspects disavow connection with a plot, while others assert that the wealthy Count Durand de Beauregard is the tool of the visionary plotters. The authorities continue to withhold the results of their searches.

The temporary military camps show great activity. Six military kitchens have been installed in the Champ de Mars, and extensive lighting and watering plants have been perfected.

Dispatches from the provinces show that most active preparations are being made for the May Day disorders.

At Lorient there were fresh disturbances to-day, and the cavalry charged and dispersed an attempted demonstration. One agitator was arrested.

Reinforcements of troops have been sent to all the big cities.

MAY CUT PANAMA SALARIES.

Senate Committee to Delay Action on Nominations for a Time.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The Senate Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals to-day discussed the question of salaries of the Panama Canal Commissioners.

It was argued that the salary of the Chairman was too high, and several Senators favored reporting a resolution making considerable cuts in the compensation of various canal officials.

In the event that the salary of the Chairman is decreased it is expected Theodore P. Shonts, the present incumbent, will resign. He now receives $30,000 annually. The chief engineer, John F. Stevens, receives the same amount, but it is the intention of the committee not to disturb his compensation.

Another question that will be considered by the committee before the resolution is reported is the holding of dual places by canal officials. The committee is said to be a unit against one man holding more than one office. Nothing will be done with the nominations of Canal Commissioners until after the question of salaries has been determined.

Representative Wanger of Pennsylvania introduced a bill to-day providing a temporary government for the canal zone by extending the authority of the President to make all regulations, civil, military, and judicial. It extends to the Supreme Court of the zone jurisdiction to hear and determine cases involving title to real and other property of the United States in the zone and grants appeals from that court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SAYS HOCH TRIED TO KISS.

Wife of ex-Governor of Kansas Accuses the Present Executive.

Special to The New York Times.

TOPEKA, Kan., April 28.—Mrs. W. E. Stanley, wife of ex-Gov. Stanley, has resigned from the Board of Lady Visitors of State institutions because, she says, Gov. Hoch attempted to embrace and kiss her in his room at the capital last December. She got on a train to go to Wichita, and says Gov. Hoch and District Attorney Dean got on the train and the Governor apologized. He said he acted on impulse, and could not account for his conduct.

Mrs. Stanley refused to accept the apology, and she says Hoch made no defense. Her husband was in poor health, and she did not at once tell him of the matter. When she did he insisted on her resignation. Then Hoch and his friends tried to induce her to withhold her resignation. But she persisted, and got off the board.

Next Wednesday is the Republican State Convention, and there is no doubt that the charge will have an influence on its nominations.

"This story," says Gov. Hoch, "has been whispered around by scandalmongers and finally found extravagant coloring in print. I have committed no intentional wrong, and I hold the person in question in the highest esteem. Did I not occupy the position I do, this story would never have been peddled or published. It is a part the hyena plays altogether too commonly in Kansas."

FLIGHT OF THE CENTAURE.

Count de la Vaulx Makes Last Ascension Before Sailing for Home.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., April 28.—Count Henri de la Vaulx of Paris, with Capt. Homer W. Hedge, President of the Aero Club of America, and Charles J. Edwards of Brooklyn, an insurance man connected with the Equitable Life Assurance Socity, made a balloon ascension here this afternoon in the Centaure, which the Aero Club has purchased from the Count.

The balloon, after lifting to an altitude of probably 1,500 feet, drifted toward the southeast. Delay in receiving the collecting ring and the valve, caused by a mistake on the part of the express company, which left the equipment at Danbury, Conn., last night, did not permit the beginning of inflation until after 1 o'clock, and it was 3:30 o'clock when the bag was filled and Count de la Vaulx began to balance the balloon for its flight.

There was the usual Saturday afternoon crowd of spectators about the balloon field. Probably 2,800 cheered the balloon as it was sent off on its trip. There was not a cloud in the skies when the start was made, and the great yellow globe was discernible for nearly an hour after starting. The Count carried about 680 pounds of sand ballast, 17 bags in all.

Before leaving Pittsfield Count de la Vaulx said that he was to sail for Havre on the La Provence on May 8, but would return to New York next year to remain a month or more.

A telephone message received here at 7 o'clock said the balloon landed in Woodville, Conn., seven miles from Litchfield, at 6:48 P. M. The occupants of the car were reported safe.

AFTER OHIO OIL COMPANIES.

Ouster Proceedings Against the Standard and Many Others.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, Ohio, April 28.—Prosecuting Attorney Wachenheimer to-day filed action against eighteen of the largest and wealthiest corporations in the country, seeking to revoke their Ohio charters.

The Ohio companies named as defendants are: The Standard Oil Company of Ohio, the Buckeye Pipe Line Company, the Solar Refining Company, the Ohio Oil Company, the Northwestern Ohio Natural Gas Company, the Lake Shore Railroad Company, the Toledo and Ohio Central Railroad Company, the Hocking Valley Railroad Company, and the Manhattan Oil Company.

The following is a list of the foreign companies named in the petition: The Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, the Standard Oil Company of New York, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, the Union Tank Line Company, Pennsylvania; the Indiana Pipe Line Company, Indiana; the National Transit Company, New Jersey; the Pennsylvania Company; Pennsylvania; the South Pennsylvania Oil Company, Pennsylvania.

The petition alleges that the production of oil was reduced for the purpose of increasing the price to consumers. This reduction, it is alleged, is at least 50 per cent. to the landowner, operators, and producers, while the price to the consumer has advanced at least 1,400 per cent. over the natural competitive price.

An arbitrary price, it is alleged, is established for consumers, while the commodities are purchased from the producer at an abnormally low price.

One of the sensational allegations in the petition is that the accused corporations are now working under a secret trade agreement and contract by which they have bound themselves not to sell oil or gas below a certain standard figure.

CENSURES CITY OFFICIALS.

Springfield (Ohio) Grand Jury Condemns Failure to Suppress Riots.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, April 28.—Chief of Police R. E. O'Brien, Mayor James M. Todd, and Sheriff William Almoney were severely censured by the Grand Jury in its report this afternoon for their deficiency and lack of interest during the recent mob violence here when threats were made to lynch a negro and many negroes' homes were burned.

The Jury finds the Mayor equally culpable and entitled to censure with the Chief of Police in his inexcusable tardiness in making any attempt toward preventing riots on the strength of his advanced information.

"We find that in direct contravention of the law clearly and specifically defining his duties during a riot," says the report, "the Sheriff not only made no effort whatever toward dispersing the mob and preserving the peace, but, on the contrary, exhibited such evidence of utter incompetency as to render his important office ridiculous in the estimation of the public."

The Grand Jury recommends the reduction in rank of one Sergeant and the prompt dismissal from the force of two Sergeants, a detective, and nine policemen, "for exhibiting an astounding ignorance and misconception of their duties as protectors of life and property."

WHOLE MOUNTAIN MOVED WITH THE EARTHQUAKE

Sierra Morena Range Slipped Northward from 3 to 6 Feet.

BREAK OF FORTY MILES

From a Staff Correspondent.

PALO ALTO, Cal., April 28.—The earthquake which began the destruction of San Francisco moved an entire mountain.

Since the shock the geological experts connected with Leland Stanford University, assisted by many students, have been making careful examinations, and Dr. David Starr Jordan, President of the university, told me to-day what the first fruits of their investigation had been.

"The backbone of the peninsula of San Francisco," he said, "is formed by a softly rounded mountain chain, locally known as Sierra Morena, or Sierra Santa Cruz. This rises to the height of about 3,500 feet in the peak called Loma Prieta, growing gradually lower to the northward, where it passes into the sea.

"Along the base of this mountain for forty miles or more extends a narrow valley, more or less well defined, known in different places as Portola Valley, Canada del Raylundo, Spring Valley, and San Andreas.

"This marks an old fault of geologic times. Where it was made the rocks on the east side fell some 2,000 feet, as related to those on the west, which constitute the Sierra Morena.

"Most of the earthquake shocks about San Francisco have been due to frictions and readjustments along the line of this old fault. The very violent shock of April 18 was clearly due to this. The old fault in the rock reopened, breaking the surface soil more or less for a distance of upward of forty miles.

"The mountain on the west side of the fault slipped to the northward for a distance of between three and six feet without change of level on either side. The strain on the mountain, whatever it was, became relieved, and after various petty tremors of readjustment the earthquake was over.

"From the first grinding movement along the line of the fault waves of intense violence were propagated along the earth. The motion was horizontal, at first back and forth, then, waves from more distant points coming in, they coalesced into most extraordinary twists."

CALEB POWERS IN OHIO.

Taken to Cincinnati for Medical Treatment—Warmly Greeted There.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 28.—Caleb Powers, who has several times been tried and is again awaiting trial for alleged complicity in the assassination of Gov. Goebel of Kentucky, spent several hours in court to-day, having been brought over from the prison in Newport, Ky., by a Deputy United States Marshal to have his eyes treated by a specialist.

Powers and the Marshal strolled through several prominent streets and dined at a leading café. At the restaurant Powers became the centre of a group of persons who happened to recognize him or hear of his presence. He held an impromptu levee there. He would say little of himself beyond expressing confidence in his ability finally to establish his innocence.

BREWER ATTEMPTED ARSON.

Found Guilty by Auburn Jury After Eight Hours' Deliberation.

AUBURN, N. Y., April 28.—Herman Bartels, Sr., was found guilty in the County Court here to-night of the crime of attempted arson in the third degree. The jury was out eight hours. Sentence will be pronounced on Wednesday.

Bartels, a Syracuse brewer, was charged with attempting to burn the plant of the Lake Shore Malting Company here, of which he was the principal owner. Accused with him were Martin L. Whittig, now a fugitive, and John Dippold, who confessed to the police.

CARNEGIE NAMES GREAT MEN.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Booker Washington on the List.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, April 28.—Andrew Carnegie addressed the Canadian Club to-night. Among those present was Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Carnegie said that it was his intention to speak of the French race, but as he had Sir Wilfrid present he would make him the victim, and therefore his remarks would not at all resemble that which he had intended saying.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he declared, was one of the five greatest men of the world. Booker Washington was one, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was another. There was no use mentioning the others. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had told England that Canada was a nation, and that as long as he was able to prevent it Canada would never be drawn into the vortex of militarism. Canada and the United States would never be drawn into war, and no foreign foe could touch either.

All the navies in the world could not pass New York Harbor and the United States would never permit Canada being attacked by a foreign foe. Canada would yet annex the United States as Scotland annexed England.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the time would come, he could not say when, but it would come, when there would be union between Canada and the United States. Like Carnegie, he was a race imperialist.

PRESIDENT OFF ON A TRIP.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The President and Mrs. Roosevelt left Washington on the yacht Sylph late to-day for an outing on the Potomac.

They gave no notice of their departure nor any intimation as to their destination. It is understood, however, that they will return by Monday morning.

HARRIMAN YACHT HELPLESS.

Picked Up at Sea with Kruttschnitt and Jungen Aboard.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, April 28.—E. H. Harriman's beautiful steam yacht Sultana is lying at the mouth of the Mississippi River, helpless, awaiting the arrival of a Southern Pacific steamer to tow her to New York.

The Sultana developed blown out boilers while on her trip back from Colon, and was picked up at sea by the United Fruit steamer Appomattox.

She was towed as far as the mouth of the river, where she was tied up and discharged her passengers. Among them were Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance of ways and operation of the Harriman lines, and C. W. Jungen, general manager of the Southern Pacific's steamship lines. The party was transferred above the city to Mr. Kruttschnitt's private car and left for Chicago.

Mr. Kruttschnitt will probably continue on to San Francisco to assist Mr. Harriman.

LEAPED IN FRONT OF TRAIN.

A woman about 28 years old, stylishly dressed, about five feet seven inches tall, and slender of form, threw herself in front of a northbound Third Avenue elevated train at the Eighteenth Street station shortly after midnight this morning and was instantly killed.

According to Max Schwartz of 3,803 Third Avenue, who said he was directly behind the woman when she got her ticket and passed the ticket chopper, a young man accompanied the woman upstairs to the ticket seller's office and said "good-bye" to her as she passed the chopper. The young man quickly left the station.

The woman turned twice to look back, apparently to see the man again, and then turned her eyes to the train approaching from the south. When it was within fifteen feet of her, she sprang upon the track, so that the motorman had no chance to slacken the speed.

IVINS'S NAME WAS FORGED.

Detectives Arrest His Former Secretary and Say He Did It.

Alfred Ellert, 45 years old, of 690 East 156th Street, was arrested last night at his home by Detectives Meehan and Darcy of the Central Office on a charge of forgery.

Ellert was employed as confidential secretary to William M. Ivins, who ran for Mayor on the Republican ticket. Two weeks ago Ellert disappeared, and presently checks drawn on the Oriental Bank and with the name of William M. Ivins forged, began to be returned. So far the checks returned have aggregated nearly $400.

The Central Office was immediately notified of Ellert's disappearance. A watch was kept upon his home, where he was arrested last night while trying to enter it from the backyard of another house. He was taken to Police Headquarters and locked up.

BURNED MONEY WITH TENT.

ELMIRA, N. Y., April 28.—Following a custom of gypsies when the queen of the tribe dies, "Gypsy Josh," known all over this State, burned the tent and belongings of his queen, who passed away near Rochester last Fall.

Some time later it was discovered that Mrs. Josh had sewn certificates of deposit for several thousand dollars in the draperies of her tent for safe keeping. This money is now in Syracuse and Penn Yan banks, and Josh is in Elmira arranging to begin legal action for the recovery of the money.

OIL TANKS ON FIRE.

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 28.—Fire was discovered to-night in the Bayway Oil Refining Company, near here. The flames were discovered shortly after 10 o'clock by the night watchman. He immediately turned in an alarm, and two companies responded, and when they arrived there they realized that it was a serious fire and turned in a general alarm, which immediately brought three more companies to the scene.

The Standard Oil Company has twelve tanks here, and this is the third fire in this neighborhood among the oil companies in two years. The loss is unknown, but will reach several thousand dollars. The fire was still burning at midnight. The firemen worked with vigor to save the adjoining tanks.

DUNNE'S OWNERSHIP PLAN.

Chicago's Mayor Proposes Negotiation with Traction Companies.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 28.—Mayor Dunne today submitted to Chairman Werno of the Transportation Committee what he considers final plans for the settlement of the traction question.

He proposes that negotiations be commenced at once with the present companies, with a view to reaching an agreement for the ultimate acquisition of their properties by the city; that until the city gets money and is ready to purchase the companies continue operations for a definite period under a license, and not a franchise; pending the negotiations suits be started to test the validity of the municipal ownership street car certificates.

The street car companies are to have the right to improve their service and equipment as soon as the rehearing in the ninety-nine-year act cases is disposed of.

Grateful Commuters the Hosts.

CRANFORD, N. J., April 28.—One hundred and fifty citizens of this place gave a reception and dinner to-night to the officials of the Central Railroad of New Jersey in appreciation of the efforts of that road to give a good train service, and also for the erection of a handsome new station here, and the naming of one of the finest new ferryboats of the company after this place.

LITTLE CASH SENT TO SAN FRANCISCO

Taft Spent $2,200,000; Forwarded $300,000.

PHELAN IS EMBARRASSED

Depended on Federal Fund; Needs Money.

AGREEMENT AS TO TROOPS

Host of Relic Hunters in the Ruins Cause Trouble—They Get Valuable Loot—Many Libraries Burned.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 28.—Surprise was caused to-day when James D. Phelan, Chairman of the Finance Committee, announced to the Citizens' Committee that he had been given to understand by Victor H. Metcalf, Secretary of Commerce and representative of President Roosevelt, that only $300,000 of the $2,500,000 appropriated by Congress for the relief of San Francisco was available, and that this sum represented the extent of financial assistance that might be expected from that source.

The Citizens' Committee of Fifty, headed by Mayor Schmitz, now administers the affairs of San Francisco, through the military, which has immediate control of patrolling the city and distributing supplies.

Mr. Phelan announced to the full committee that Secretary of War Taft had transmitted to him $300,000 which he said was the first recognition the Secretary had mode of the relief work. He added that he had been informed by Mr. Metcalf that the Secretary of War had expended the remainder of the relief fund for the purchase of supplies in the East.

Secretary Metcalf corroborated Mr. Phelan's statement. Mr. Phelan then said that there was only $218,000 available cash to his order at the Mint and the strictest economy would be necessary.

"We need money," added Mr. Phelan, "and the country should not be led into the belief that millions are on hand to relieve the destitute people."

Both Mr. Metcalf and Dr. Devine indorsed Mr. Phelan's remarks and volunteered to apprise Washington of the situation.

The generous appropriation of Congress had been counted on by the Finance Committee as an available fund for necessary relief expenses, and the knowledge that only a small amount of this would be placed in their hands caused a shock.

Appeal from Dr. Devine.

Dr. Devine of the National Red Cross to-night issued the following statement:

"It is important for the entire country to understand that the loss of homes and property in San Francisco has not been exaggerated. Expectations have been aroused and plans have been based on telegrams and newspaper reports of large contributions for relief, and the expectations should not be disappointed.

"The distribution of food will have to be continued until there are enough stores in which to buy on a money basis, and then it can gradually be diminished, but relief of other kinds is now, and will be, required for weeks to come. Sick and delicate persons will need care for months. Inmates of institutions which have been burned and destroyed must be established elsewhere on some plan yet to be devised. Families which cannot get started otherwise may have to be given a helping hand.

"It is not intended to encourage chronic dependence; but quick, generous, and efficient relief is needed here for a very large number of persons whose homes and means of livelihood have been destroyed. We do not know what amount has been given in the aggregate, but, judging from what is actually in the hands of the Finance Committee or at its disposal, the danger is not that it will be too large, but that it will be insufficient."

Still Want Federal Troops.

The question of use of Federal troops to assist in the preservation of the peace and good order of the city developed unanimity of opinion among the civil and military authorities. A letter from Gen. Greely, commanding the troops on duty, to Mayor Schmitz was read in the committee meeting.

The General stated that the War Department looked with doubt upon the continued use of the army in policing San Francisco, and added that while he personally was willing to continue any work of relief or sanitation he could not sanction the use of the army for non-military duties an hour beyond obvious necessity, and asked for a written statement from the Mayor in order that there might be no doubt or apprehension on his part.

Mayor Schmitz, in commenting on Gen. Greely's letter, said that the Federal troops had given immeasurable assistance to the city since the disaster of April 18, and asked the committee formally to approve of his action in asking the military to take charge, and, furthermore, that the committee request that this control be continued. After Dr. Devine of the Red Cross had added his indorsement of the Mayor's remarks, the motion to request that the troops be permitted to remain was adopted unanimously.

Secretary Metcalf read his report to President Roosevelt and the President's reply thereto, both being received with cheers.

Gen. Greely and Gen. Funston made brief statements to-day in which they expressed the belief that the strong support of the military is now, and will for some time to come continue to be, necessary for the regulation of the city and assisting the civil authorities to regain a thorough grasp of affairs.

Absolute order still prevails in San Francisco. The great city, which but a brief time since was known the world over as the "second Paris," so wide was its reputation for gayety and pleasure-seeking, has settled into the quietest of communities, in which the population is not seen abroad after the first hour of darkness. While the most rigid patrol system is maintained everywhere, the people are free to come and go as they please. As there are no more places of recreation to attract them, however, few venture abroad at night.

Relic Hunters Make Trouble.

The influx of sightseers is adding to the work of the authorities and to the discomfort of those still living in San Francisco. Thousands of people crowd the ferryboats, block the few open streets with all sorts of useless vehicles, and seriously interfere with those engaged in relief work.

To-day they added to the terrific jam at the main ferry station and choked the narrow passages cleared in a few streets for vehicles. They overran ruins of buildings wherever safety would permit them and were ruthless in their frantic efforts to seize on some article of historic or intrinsic value and cart it away.

Throughout Chinatown and along Kearney Street, where bazaars filled with Oriental wares once stood, the harvest of relics has been pretty rich. Men, women, and children, fearing neither the presence of the military nor the danger of the crumbling walls, swarm about the ruins with great profit to themselves.

In many of the Chinese and Japanese stores when the fire approached the proprietors buried a large part of their stock in the basements, intending to return after the fire had passed and recover what they could. They never came back. The terrors of the rocking earth and the sweep of flames were too much for their Oriental minds. But the relic hunters have come, and everything that was of any use or value has been carried away.

The work of the looter has not been confined alone to the ruins of stores. Many residence sites have been worked over and articles of gold, silver, and china carried away. At the ruins of the Hopkins Art Institute and the Stanford residence guards are maintained, and yesterday two women who had been gathering relics at other houses along Pine and California Streets complained against the refusal of the guards to permit them to enter the débris where the Stanford and Crocker homes once stood.

Among the ruins of many of the family hotels and in the ashes of pawnshops relic hunters gathered trinkets and unset jewels. There is no limit to their endurance or to the efforts they will make to find something of value.

"There is nothing left but courage and grit," said Secretary of State Charles F. Curry to-day. "But there is plenty of that to make San Francisco what it has been and always will be—the largest and most important city on the Pacific Coast. Those who believe that San Francisco will not be rapidly rebuilt and on a greater and grander scale don't know the spirit of the West. San Francisco will remain the principal gateway through which commerce and trade to the Orient will flow."

Secretary Curry said that he was in favor of a special session of the Legislature to enact such laws as the present calamity may have made necessary, and he believed Gov. Pardee would call an extra session. The State, declared Secretary Curry, could make no gift to the cities, but he had been assured by members of the Board of Equalization that they were willing to reduce the taxation of the City and County of San Francisco.

Condition of the Banks.

All of San Francisco's forty-four banks, thirty-two commercial and twelve savings, were within the burned district. Inspection has shown that the vaults in every instance remain intact, but with probably two or three exceptions the fine buildings were destroyed.

According to statements filed by these banks with the Bank Commission Jan. 1 last, the value of the buildings aggregated $6,065,032. Add to this total the valuation of premises occupied by the ten National banks, $927,295, and the aggregate is $6,992,327. Two-thirds of this valuation represents the land value of the banking sites, and therefore is not lost, so the net loss to the banks is about $2,330,090, a loss which does not impair their financial standing. The buildings and fixtures were partly insured.

The money on hand in the thirty-two commercial banks at the time was $16,551,454, while the savings banks have coin in hand to the amount of $3,988,804. Add to this the $10,030,765 in specie in the vaults of the ten National banks, and there is an aggregate of $30,571,023 in coin immediately available.

The amount of money due the three classes of banks from other banks and bankers was $37,987,090, of which, however, only $18,000,000 due from outside banks can be figured on, the balance being due from other San Francisco banks. This brings the total money within reach up to more than $48,000,000.

In the line of convertible securities these banks held stocks and bonds valued at $91,191,130. One-third of this total represents United States bonds. This one-third, $30,000,000, brings the grand total of money within reach of San Francisco banks to $78,000,000, and it is safe to say sufficient additional securities are so readily convertible that the total could be made $100,000,000 in ten days' time.

Plan to Balk Oakland Rivalry.

Street cars were in operation this morning, and the confusion and congestion in the unburned district was less noticeable.

Many firms opened up their offices in residences and began the work of straightening out their affairs with the view of resuming business as soon as possible.

The Real Estate Board met the Wholesalers' Association in a joint meeting, and there was a thorough discussion of the details of resuming business.

The offer made by citizens of Oakland to give a large tract of land on that side of the bay to the wholesalers stirred up the real estate men to the importance of immediate action to retain these firms in San Francisco, and from present indications it seems that there will be no difficulty in arriving at some sort of understanding.

General Freight Agent G. W. Luce of the Southern Pacific Company announced to-day that agents throughout the country had been instructed to take commercial freight for San Francisco.

"Our company now has 1,700 cars of relief and commercial freight in Oakland and San Francisco yards," he said. "We are relieving the congestion as rapidly as possible, but as rapidly as the Government takes away relief freight more arrives. While we give relief consignments the preference, this does not mean that we are purposely holding back commercial freight."

Total of Known Dead 333.

Three hundred and thirty-three bodies of victims of the recent earthquake and fire have now been found by Coroner Walsh and his assistants. Many of the dead have been identified.

Among the bodies identified yesterday were four members of the Johnson family of 287 Clementine Street. The building there collapsed, burying in its ruins Nathan W. Johnson, his wife, and two-year-old son, Harold Johnson, and Edward B. Johnson, Nathan's brother. Another body identified was that of Bertha Fabian.

A cold wind blew from the north until a late hour last night, and it was with difficulty that the people camping out, especially on the ground, kept warm. Additional blankets and other coverings were distributed in the various camps last night, and the suffering was minimized. To-day the weather was pleasant.

Army officers in charge of the refugees' camp at Golden Gate Park report that conditions there are excellent, and that the refugees are so situated that they experience little discomfort. With few exceptions all tents have been made water-tight by being lined with tar building paper, which was the principal supply distributed yesterday. The occupants of every tent have been supplied with a field cook stove, and the refugees in need get double army blankets upon request being made to the officer of the day.

Wires Closed to Newspapers.

The maintenance of telegraphic communication with the outside world has been one of the most difficult matters with which the newspapers have had to contend.

The experience of The Associated Press in this respect will give an idea of the obstacles confronting the other news agencies of the city. From Wednesday, April 18, until Monday, April 23, there was no communication by means of telephone or telegraph between Oakland and San Francisco. On Monday one telephone circuit with Oakland was established, and The Associated Press used this for telegraphic purposes.

The use continued throughout Tuesday, and Wednesday it failed. On Thursday the Western Union, by extraordinary efforts, succeeded in getting a bay cable in working order, and by running wires in a roundabout way managed to get a wire into the municipal headquarters at Franklin Hall, on Fillmore Street, near Bush. This wire was placed at the service of The Associated Press, and through communication to the East established.

Losses to the Libraries.

Among the greatest losses resulting from the fire are the magnificent libraries of San Francisco. Library after library, holding in all more than a million volumes, disappeared in the fire.

No accurate estimate can be made of the monetary worth of the books destroyed, but it is believed their market value was in excess of $3,000,000. The public library was the eighth in size in the United States.

Librarian George Clark to-day said: "In my library in the eastern wing of the City Hall we had 130,000 books. These are a total loss, the structure housing the volumes being shattered by earthquake and swept by fire. When our branch collections are brought together we shall have a good working library of reference books and also a fine collection of standard literature.

"We have available $750,000 that Andrew Carnegie gave us. We have a block of land bounded by Van Ness Avenue, Hayes, Franklin, and Fell Streets, and we have $1,000,000 available for a new library building. Doubtless the building of a new home for San Francisco's books will begin soon."

The Mechanics' Institute Library and the Mercantile Library, the former on Post Street below Kearney and the latter on Sutter Street above Kearney, were burned, with 160,000 volumes. The Sutro Library of 200,000 volumes, collected by the late Adolph Sutro, was destroyed. These books were stored in the Montgomery Barracks and in a building in Battery Street. The collection was of immense value, as it contained some of the rarest books in the United States.

Reminiscences of Pioneers Gone.

The library of the Society of Pioneers, in their building on Fourth Street, is gone. One of its priceless features was the typewritten reminiscences of pioneers, bound in twelve volumes. The Bohemian Club lost its library of 5,000 volumes, many of them autograph copies from noted authors. The French library of 10,000, which was in the Spring Valley building, is no more. The B'nai B'rith Library contributed 10,000 volumes.

Nothing remains of the 35,000 volumes of the San Francisco Law Library. The Supreme Court lost its library of 10,000 volumes, and the fine collections of Appellate Judge Harrison and of Dr. Taylor, Dean of the Hastings Law College, are in ashes.

The Bancroft Library, containing an immense collection of historical works, was stored at Twenty-sixth and Valencia Streets and is undamaged. This collection was purchased some time ago by the University of California, and doubtless will be taken to Berkeley for the use of the students as soon as possible.

Mayor Schmitz to-day received many delayed cable dispatches from every quarter of the globe, all expressing sympathy for the people of San Francisco. Among these were words of comfort and good-will from Australian cities, from Dublin's Mayor, and other officers throughout Ireland; from New Zealand, from Baron Kaneko at Tokio, from Englishmen and officers in China, in India, in Japan, in South Africa, and in many other far-off points.

HOW TAFT SPENT THE MONEY.

Hurried on Relief Supplies Even Before Congress Had Acted.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Officials in Washington to-night could not understand why the San Francisco committee was surprised because Secretary Taft sent only $300,000 cash to them.

The money appropriated by Congress for San Francisco was not appropriated for general distribution. It was appropriated to enable the War Department to carry out the relief measures ordered by the Secretary of War.

The War Department, immediately upon learning the situation in California, ordered general and generous relief. To give this relief required money, and the department did not have the money. Congress, accordingly, was asked to appropriate it. Congress did so.

So desirous was the War Department to furnish prompt relief that it even went ahead of the appropriation. After the first million was appropriated, the department went ahead and spent it, and about $300,000 more, in twenty-four hours, and then called on Congress to make up the deficiency. Congress did so and appropriated more to enable the department to make more expenditures, and they were made.

BROKE, BUT HAPPY, SAN FRANCISCO'S MOTTO

Camp Dwellers Making the Best of Their Bad Situation.

MANY QUEER INCIDENTS

Bank President a Cheerful Member of the Bread Line—Jeweler's Wife's "Wounded" Hand.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

SAN FRANCISCO, April 24.—Although it is just one week ago to-day since San Francisco was completely demoralized by the double disaster which overtook her, it is difficult, after one has passed beyond the limits of the fire-devastated district, to imagine that any such terrible catastrophe happened there so recently. The work of taking up the ends of the thread of business and rejoining them has already begun with an earnestness and vigor which speaks volumes for the future of this city.

Market Street paticularly strikes the eye, for in addition to the long lines of vehicles bearing supplies from the water front to the relief camps on the hills crowds of pedestrians hurrying to and from the ferries form an almost continuous procession on either side of the roadway, while down the centre, where clanging cable cars were wont to ply at half-minute intervals, trolley cars operated by means of temporary overhead wires are running to furnish free transportation to and from Octavia Street to the ferry terminus, a distance of fully three miles. Cars are also running in two other sections of the residence district.

Meantime thousands of those whose homes were ruined are still encamped at the Presidio and in Golden Gate and the other parks, absolutely dependent upon their more fortunate brethren here and elsewhere. Even these, however, show the same spirit of optimism which prevails in what is left of the city.

At Golden Gate Park, the first thing which greets the eye of visitors to the main camp is the sign, "Broke, but Happy," crudely scrawled upon a sheet stretched between two trees in front of the first tent in the row. Further along other signs of a similar nature are posted, each one indicating the same idea of endeavoring to make the best of the circumstances.

Throughout the entire vast expanse of the park and Presidio yesterday that was the prevailing sentiment. Those two camps had crystallized the matter and elected themselves as pioneers in propagating the doctrine of optimism. In camp after camp, rudely constructed of benches and quilts, of blankets stretched over poles, or simply of household belongings thrown into a rough semblance of order, the same thing prevailed. There was no sickness, no hunger, no deprivation, and no despondency. One silver-haired woman, whose wrinkled old face beamed kindly over spectacles held low on her nose, read her book and rocked herself contentedly on the lawn by the Schiller and Goethe Statue. A little child cooed to a doll almost as large as herself, and was at peace. Further along a parrot screeched out various impressions of the passing show, to the delectation of a concourse of youngsters. Still again three lads piled themselves upon a coaster and took a spin down the slope of the main boulevard toward Strawberry Hill. Probably in the desperate flight from the fire the coaster had been the salvation of some of the personal belongings of the family. A boy and girl from adjacent camps improved the occasion for a little tête-à-tête under the friendly covert of a low-lying cypress.

It was utterly beyond the powers of the imagination to conceive of this as the same throng, apparently as care-free as Summer campers, that three days before was wtaching the varying course of the flames with varying degrees of hope and fear. Probably of all the whole world they themselves, the objects of a world's compassion and aid, took affairs most philosophically. Through it all was the sense of brotherhood. Men who had spent a liftime in grouchiness let the light into their souls, and turned to aid the needy neighbor.

Standing in any of the many breadlines one may see curious and diversified humanity in all its forms. Friday a long line stretched from one of the relief stations and moved slowly, slowly upward, as the foremost received his rations and stepped out.

One man, richly dressed, stood in his place, supporting himself with his gold-headed cane, shifting his weight from one foot to the other, as he waited for his turn to receive food for his family. When he reached the head of the line, and the soldier ordered him roughly to take his two loaves of bread, the old gentleman, with a smile of satisfaction, took his two loaves under his arm and stepped contentedly along the street toward his ruined home. He was I. W. Hellman, President of more banks and trust corporations than any other one man on the Pacific Coast. He laughed, as he said, that to receive those two loaves of bread gave him more satisfaction than to sell a whole city street railroad.

Trudging down Market Street, her skirts dragging, her sealskin sack awry, her left hand tied up in a handkerchief, her face besmeared with soot and perspiration, a handsome woman was overtaken by a man who had hired a delivery wagon to carry him to the ferry, with the single suit case he had managed to save from the fire. Owing to a jam of vehicles his driver stopped when he reached this woman, and he looked down, noticing that she was nearly exhausted, and invited her cordially to share the seat with him and ride to the ferry.

Without waiting to hear her response, he jumped to the ground and extended his hand to assist her over the wheel. "Who are you?" she demanded. "Well," said the fellow, "I am just like a lot more, getting out of town with what I have left and with money enough to hire a wagon to carry me. Won't you come along?" She said: "I am afraid to trust anybody."

The man told her who he was, and the weary woman permitted herself to be lifted on to the wagon seat. As they proceeded to the ferry she told him her story. She unbound her left hand and displayed diamonds, men's rings, and women's rings crowded on every finger, and even her thumb, tied with thread that none should drop off. She opened a small handbag which she carried and showed him a fortune in beautiful jewelry and precious stones.

She explained that she was the wife of a jeweler, who had gone to see how his safe had passed through the conflagration, that she had started from Golden Gate Park, where she had slept, and had wrapped her hand to conceal the diamonds. Afraid to ask for assistance, for fear she might be robbed or worse, she was making her way slowly down toward the ferry. She told her rescuer that she undoubtedly would have fallen on the ground before she reached safety. When they reached the ferry her husband was waiting for her.

PARDEE ASKS FOR THE TROOPS.

Federal Forces Now Are Acting Under Authority of Law.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Gov. Pardee of California has accepted the President's suggestion as to the use of Federal troops in that State and has filed a formal application for their employment, which has been granted. It is stated at the War Department that this removes any doubt as to the legality of the use of the troops, but will not in any way change the existing status.

The ordering of the additional troops was not without a clear understanding between Gov. Pardee and Major Gen. Greely, although Gov. Pardee in a telegram to the President had asked that the troops be not sent until he had conferred with Gen. Greely. He then withdrew his objections and urged the sending of the reinforcements.

San Francisco, April 27, 1906.

The President, Washington, D. C.:

In order to prevent possible disturbance, I respectfully request that Federal forces be continued to assist as has been done since the destruction of the City of San Francisco and other local cities by earthquake and fire. The Legislature is not in session and cannot be convened forthwith.

GEORGE C. PARDEE, Governor.

San Francisco, April 27, 1906.

The President, Washington, D. C.:

While there is and has been no disorder in San Francisco, I agree with Gen. Greely that Federal troops will be needed here for some time to supervise distribution of relief supplies, and as a help to State forces in preventing possible future disorders. Federal forces have been of inestimable value, and their presence is greatly appreciated and desired. State troops have been on duty from the beginning and have rendered most valuable services. Gen. Greely assures me that he has no complaint against them, and they are acting in entire harmony with him. Owing to the destitute situation of so many people, relief will have to continue some time. Am in close communication with Gen. Greely.

GEORGE C. PARDEE, Governor.

Gen. Greely's own explanation of the functions his soldiers are discharging and the status of the military is contained in a telegram in which he says:

"From the moment of my arrival the attitude of the army has been that of entire subordination to civil authorities. Its use here beyond the guarding of public buildings is strictly for relieving the suffering and disorganization of industrial conditions unprecedented in history.

"There are no army restrictions on business. House searches are forbidden, personal liberty is unrestricted, and the army will do no police work beyond acting as an aid to the police force in case of extended resistance and in accordance with the request of the Mayor."

The Secretary of War to-day forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to Congress urgent deficiency estimates of appropriations amounting to $3,387,630. This amount is required to replace military stores destroyed by earthquake and fire at San Francisco; to repair the damage to the cable connecting Angel Island and Alcatraz in the Harbor of San Francisco, and the repair of damage to the General Hospital at the Presidio, in San Francisco.

Advices received at the Chinese Legation in this city from the Chinese Consul General in San Francisco indicate that every consideration is being shown the Chinese refugees, and the troops are giving them adequate protection.

"The reports from our officials are very gratifying," Sir Chentung Liang-Cheng, the Chinese Minister said to-day, "and we are very grateful for the attention which our people are receiving."

CRIMINAL EVIDENCE GONE.

Men Accused of $788,000 Swindle May Now Go Free.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 28.—Detective Gibson of the local police force said yesterday that the fire destroyed practically all evidence against Jacob and Herman Eppinger, accused of swindling banks out of $788,000 by borrowing money on fictitious wheat certificates.

The second trial of Jacob Eppinger was set for April 18, the date of the earthquake. Detective Gibson said it seemed as if the Eppingers would now go free.

$2,000 from Viola Allen Benefit.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 28.—About $2,000 was added to the fund for the relief of the San Francisco sufferers as the result of a benefit performance of "The Toast of the Town," given by Miss Viola Allen at Macauley's Theatre to-night.

Building Trades' Relief Fund.

The Building Trades Employers' Association, it was announced last evening, has voted to give $5,000 for the relief of the sufferers from the San Francisco earthquake and fire. Individual members have subscribed $9,000 more, and another thousand dollars is promised. Most of this money has been sent to San Francisco.

CHURCHES TO HELP TO-DAY

With the collections to be taken up to-day in churches all over the country for the San Francisco earthquake sufferers, and a great number of benefit performances this evening, the National relief fund by to-night will approach the twenty-million-dollar mark. This sum at first was fixed as the goal of the Nation's generosity to San Francisco's stricken people, but, if one may judge from the present outlook, the total will ultimately be considerably larger.

This city still leads in the contributions for the victims of the disaster, and no doubt it will lead to the end. Here is a table of the amounts collected by the various local relief agencies, as acknowledged up to the closing of business hours yesterday:

Mayor's and Red Cross funds	$861,310
Chamber of Commerce	775,500
Direct individual contributions	470,000
Merchants' Association	173,512
Stock Exchange	150,000
Churches, (estimated)	100,000
Theatrical benefits, &c.	52,000
Jewelers' Board of Trade	31,304
American Unitarian Association	21,000
Cotton Exchange	20,000
National Exchange Bank	19,000
Salvation Army, (estimated)	16,000
Produce Exchange	11,150
Tobacco Board of Trade	10,000
Silk Association of America	8,975
Consolidated Exchange	6,500
Clothing manufacturers	5,280
Curb brokers	1,400
Stationers' Board of Trade	1,400
Brooklyn League	1,300
Miscellaneous	355,000
Total	$3,090,721

In all the Roman Catholic churches in the Archdiocese of New York the collections taken up to-day will be set aside for the earthquake sufferers. It is expected that the aggregate will be at least $100,000. A similar amount has already been collected by the Catholic churches in the Brooklyn diocese and a number of Protestant churches which took up collections for the earthquake sufferers last Sunday. A majority of the Protestant churches, however, have deferred their collections for San Francisco until to-day, in order to give an opportunity to prepare for generous donations.

A committee of prominent Catholic laymen appointed by Archbishop Farley, with John D. Crimmins as Treasurer, has been at work for a week collecting funds and has succeeded in getting together more than $18,000, though most of the men by whom the movement was inaugurated already had given generously to other funds for the victims.

At the office of Jacob H. Schiff, Treasurer of the Red Cross organization and the Mayor's Relief Committee, more than $15,000 was received yesterday up to the close of business hours. At the uptown office of the Red Cross an additional $7,000 came in with the morning's mail. The Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' Association each received some $3,000 for the fund.

At the bureaus opened by the Red Cross for the receipt of clothing and supplies such great quantities have been received that the organization yesterday sent out a request that nothing but new clothing, middleweight material for women's dresses, material for undergarments, and sewing material of all kinds be sent hereafetr.

Christopher R. Corning, a consulting and mining engineer and a member of the firm of Olcott, Corning & Peele of 36 Wall Street, returned yesterday from San Francisco. Mr. Corning, who is a mem- Jesup, President of the Chamber, and a conference yesterday with Morris K. Jesup, President of the chamber, and a number of the members of the organization's Relief Committee.

"When I was coming East," said Mr. Corning, "I saw relief trains in great number, ranging from four to twelve cars, filled with foodstuffs and supplies, all being rushed to San Francisco. It appeared as if everybody was rushing the necessities of life to the ruined city.

"Of course, when the earthquake and fire took place there was a tremendous rush to get out of the city, and those who had little or no backbone or courage availed themselves of the free transportation offered by the railroads. The people who remained are a magnificent class, and they are bound to rebuild the city grander than ever.

"The trouble which now looms up is that there may be subscribed more money than can be judiciously expended at the immediate moment. The time will come, and that in a very few weeks, when all the money will be required to help the small men in business—the poor mechanic, for example, who has lost his tools; the workman whose furniture has been destroyed, the little storekeeper who has lost his stock and all and who has practically to start life anew. There are many ways in which the industrial machine needs aid to get started."

Mr. Corning said he thought it would be a good thing if the organizations in the large cities of the East who have collected funds would place a large portion of these in the hands of a committee of responsible San Francisco business men for the purpose of helping people of these classes to resume their work in life.

"These funds should not be in the hands of the politicians," he added. "There is no want of food in San Francisco. The people without homes are being comfortably sheltered, and what is most urgently needed is that the poor business men and mechanics should be put on their feet again."

The Paulist Fathers are sending out an appeal to their friends in this city to enable them to help the seven fathers of their order who were at work in San Francisco and who are now without a house or a church. Both were destroyed in the fire that followed the earthquake.

The mission in San Francisco was a labor of love, urged upon the Paulists by the Archbishop of San Francisco. The Fathers were happy to have a house and a church with a small congregation, because they were thus able to give most of their time to missions for Catholics and non-Catholics. Archbishop Farley is so impressed with the need of keeping up this work of the Paulist Fathers in San Francisco that he has permitted the collection taken up at the Paulist Church on Sunday to be sent direct to the Fathers in San Francisco to help them build a house to live in.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society's employes in New York have made up a San Francisco relief fund of their own to help out their fellow-employes in the San Francisco branch. The sum of $1,849.50 has been contributed by 543 of the New York staff, and will be sent on at once to A. M. Shields, the San Francisco manager.

CLOTHING FOR THE BABIES.

Century Theatre Club Working for the San Francisco Sufferers.

The members of the Century Theatre Club's San Francisco Relief Committee, of which Mrs. Edith Ellis Baker is head, cut out and made a number of babies' slips at the headquarters of the organization, 124 West Forty-second Street, yesterday. The contribution of supplies of material included 100 yards of red flannelette and fifty yards of thin muslin. This is being turned into baby clothes. The first work of the committee will be for the babies who have made their appearance since the disaster. Work for the older children will also be begun as soon as the workers and committees are well organized.

The headquarters will be open for work daily from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Raw material of any kind is needed, and will be gladly accepted from shops or private individuals. The committee asks especially that women in the hotels, whose time is their own, shall come in and help.

A few donations of household supplies were received yesterday, including combs and brushes, pots and pans for cooking, and old clothing. On Monday the committee will have materials for work on hand, and the Century Club will call upon the Actors' Society of America to send its members to nail up boxes and barrels of supplies.

CHICAGO'S SYSTEMATIC AID.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 28.—Armed with special receipt slips and backed by the proclamation of the Mayor, making it "San Francisco Day," the Chicago police made a house-to-house canvass of the city to-day and added at least $135,000 to the relief fund.

Soon after the police started out in their round-up of Chicago's loose change the General Relief Committee realized that the task was too huge a one for accomplishment in a single day and decided to keep the city's purse open until Tuesday noon. The blankbooks with which the police are provided contain $895,000 worth of receipts, but the committee does not expect the proceeds to run up to that amount, although the lack of precedents for such a huge enterprise makes any estimate largely guesswork.

Twenty thousand double blankets were sent to San Francisco this afternoon over the Chicago & Nothwestern Railroad by the Chicago Commercial Association. They filled nine box cars.

ART SALE TO HELP ARTISTS.

The exhibition by American artists for the benefit of fellow-painters who were victims of the recent catastrophe in California, will open to the public on May 6 in the American Art Galleries, and the sale will be held on the evening of Tuesday, May 8. The American Art Galleries will donate space for the picture show, and Mr. Kirby has volunteered his services as auctioneer.

It is estimated that sixty artists or more were affected by the conflagration. Emil Carlsen, who is Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements organized for the benefit of the Californians, is a native of California, and orignated the idea of giving a helping hand by means of an exhibition and sale for his brother artists.

He has been ably assisted in this work by Miss Francesca del Mar, J. Gutzon Borglum, Albert L. Groll, and other well-known artists. Miss del Mar, who lived in San Francisco at one time, has been an active worker for the cause, and has received the pictures contributed for the sale in her studio, at 152 West Fifty-fifth Street.

Among the prominent artists who have already donated pictures for the exhibition and sale are William M. Chase, Emil Carlsen, and Charles C. Curran, who has sent his figure painting, "Hollyhock"; Elliott Daingerfield, who is represented by his "Old Road at Twilight"; William Sartain, by a Venetian scene, "Canal in Venice"; Colin Campbell Cooper, by "Court of Cathedral—Rouen, France"; Miss del Mar, by "In the Orchard," a picture of a Dutch girl; several drawings, including "Sleep," by Kenyon Cox, and "Autumn in Jersey," a landscape by Albert L. Groll.

Works of sculpture have been contributed by Augustus Saint-Gaudens, Daniel C. French, and J. Gutzon Borglum. Barrington on the Hudson, Dutchess County, N. Y.:

Dear Carlsen: I have ordered to be delivered to the care of the San Francisco Relif my picture, "The Screen," and also two pictures by Mrs. Kendall, "Green and White" and "Gray Day." I wish we had more to offer. Sincerely yours, WM. SERGEANT KENDALL.

Will H. Low writes as follows:

My Dear Mr. Carlsen: Count me among the most willing to contribute to the aid of our brother artists who are victims of the terrible disaster in San Francisco. I fear owing to the lateness of the season and the haste in which such a sale must be organized that the result may not materially help our friends to any great degree, but the moral effect of doing what we can to show our solidarity cannot fail to cheer and encourage them. Let me know when and where to send my contribution. Sincerely, with hopes for your success,

WILL H. LOW.

Emil Carlsen is chief of the Executive Committee for the California Artists' Relief; J. Gutzon Borglum, Treasurer, and Miss Francesca del Mar, Secretary. Arthur F. Mathews is Trustee for California.

NEW YORK BANK'S OFFER.

Chase National Extends Unlimited Credit to San Francisco Bank.

Special to The New York Times.

OAKLAND, April 28.—The Central Bank has received this telegram from the Chase National Bank of New York:

"Command us to any extent. Conditions must prove of great advantage to your bank."

The bank Commissioners say they never heard before of an offer of unlimited credit being unconditionally extended, and they regard this incident as a striking proof of the confidence the bankers of New York have in California and the ability of the local financiers to cope with the situation.

All the Oakland banks are informally open and doing business in the regular way, save that they do not deal in San Francisco exchange or cash checks and drafts on San Francisco banks. They are amply fortified with money drawn from the Mint, and daily are receiving large deposits. Indeed the deposits vastly exceed the withdrawals.

This condition is reported by every bank in the city. Yesterday one corporation deposited $300,000 in the Central Bank. This money is to be paid out for labor and material within the next few days, thus adding to the volume of money in actual circulation.

San Francisco business men are receiving accommodations from the Oakland banks, which are showing themselves to be extremely liberal within the limits of safety.

Banks throughout the State are resuming business informally under the direction of the Bank Commissioners and along the lines prescribed by them. The Commissioners are in daily consultation with representatives of the interior banks. Indeed, the Marysville and Los Angeles banks have been open all the time, although the business rules have been temporarily modified to meet the extraordinary conditions which have arisen.

Heavy payments on salary and wages account of May 1 by the Government, State, counties, Southern Pacific, and Pacific Oil Companies will materially strengthen and improve the financial situation.

NEWPORT'S RELIEF FUND.

Two Plays Produced by Amateurs for San Francisco Sufferers.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., April 28.—An amateur dramatic performance was held here to-night for the benefit of the San Francisco sufferers. The programme consisted of two plays—"Six Months Ago" and "Mr. Bob"—and vocal selections by F. F. Schultz and P. B. Zurowski.

The entertainment was under the patronage of Mrs. R. C. Derby, Mrs. W. P. Buffam, Mrs. T. A. Lawton, Mrs. T. C. Josephs, Mrs. Charles M. Thomas, Mrs. W. S. Sherman, Mrs. De Lancey Kane, and Miss Daisy Waring. Boxes were taken by Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Mrs. James Andrews Swan, Mrs. William R. Hunter, Mrs. W. Watts Sherman, Mrs. Samuel Powell, Mrs. Bradford Norman, and Mrs. Cameron McR. Winslow. The boxes sold for $25 each.

Mrs. Vanderbilt Gives $500.

Mrs. Thomas J. Vivian, President of the California Woman's Club, received yesterday a check for $500 from Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., for the San Francisco relief work. The Permanent Committee of the California Relief Association, which has its headquarters at the California Woman's Club in the Waldorf-Astoria, will hold an executive session this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

SAN FRANCISCO WENT TO DOOM WITH MAJESTY

MINUTE GUNS OF DYNAMITE

Nobody Minded Supplementary Earthquakes When They Knew that San Francisco Was Burning.

[The confusion of the postal service in the week following the disaster was such that the letter written by this correspondent, mailed on April 23, and printed in THE TIMES yesterday, arrived here before the letter which was mailed on April 21, and which is printed herewith.]

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

OAKLAND, Cal., April 21.—No one has yet been able to tell quite how he was waked up on the morning of April 18. He found himself suddenly in the heart of a tremendous horror. There was no need to tell a Californian that he was in the clutch of a terrific earthquake. The earth rose, and fell, and rocked, and swayed, through seconds that seemed an eternity, as the house seemed but a toy, tossed back and forth on the surface of the heaving earth.

No human being could walk or stand—we could just breathe in the heart of the overpowering horror as the seconds went by that seemed years, and we knew that each second might bring the collapse of the entire city. And still the earth rocked, in the clutch of the first big shake, and then there came the inevitable frightful sounds—the falling of the bricks on all sides; our own chimneys down, our neighbors' chimneys sending a rain of bricks upon us, the bricks pouring in through our windows and down on our lower floors.

There came the crash of glass, the smashing of china, the falling of plaster, big pictures hurled from the walls and sent flying across the rooms, big tables sent toppling over, great mahogany furniture moved, and still the frightful earthquake had us in its grasp! Would it never be merciful? Would it never let go?

Then shrieks and cries added to our terror, as still the earthquake held us and the earth heaved horribly. Exhausted with fright, at last we felt it let us go, and we knew later that what had seemed an eternity of suffering and of fear had lasted forty-eight seconds.

Weird Street Scenes.

In the street a strange sight met our eyes—not a house with a chimney left, piles of bricks all along the many beautiful lawns, houses everywhere out of plumb, a large house on the boulevard slipping upon the lawn, everything twisted by the malignant force of the earthquake.

People stood in groups quaking with fear, clad only in pajamas or nightgowns. But nobody thought of that. People whispered about the frightful shock—you perhaps noticed that they were pale with fear, you noticed their wide-open, staring eyes, their parted lips, their shaking limbs. You knew you yourself looked that way. It took courage to go indoors to dress, and, though it is now the fourth day since the earthquake, there are those who have not yet ventured up to the second floor of their homes. It was 5 o'clock when the earthquake took us in its grip; at 7 o'clock we felt as if we might have lived centuries. And we began to take note of things.

The city was a mass of twisted wires. There were no street cars running, no trains out of the city; there was no water. The earthquake had broken the big water main, and the water was pouring into the lake. No fires could be made in any of the houses, and there was no breakfast in any city about San Francisco Bay that morning.

"Never mind the losses by the earthquake," we said to each other. "We are alive."

There was a sense of comradeship in the whole city—we had faced death together, in the early dawn. Over and over again we said to each other, "We have been spared!" Oakland interests are largely bound up in San Francisco, and early in the morning we began to wonder how our sister city had come through the ordeal. What had happened to the big skyscrapers of Market Street?

Whispered That City Was on Fire.

And even while we wondered, the big black cloud of smoke settling low on the city and on the bay began to tell a terrible story. And the one boat that could reach us brought, even then, refugees. Soon on our streets it was whispered with bated breath:

"San Francisco is on fire!"

Both of our cities have Mayors whom history will remember for their splendid executive ability in this emergency. It took only a few hours to call out the militia, to place both cities in charge of the soldiers. No one could go to San Francisco, but refugees might be brought to us. Not a drop of water on our side of the bay was to be wasted, and in San Francisco the word went forth that the man who washed hands or face in water would be shot. From the start the soldiers meant business, and many a tale the survivors tell of men shot down before their eyes.

The trade winds swept the heated air across the bay, and all that first day we spent as though in a furnace. There were nine earthquakes, any one of which might once have been the cause for terrible alarm, but we took them stoically. San Francisco was on fire, and across there, in that burning city, were our friends and relatives. What did an earthquake, more or less, matter?

Anxiety gripped our hearts as the day wore on. We walked the streets, with our eyes fixed on the burning city in the distance, that became a cloud of smoke by day, and a pillar of fire by night.

Toward evening there came a confirmation of our worst fears. Market Street was being swept out of existence. The great Palace Hotel was gone. The big Call Building was lost, and The Examiner Building, with its beautiful Spanish architecture, was a mass of ruins. Then we began to realize, for the first time, that San Francisco, proud on her many hills, was doomed.

Dynamite Marks the Hours.

All the following hours of the night were measured off for us by crashes of dynamite blasting, and we knew that a fearful fight was on—the fire fiend on one side and giant powder and human endeavor on the other—and by morning we knew the fire fiend had won. Panic-stricken, we faced the day. We went about with white faces, saying: "We've been spared; we must help." And still the reverberations of the dynamite blasting came over the bay, and we knew that building after building was going down in the general ruin. San Francisco was going fast to her doom.

With the coming of the refugees we knew what was before us. The whole population of San Francisco would be ours to care for, and while yet the flames were raging, our preparations began. The big skating rinks were supplied with cots, the churches were rapidly turned into hotels, depots for supplies were established, and we made ready as best we might for our tremendous responsibilities.

What a Burning City Looks Like.

The sight of the burning city was awe-inspiring as night came down. A fiery tide like a horseshoe swept up over the hills. The city burned fiercely. In the centre of the horseshoe was the burned Market Street district, black and forbidding. The ends of the horseshoe almost met, and our hearts sank. Would the people realize their danger in time, and would they crowd through the narrow open space to the ocean beach, where they might be saved?

We knew that a long line of militia was driving the people two ways—turning some of them to the ocean, that the docks might not sink under the pressure of the crowds. All night the city burned. San Francisco went to her doom in majesty. The city flaming to the high hill tops was indescribably magnificent.

The palaces of Nob Hill shot up giant tongues of fire, and the Fairmount Hotel became a beacon light to be seen for a hundred miles out on the Pacific. Morning brought no abatement, only the fierce flames and the heavy roar of the dynamite.

Refugees Were Dazed.

That morning's refugees were the most hopeless yet. They stared in front of them in a helpless, hopeless way. They did not know where they were going. They did not care—anywhere, anywhere to get away from that fiery flood.

On they went, straight to the hills, or else they sat in groups, silent for the most part, wearing a look on their faces of an awful experience. Exhausted with terror, they had no words; hardly were they capable of any new impressions.

As the hours wear on, they will realize conditions, but not now. Nature will be merciful, for these poor creatures can endure no more. Our friends fleeing from disaster begin to arrive. They have hardly any clothes, and have fled with just the blind desire of escape from the flames. They tell the terrible story of the earthquake, of big buildings leveled to the ground, of big churches laid in ruins. They tell of houses with the entire fronts fallen, of houses hanging together with shreds of timber, of Van Ness Avenue, where the big palaces are wrecks.

In the heart of the aristocratic district they tried to save a little of all the great wealth which had been theirs. We have heard of a group of women who tried to pull through the streets a coupe loaded with valuables. We have heard, too, of the petted young wife of one of the wealthiest men in San Francisco, Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, whose baby was born on a street corner on van Ness Avenue, while the fire crept steadily nearer.

The young daughter of Admiral Bacon, and her little son, only four days old, were taken from an apartment in the heart of the burning district and brought to a tug on the bay. Frail women slept all night in the parks, with scarcely any covering, and women and children undertook the terrible walk over the San Francisco hills, to the ferries, with—many times the fire only a block away. The hospitals sent their sick across the bay as soon as possible. And Oakland welcomed them with its improvised hospitals.

Two trembling old ladies came up to a cabman, and begged him to drive them to the ferry.

"For twenty-five dollars," he answered.

"But see," they pleaded, "we have only fifteen dollars. We will give you that. And the fire is almost here."

"Drive them to the ferry, for the usual price, two dollars and a half," said a soldier who had overheard the talk.

The cabman refused.

"Then you'll never drive anybody again," said the soldier. And he shot the cabman dead.

Our richest people are now the poorest, we are all democrats together. A pall of smoke hangs low over San Francisco, a cloud of smoke blown across the bay is over us also. There are many thousands of people homeless, with no clothes, with nothing to eat except what is given them, but even at that no one is hungry.

We are not afraid of our responsibility—for the whole Nation will help us. How we are to care for these thousands of people is another chapter, for a new day.

GLAD HE WASN'T THE HAT.

"I left San Francisco at 4 o'clock in the afternoon for Carson City," said Lord Dynevor at the Hotel Manhattan yesterday, "and while enjoying breakfast in my hotel rather late the following morning, my man brought me a newspaper containing the terrible news about the city in which I had just spent so pleasant a time."

While in San Francisco Lord Dynevor stayed at the Palace Hotel, and on his departure the leather case containing his silk hat was left behind through an oversight on the part of his valet. The hatbox wasn't missed until they had reached the station at Carson City. A telegram was at once sent to the Palace Hotel asking if the missing property was there. The reply said that it was and that it would be forwarded to the address given the first thing in the morning. But by that time San Francisco was in flames.

"But I didn't worry about my loss at all," said his lordship, smiling. "I was thankful I wasn't the hat."

Lord Dynevor is nearly seventy years of age, but is alert and athletic. He has been four times around the world. He is a widower.

INSURANCE ACTION COMING.

Steps to Meet San Francisco Situation Will Be Taken.

Representatives of the Southeastern Tariff Association, the fire underwriting organization in the Southern States, and Western Union will meet with the special committee of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange this week in regard to San Francisco matters. There is no question that the premium income of the country will be increased in the near future. The problem is as to what method of bringing about the increase will appeal to underwriters as fairest and most expedient.

The example of the Hartford Insurance Company, whose losses in the San Francisco fire were by far the largest and whose stockholders have set about to meet the situation by the issuance of new stock, is having its effect in the councils of a few other companies whose liabilities are too severe in proportion to their present assets.

One leading underwriter expressed the opinion yesterday that practically all the companies would either be able to pay losses in California without special action or would take steps to bring in new capital or release their premium reserve by reinsurance of a part or all outstanding risks.

Such action would mean that no San Francisco policy holder would be compelled to accept a part payment of his claim. After the Chicago fire many companies collapsed. The policy holders had to rebuild their city largely without the aid of fire insurance indemnity for their losses.

SAN FRANCISCANS CUT EUROPEAN TRIPS SHORT

GET GOOD NEWS BY WIRELESS

Told That Relatives Are Safe and City Will Be Rebuilt — Some Lost Heavily.

About a score of San Franciscans who had been compelled to cut short their visits abroad because of the earthquake and fire arrived in New York yesterday on the liner St. Louis. Most of them had lost property in the disaster, but all were in good spirits, because wireless messages had been received telling them of the safety of relatives and friends and of the determination to rebuild the city.

George A. Newhall, a shipping commission merchant and ex-President of the Chamber of Commerce, returned with his wife. He sailed from New York on the Amerika on April 7, intending to make a three months' automobile trip through France and Germany. His machine, which he took abroad, had not been unpacked, and he and his wife had been established only three days in a Paris hotel when the news of the catastrophe came.

The Newhall Building, at 114 Battery, was destroyed, but Mr. Newhall's firm has opened an office in his residence.

"I believe in San Francisco and its future," said Mr. Newhall. "Were I offered a good price for my property now I would not take it, for I believe that a new city will be built. A few may lose confidence, but they will be the small minority, and the confidence of all will be restored in a short time."

A retired grain merchant—George Campbel of 830 Ashbury Street—got back only to receive word that real estate holdings to the amount of $50,000 had been wiped out.

"We were in Antwerp," said Mr. Campbell, "when we received the news on the 19th. I got to London too late on Friday night to get money from the banks, and, as the St. Louis sailed the next morning, I was in a fix. If it had not been for a business house I would have been stranded in London."

Joseph D. Grant of the wholesale dry goods firm of Murphy, Grant & Co. went abroad three weeks ago with his wife. They, too, returned from Paris when the news reached that side. The firm's establishment, at Bush and Sansome Streets, is destroyed.

Another returning San Francisco business man was George H. Lent, a real estate dealer, with holdings in different parts of San Francisco. Mrs. Lent accompanied him. His office, at Post and Montgomery Streets, is gone, but he has received word that the home, in Jackson Street, is undamaged.

A letter received by John H. Bullock, written by his wife and delivered on the American Line pier, apprised Mr. Bullock after many days of waiting that his home, at 72 Pearce Street, was untouched and his wife was uninjured. Mr. Bullock was in the shipping business at 5 Market Street, opposite the ferry. Fire wiped out that place, and the letter from his wife told him of having seen his safes in the ruins. He left this port on March 22, intending to make an extended business trip. The news of the disaster overtook him in Paris.

"The question of the Chinese in San Francisco is settled," said W. G. Lowry. He owned considerable property in Chinatown. "Personally and in spite of the fact that I lost considerable and the property paid excellent money, I am glad," he continued. "Now the Chinamen will be moved further out. I am going back to look after my property and rebuild. We are down now, but we will not take the count."

Mr. Lowry went abroad, intending to stay two years and a half. He had been away ten months.

Another passenger was Mrs. V. C. Baird, who went abroad on March 10 with her granddaughter, Miss Baldwin. Mrs. Baird is said to have lost $1,500,000 through the disaster. Other San Francisco people who returned were Miss C. R. Callahan, who has been studying art in Paris; A. T. Regan, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Robbins, Mrs. A. A. Watkins, G. H. and A. C. Stoddard.

STORY OF TWO JOCKEYS.

Forced to Bury Earthquake Victims—Back in Broadway Again.

Two little jockeys, refugees from San Francisco, strolled along Broadway early yesterday morning looking for a place to sleep. Their clothing was draggled and torn, but their faces wore broad grins, for they were back in New York.

The boys, James Buchanan, 22 years old, and Frank Newell, 17 years old, fled from falling hotels and lost their entire effects in the earthquake and fire. They say they were drafted by soldiers and forced to work until late Saturday night, most of the time burying the dead. They received a living of hard tack and black Java coffee for this, and that was all.

When they finally got away they had free transportation all the way to New York. The train, which began to run on an orderly schedule after leaving Ogden, then had 900 on board, but the two jockeys were the only ones who came through. They were well fed in some little towns, while in some of the bigger cities they got nothing but the stares of the curious. A man in Chicago gave them a dollar without their asking for it, and a policeman gave them another as soon as they landed in New York.

They first went to a Broadway hotel, where Buchanan says he spent $700 last Summer, but, though he was recognized, they were thrown out. Early to-day they said they would look up a Mrs. Lampe, whom Buchanan knew. The boys wrote to her on a piece of cuff on the day of the disaster.

Bto hare of good courage. They know New York and are confident that they will soon be riding once more on the tracks about this city.

Earthquake Shocks in Saxony.

BERLIN, April 28.—Several villages in Saxony experienced four earthquake shocks to-day. No damage was done, but the inhabitants were greatly alarmed.

BITTER AGAINST ROOSEVELT.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 28.—One of the leading papers in Germany, the Leipziger Tageblatt, in an article entitled "Proud Teddy," makes a bitter attack on President Roosevelt for rejecting German aid for San Francisco.

The article says that the President wishes to establish a new ethical Monroe Doctrine.

"The great Theodore," the article continues, "seizes upon this moment to obtain for his people new glory at the expense of decrepit Europe, and emphasize his notion that America is rich while Europeans are beggars. The President proudly swings the Stars and Stripes from Luzon to Constantinople, crying: 'We need no help!'

"If the Dai Lama looks down upon our civilization, it can be understood, but why youthful America?

"Roosevelt is acting like a crowned head, for does he not send telegrams to the Kaiser as if he had royal progenitors? Was not Miss Alice heralded as a Princess?"

TOKIO, April 28.—Much disappointment is felt here at the United States declining the assistance offered from Japan.

A FOREIGN $1,300 GIFT.

London Theatre Gives a Benefit for San Francisco.

LONDON, April 28.—At a benefit performance for the sufferers by the San Francisco disaster at Charles Frohman's Duke of York's Theatre to-night, with Marie Tempest in "All-of-a-Sudden Peggy," $1,300 was realized.

The audience was a brilliant one, including Whitelaw Reid, the American Ambassador; F. C. Van Duzer, Chairman of the American Society in England; the Marchioness of Donegal, Mrs. Adair, Lady Maxwell, Walter Phillips, the Countess of Roslyn, Lady Wilkinson, and a number of persons prominent in the American colony.

CAN'T REACH GERMAN CONSUL.

Embassy Wonders Why He Doesn't Get Relief Funds.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Although the German Embassy received dispatches from the German Consul in San Francisco, Franz Bopp, and was advised that he had opened a temporary Consulate in San Francisco and was in need of money for the immediate relief of German subjects who had appealed to him, an attempt to get funds to Mr. Bopp failed.

Immediately upon receipt of his appeal for money to meet the emergency, $2,000 was wired to him, but to-day another dispatch was received from Mr. Bopp saying that he had not received any money, and inquiring about the delay. The War Department was asked to co-operate with the embassy in getting a dispatch to Mr. Bopp.

PRISONER IN EARTHQUAKE.

Detective Sergt. Theodore F. Snyder of the New York Central Office arrived from San Francisco yesterday with Edward F. Clark, 21 years old, accused of grand larceny. Snyder got to the city a few hours before the earthquake, while Clark was one of 150 prisoners in the Hall of Justice, which was crumbled by the shock. He had been arrested the first week in April on the charge of having robbed his employer, C. F. W. Johanning, a real estate agent, of 2,097 Eighth Avenue, of $1,600.

After the great shock of April 18, Clark said yesterday, the prison guards fled from the building, but Judge Cavanaugh, with several police officers, arrived at 6 o'clock. Hurriedly the Judge discharged all prisoners who were locked up on petty charges. The rest, in charge of the militia, were marched to Broadway and Trade Street.

For fifty-two hours, Clark declared, the men in the gang had no water or food. They were taken first to the Broadway County jail, but the fire menaced this structure, and the prisoners were taken on a steamer to Fort Mason, seven miles away, whence they were shipped to San Quentin. There the Warden denied them entrance.

The steamship took them toward San Francisco, but as it entered the harbor thousands of persons lined the wharves and pleaded to be taken away. The Captain steamed away from the mob and landed the prisoners at Alcherez Island, a solid rock, whose centre had a great fissure caused by the earthquake. There Clark was when Snyder got him and brought him to New York.

Snyder had been at the Netherlands Hotel a few hours when he was shaken out of bed. He partly dressed, seized his grip, and went to the Hall of Justice. Mayor Schmitz had arrived with Chief of Police Dinan. Snyder was told by Dinan to help local detectives to get as many automobiles as possible and bring them to the hall. The two men requisitioned many, which were put to use.

Snyder says he saw 300 bodies taken into the Hall of Justice, and declares that the opinion which prevailed generally among the citizens was that there were really between 15,000 and 20,000 persons lost in the disaster.

Proceeds Will Be Devoted to 'Frisco Relief Fund.

Thompson & Dundy will open Luna Park to-day to the public for the benefit of the San Francisco earthquake sufferers. Large gangs of painters and electricians have been painting and wiring the park to make it presentable for the crowds of visitors that are expected to-day.

MERCHANTS RUSH GOODS TO THE BURNED CITY

Wholesalers and Retailers Working to Resume Business.

NEARLY ALL TO BEGIN AGAIN

One Firm May Use a Tent at First—Fear That Some Firms May Settle in Oakland.

Advices from San Francisco wholesale merchants to their New York representatives have been very meagre since the earthquake. The fire which followed the earthquake wiped out the wholesale district entirely, so far as any one in this city knows, and interest centres in the plans of the houses, which will have to begin all over again.

A canvass of the New York buyers yesterday developed the fact that the firms which were doing business in San Francisco when the earthquake and fire put them out of business will in almost every instance resume. Many of the firms have already obtained temporary quarters in Oakland, where goods are being shipped from the East, and in a few instances quarters have been obtained in San Francisco.

J. B. Webb, the resident buyer of the Union Hat Company, which occupied a large building at 578 Mission Street, received yesterday a letter from Henry Trevor, the President of the concern, dated April 22. It read:

"Just a line to say that there is nothing but ashes to mark the spot where the building of the Union Hat Company once stood. In fact, every wholesale millinery house in San Francisco is gone. If the insurance companies pay we have plenty to settle our entire indebtedness and something over, as we are well insured.

"It will probably be thirty days before the banks are open for business, and then we think matters will be straightened out. We have plenty to eat and drink here, and money is no good, as no one has anything to sell. The Relief Committee supplies everything in the way of food."

Later advices, contained in a telegram from Mr. Trevor, instruct Mr. Webb that the business will be resumed at the earliest possible moment.

Souvenir of the Fire.

William Deckinger, resident buyer for Maurice Rosenthal of 13 Battery Street, San Francisco, and brother-in-law of the head of the firm, has a souvenir of the disaster which he proposes to have framed. It is a leaf torn from a memorandum book, on which Miss Tessie Newburger, niece of Mr. Rosenthal, had written:

WILLIAM DECKINGER,
43 Leonard Street,
New York City, New York.

We are all safe and camping in Golden Gate Park.

The leaf of paper bore the postmark of the San Francisco postal authorities, but was unstamped. It reached him just as Miss Newburger had placed it in a letter box, without an envelope. The address and message were written in pencil.

"I have since been advised by Mr. Rosenthal," said Mr. Deckinger, "that his properties in San Francisco, except his business establishment, were unhurt. The firm has already obtained a store in San Francisco and temporary quarters in Oakland. We are going right ahead. I have made several shipments in the last few days, and we will not keep our customers waiting any longer than the time consumed in the transit of goods."

H. Abeles, resident buyer of Holm & Nathan of San Francisco, said that he had been advised by the firm he represents that it was fully insured and that it had opened up temporary quarters in the Forrester Building, Oakland.

"There will be very little interruption in our business," said Mr. Abeles. "Mail and shipments of goods are going right along to the Oakland quarters, and it won't be long before we will be doing business as we were before the disaster."

At the New York office of Selig Brothers & Co. of 8 Battery Street, San Francisco, their representative said that the firm had lost its entire plant, and that Mr. Selig, with his family, was on his way East. He had not been advised as to the plans of the firm, and was unable to say whether or not its business would be resumed in San Francisco.

The resident buyer of Sadler & Co. said that telegrams had been received to the effect that the establishment had been burned out and that nothing had reached him so far to indicate the policy of the concern for the future.

Temporary Quarters in Oakland.

Murphy, Grant & Co., wholesale dry goods dealers, have temporary quarters in Oakland, according to their New York representative, where goods are being received in transit. They will soon be re-established in San Francisco, and want to have a stock ready when they get a store.

W. G. Happy of 43 Leonard Street, who represents the San Francisco houses of Bauer Brothers & Co. and Heynemann & Co., has received letters from both concerns to the effect that they intend to resume business at the earliest possible moment, and that they are fully insured.

J. A. Plaut, resident buyer for Andrew A. Jacob & Co., wholesale dealers in silks, velvets, and millinery, has a telegram from that firm which was filed at 5:45 o'clock on the morning after the earthquake. The telegram read:

Mr. Plaut has later advices to the effect that the heads of the firm are on their way to New York, and that business will go on.

Retailers Already Busy.

New York representatives of the San Francisco retail stores have already in many cases begun to buy largely for immediate shipment. They may not know even the temporary addresses of their firms, but there is urgent need for all staple articles, like blankets, muslins, and calicos, and they are sending these forward as fast as possible, confident that by the time they reach the Pacific Coast some sort of an arrangement will have been made by which the stores can be opened in makeshift quarters.

In every case new habitations will have to be sought, and according to G. B. Ludlow, New York buyer for Weinstock, Lubin & Co., the location of the shopping district may be altered. It is unlikely, he thinks, after the experience of the earthquake, that many large buildings will be erected upon the made ground, and the section below Montgomery Street will probably be devoted in the future to warehouses.

Amid the general desolation one firm stands out as especially lucky. Newman & Levinson lost their building in Kearny Street, but have a new building going up in Union Street, which suffered comparatively little damage. It is already five stories high, and was to have been occupied at the beginning of next year. The steel and the masonry is already on the ground, and only the woodwork of the part already erected was damaged by the fire. Louis N. Selig, their representative in this city, 621 Broadway, said yesterday:

"I expect that the firm will occupy their new premises immediately. It should be easy to get one or two floors fitted up for our business, and in any case we did not anticipate occupying the whole structure at once. I think that in a couple of months we shall be in good going order. I am buying goods right along in the medium grades."

Store in a Private House.

Other firms announce temporary offices. Raphael, Weill & Co. are established in a private house at 1,806 Pacific Avenue. D. G. Davis, their New York representative, 43 Leonard Street, is buying heavily for them and rushing the goods out. He canceled all Spring orders, according to instructions, but has since in many cases withdrawn his cancellations. By the time the consignments reach San Francisco the business will have found a local habitation.

Davis, Schonwasser & Co. may now be found at 1,808 Pacific Avenue. This is a private house, saved from the fire by a single block, and here a temporary office has been set up. L. E. Davis, 892 Broadway, has received advices that the books have been saved, but knows nothing more. Even this information reached him only through the medium of a penciled scrap of paper folded in another larger sheet, the flap held down by the postage stamp.

According to the press dispatches, the Emporium will resume business at once at the corner of Van Ness Avenue and Post Street. F. S. Owles, 108 Worth Street, could not confirm this report, but stated that he had received instructions to rush goods to San Francisco as fast as possible. The site mentioned is on the edge of the residential section, and he thinks that it has quite probably been selected for reopening trade.

Big Market for Low-Grade Goods.

The goods he is sending are of the staple variety, and this is the case with all the retail merchants. Blankets, sheetings, quilts, calicos, muslins, and other stock of a low-grade quality are badly needed at the present, and there is a market for any quantity of them.

"It will be a long time," said one merchant yesterday, "before a woman in San Francisco or Oakland will want to pay $50 or $60 for a dress when she can get one for $25. The tremendous losses that have been sustained will force people to be economical, and even the wealthy will have no use for clothes of fine quality for a long time to come. To some extent the great outpouring of charity in supplying the immediate necessities will lessen the pressure on the stores, but as homes are re-established there will be a demand for any quantity of blankets, sheetings, and articles of that description."

The temper of the San Francisco merchants is shown by the telegram received by A. B. Ludlow, New York buyer of Weinstock, Lubin & Co., last week. It was the second day of the fire, and the San Francisco store at Grand Avenue and Erie Street was then burning, but H. Weinstock, President of the company, telegraphed him that there was no intention to suspend business. Since then he has received instructions to buy largely of staple articles. He said yesterday:

"I don't know where our firm will locate. They may use a tent if they can get nothing better, but they will open up again just as soon as ever they can. I am shipping goods to our Sacramento house at present, and they will distribute them as they are needed. I have already received from our people over 1,000 orders, and I expect to get another great batch on Monday.

"We are in so great a hurry to get some of the things that I am forwarding them by express, although the bulk has gone by freight. We were the first to send blankets and other aid from Sacramento to San Francisco, and you may be quite certain that it will be only a very short time before the city is rebuilt, more beautiful than ever."

All the Houses Hopeful.

The same optimism prevails among all the houses, though a note of warning was sounded by L. E. Davis of Davis, Schonwasser & Co. He pointed out that many delays in rebuilding are almost certain to occur through the distance from which all the materials of building have to be fetched. Experience has shown that all sorts of mistakes occur, and that a building is hardly ever completed within contract time. The steel for the fourth floor, for example, arrives before that for the third, and the builders have to stand idle till the right consignment arrives.

No definite information has been received by Hale Brothers, 395 Broadway; the D. Samuels Lace House Company, 467 Broadway, or W. S. Settle, 621 Broadway, representing Livingston Brothers. They have heard that their firms are burned out, and they await further orders.

Oakland Firms Not Harmed.

The situation in Oakland is vastly different from that in San Francisco. It is an ill wind that blows nobody good, and Oakland may profit by the misfortunes of the larger city. The influx of population in need of absolute necessities has brought a large amount of temporary trade, and it is at least possible that the jobbers may transfer their stores across the bay to the mainland.

"We are not affected at all, except beneficially, and we would rather not have got benefits in this fashion."

F. M. Atkins, 31 Union Square, representing Taft & Pennoyer, said yesterday:

"Our business is going on as usual, and none of my advices makes any mention of damage to the store. Our only trouble is through the suspension of the banks. We have to tell our creditors we shall send drafts as soon as they open."

J. Brunner, 377 Broadway, New York buyer for Kahn Brothers, declared: "For two days there was so much excitement that we did only an accommodation business. Now everything is running normally, except that we are making very large sales. The damage we sustained might be covered by $2,000. Our display windows were broken and a chimney fell upon the roof of our store. That is hardly worth mentioning, and I am sending out very large quantities of staple articles."

It is possible that the practical monopoly the Oakland stores will enjoy for a few weeks may give them a big start over their San Francisco rivals. Oakland is to San Francisco in much the same relation as Brooklyn to New York, although it is proportionately much smaller than Brooklyn. The influx of refugees will probably result in a growth of population, and the people may get the habit of going to their home stores instead of crossing the ferry to San Francisco. The representatives of the San Francisco firms protest that they are sure to get back all their custom as soon as they are rebuilt, but the Oakland men are evidently preparing to make a hard fight for it.

A more serious thing for the burned city is the retention of the jobbing trade. Report has it that Murphy & Grant have already established themselves in Oakland, and if one or two of the large firms of this order set up permanent quarters across the bay it will be a serious matter for San Francisco.

"The first people who ought to be accommodated in San Francisco," said F. S. Owles of the Emporium yesterday, "are the jobbers. Upon them depends the trade all through California. They must find quarters quickly, or the whole State will suffer, and it will be a great misfortune to San Francisco if she lets them settle in Oakland. Some commission men have already, I believe, set up there."

DRY SUNDAYS AHEAD FOR ALL NEW JERSEY

Liquor Men to Obey New Law in Order to Secure Its Repeal.

WAIL FROM HUDSON COUNTY

Dealers There Disposed to Rebel—Repeal May Be Attempted at Extra Session.

New Jersey is to be a dry State during the thirsty months of July and August, if the action decided upon by the State Liquor Dealers' Association be carried out.

The association held a meeting on Friday to decide what to do about the new excise law, requiring saloon keepers to do business on Sundays with their windows uncovered. After much discussion they concluded that they could most effectively make the law obnoxious, and so promote its repeal, by a strict adherence to it. They admitted, however, that its observance would practically close their places on Sunday.

At a meeting of the Hudson County Liquor Dealers' Association in Jersey City some of the saloon men opposed the action decided on by the State organization. They say that they cannot be reached for violating the law except by indictment by the Grand Jury.

"And I guess it would be pretty hard to get a Hudson County Grand Jury to find a bill against any of us," said one of the Hudson County men.

The members of the State League are determined, however, to force compliance with the act, and they will send men out to cause the arrest of all liquor dealers who undertake to do business with their screens up. There were intimations at both meetings that, if the saloon men are to be forced to observe a Sunday law, all other businesses will be compelled to do likewise, and the ancient "Blue Laws" brought into action again for the suppression of barbers, milkmen, icemen, and the Sunday newspaper dealers.

The liquor men in several of the counties are forming local leagues with a view to an agitation for a speedy repeal of the act. The new law does not go into effect till July 4. At the time the Legislature closed its session it was with the understanding that it should be called together again, in extraordinary session, on Sept. 4, to act on the Passaic River Pollution bills. There is no way, however, of confining the Legislature to the consideration of that one topic, and the State Liquor Dealers' Association in urging an observance of the new act is doing so with the purpose of forcing its repeal at the special session.

The threat of renewing the liquor agitation at the Fall session at the beginning of a campaign involving the United States Senatorship and the Congressional delegation, has alarmed the Republican managers at the State House. Some of them will urge the Governor to withhold the call for the extra session. Others of them say that that would be a gross breach of faith with the interests back of the pollution bills, and Gov. Stokes has, in an interview, declared his belief that the Legislature may be trusted to keep to the business for which it has been agreed to call it together, and to deal prudently with problems that might affect Republican prospects disastrously.

BRIDE'S NARROW ESCAPE.

Discovered on Wedding Day Husband Was a Forger—Marriage Annulled.

Justice Burr annulled yesterday in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, the marriage of Luke L. McGlynn and Mary McGlynn. Mrs. McGlynn is the daughter of Edward E. Moore of the New York and New Jersey Transportation Company, 1 Broadway, who has a residence at 111 Prospect Park West, Brooklyn.

She met McGlynn in the Fall of 1900, and was married to him on Jan. 1, 1901, at St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church, in Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn. The bridegroom had represented himself as a rising lawyer, with offices in Greenwich Street, Manhattan, but at the wedding breakfast at the residence of the bride her uncle, who had arrived too late for the ceremony, told a different story.

He called the bride aside and informed her that he recognized McGlynn as a man who had been obliged to leave Stamford, Conn., because the police were after him. The bride taxed McGlynn with the matter then and there, and he left the house immediately.

Since then he has not been seen, and Mrs. McGlynn brought suit for the annulment of the marriage through Ehrenberg & Manne, 44 Court Street, Brooklyn. The petition alleged that McGlynn at the time of the marriage was wanted by the Stamford police on the charge of forgery, and affidavits were produced from ex-Mayor Homer Cummings and Louis Brenecke of Stamford, bringing serious charges against him. The decree of annulment was granted.

CAR RAMS A DRUG STORE.

A runaway trolley car jumped the switch on the curve at Rogers Avenue and Bergen Street in Brooklyn early last evening, sped across the street, and crashed into the show window of a drug store, partly wrecking the shop and injuring three persons. The motorman of the car, who remained at his post, was among the injured.

The car was one of the Rogers Avenue line. It was coming down Rogers Avenue with about twelve passengers on board, when something apparently went wrong with the controlling mechanism. At Grant Square the tracks of the Rogers Avenue line curve into those of the Bergen Street line, and all cars have to stop at the intersection of the lines, which is a transfer point. Michael McLoone, the motorman, of 544 Hicks Street, tried to apply the brakes, but they did not work.

The hood over the platform of the car extended into the drug store when the car came to a standstill. The platform of the car crashed through the base and frame work of the window and also broke through about five feet of the brick side wall of the store. Bricks, plaster, and stock in the window were sent flying into the store.

In the pharmacy at the time were the proprietor, his clerks, and half a dozen customers. All but two of them escaped injury. These were Edward Richardson, 18 years old, and his twelve-year-old brother, Leslie Richardson, of 1,300 Bedford Avenue. Edward is blind, and Leslie was leading him from the store when the trolley car crashed into the place. Both lads were struck by flying pieces of glass and suffered cuts on the head and face. They were attended by Ambulance Surgeon Parker of St. Mary's Hospital and taken to their homes.

McLoone, the motorman, was struck by broken glass and falling bricks, and his face, scalp, and hands were severely cut. Ambulance Surgeon Blackman of St. John's Hospital dressed his injuries and he was taken home. Several of the passengers on the car were slightly cut by flying glass, and all received a severe shaking up.

ARREST STILLMAN COACHMAN.

He Wouldn't Obey a Traffic Policeman in Fifth Avenue.

Mrs. James A. Stillman, daughter-in-law of James Stillman, the banker, was calling at the house of a friend in Fifth Avenue near Forty-fifth Street yesterday afternoon. When she returned to the street her victoria with its two horses and the coachman, Louis Kratzman, were gone. Only the groom was in sight, and he was so excited that it was some time before he could explain what had happened.

Kratzman had halted the carriage too far from the curb to suit the demands of Traffic Policeman Henry Lobdell, and though the latter ordered the coachman to move closer to the sidewalk Kratzman refused to do so. As a result the equipage was soon drawn up in front of the East Fifty-first Street Station and Kratzman was held for disorderly conduct and obstruction of traffic.

When Mrs. Stillman learned what had happened she drove to the station house in a hansom. There she gave her house, 19 East Seventy-second Street, as bail for Kratzman, who hastened to get the victoria from a nearby stable.

Struck Oil in Jersey City.

Oil was found in a sewer pipe ditch in the rear of Adolph Goodman's residence at 197 Summit Avenue, Jersey City Heights, yesterday. Experts pronounced a sample the real thing in crude oil. Officials of the Standard Oil Company at 15 Exchange Place said the company had no pipe line near Summit Avenue or Goodman's premises. Five gallons of the oil were extracted ten feet below the surface.

TO FIX CANADIAN LINE BY USE OF TELEGRAPH

The Method Prescribed by the New Treaty.

STARS FIGURE IN THE PLAN

When the Time They Pass the Meridian is Flashed the Rest is a Matter of Survey.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The click of a telegraph key will establish the boundary between the United States and Canada. The treaty just ratified by the Senate directs that the boundary shall be defined "by telegraph."

This means that the method adopted by United States astronomers in recording the instant at which fixed stars cross the meridian shall be used. The method is recognized the world over as the most exact. The United States and Great Britain will each designate a Commissioner, who, with assistants, will definitely establish the location of the 141st meridian of west longitude. This done the rest will be a mere matter of surveying and establishing objects to mark the dividing line.

The Commissioner for this country will be O. H. Tittman, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. As a difference in longitude is a difference in time the Commissioners will compute the difference between two points and Greenwich.

Mr. Tittman has already computed the longitude of Sitka as compared with that of Seattle; that of Valdez with that of Sitka, and that of Fort Egbert with that of Valdez.

Canadian observers have fixed the longitude of corresponding points and gradually approaching the approximate location of the boundary. The dividing line is located on the 141st meridian by the treaty made by Russia with Great Britain in 1825. Fort Egbert is within twelve miles of the estimated location of the boundary. It will be one of the stations used in the final observations.

The other stations will be established at points as near as possible to the boundary. Scientists of both Governments will be at each station when the computation is made. The stations will be connected by telegraph. Each party will have what is known as a transit. A small telescope equipped for recording the exact instant at which a star crosses its face will be used. Twenty stars will have been agreed upon as those to be observed. At each station the scientists, aided by the transit, will record with chronometers the time down to the fraction of a second that each star passes the meridian.

The telegraph will be used to communicate at each observation the time registered by the chronometer so that there shall be no error due to difference in the instruments. These observations will be repeated in exactly the same way for six nights. Then the observers can compute the exact time of the one station with respect to the other. This is the time required for the star's rays after passing the eastern station to reach the other.

The scientists know by computations the time at which any one of the stars crosses the 141st meridian. They then must compute the time ascertained for the station nearest the boundary with that of the meridian. The difference they reduce to distance, and by measurement they then fix a point on the meridian which is the boundary.

MADE A POSTER RAID.

But Yonkers Police Fail to Receive Judicial Backing.

Police Captain Frederick H. Woodruff of Yonkers had the local courtroom plastered with theatrical pictures and posters of many colors and designs yesterday. The Rev. Kingman H. Handy, a local minister, was the cause of it. He complained to the Captain that improper pictures were being displayed. Capt. Woodruff caused his detectives to make a general round-up of posters, and they were taken before City Judge Beall for his consideration.

The Judge said he had never posed as an art critic, and that unless something more substantial in the line of evidence were submitted for his consideration he should be obliged to suspend judicial action. The quality of the performance, the Judge declared, was to be considered in conjunction with the pictures, and if the people paid to go to see them and did not object he did not see how he could interfere.

SEAS OF MUD SUBMERGE THE VESUVIUS REGION

WEAKENED HOUSES MENACED

Bridges Destroyed and Roads Blocked —King Edward's Attempt to Visit Observatory Fails.

NAPLES, April 28.—Oceans of mud brought from the mountain side by torrential rains on Friday night are practically submerging the Vesuvius region. The situation can only be described as a black misery, and if it rains again soon it will be absolutely hopeless. The recent eruption of Mount Vesuvius having closed the old water channels the rain had thousands of outlets in all directions, and the torrents, carrying black mud with them, broke up bridges, weakened houses at the bases as the ashes had already done on the roofs, inundated streets, contaminated drinking water, and attacked all that the ingenuity of man had erected for his own benefit.

Among the people to-day was seen the calmness of despair, the despair which weakens the will and removes the desire to do anything. About thirty houses which were almost submerged, but have not yet fallen may be saved if the rains are not repeated; but if the downpour starts again preparations have been made to blow them up with dynamite in order to prevent a worse disaster.

Wood huts were being erected rapidly at Ottajano for the homeless, and the houses that were damaged by the eruption were being strengthened by an army of masons, while the roads had already been considerably cleared so that communication between Bosco Reale and Torre Annunziata could soon be established, but the mud will be more difficult to remove than ashes, as it is mixed with cinders and hardens when drying.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra today made vain attempts to reach the obing finely cleared.

Amid all the upheavals Profs. Matteucci and Perret remained in the observatory, although Friday night another portion of the roof was torn away and it seemed as though the observatory would be engulfed.

King Edward and Queen Alexandria today made vai nattempts to reach the observatory and then Ottajano, but finally were obliged to go to Torre Annunziata, from which place they returned here. King Edward was so touched by the fresh disaster that he sent a contribution of $1,000 to the Mayor of Naples for the assistance of the sufferers.

RUSSIA'S AIMS ON CHINA.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 28.—In spite of the defeat of her ambitions in Manchuria and Kwan-Tung and the obstacles met with by M. Pokotiloff, the Russian Minister to China, in his negotiations at Peking, Russia is steadily pushing forward with the purpose of occupying another big slice of China, namely, the two eastern provinces of Mongolia, covering the route of the proposed railroad from Baikal to Peking, which, as already announced, has been given over to the Russo-Chinese Bank.

Under the name of "geographic and ethnographic expedition for purely scientific purposes" a party headed by Col. Novitsky, one of the brilliant younger members of the General Staff, leaves St. Petersburg in the middle of May to survey the hitherto unexplored region between the Manchurian frontier and Urga.

Though the expedition nominally is to be under the auspices of the Imperial Geographical Society, it will be financed and officered by the General Staff, and its composition will be almost purely military. The strategic aims, in fact, are so thinly covered that it is doubtful if it will be accompanied by any representatives of the Geographical Society.

The region to be explored covers the hazy "Mongolian Desert," in which during the war six Japanese armies were supposed to be hovering to strike the Russian rear, and into which small scouting detachments of Japanese actually penetrated long distances.

Though there are many contradictory reports in circulation regarding the situation in Manchuria, members of the General Staff privately admit that the demobilization of the Russian Army in Manchuria has paused, though it is claimed this is largely in the nature of a diplomatic bluff to aid Minister Pokotiloff.

Another indication that all is not rosy in the Far East is the zeal with which the Japanese are investigating the defenses of Vladivostok. Dispatches report wholesale arrests of spies there.

House Committee on Naval Affairs Files Its Report.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Chairman Foss of the House Committee on Naval Affairs to-day filed his report on the Naval Appropriation bill. The amount carried by the bill is $99,734,215. The estimates of the Navy Department aggregated $121,563,718. In commenting on the wisdom of authorizing the one-battleship, "the largest and strongest that is known to be afloat," the report says:

"The great naval powers of the world are building battleships of larger tonnage. England has recently launched the Dreadnought, a ship of nearly 19,000 tons. Japan is building one of even larger tonnage, and Germany has recently increased the tonnage of some of her ships heretofore authorized to 18,000 tons.

"To build all the ships authorized up to the present time will cost $52,479,629. Of this amount the bill carries $17,830,829 for construction and machinery and $15,145,000 for armor and armament, making a total of $32,975,829, which leaves a balance of $19,503,800 to be appropriated hereafter for the completion of ships already authorized."

The navy now has a personnel of 34,000. When the ships now authorized are completed a personnel of 59,874 men will be required. The committee figures that in 1910 the navy will be short 24,474 men. The appropriation for recruiting is increased by $31,000 in view of the difficulty of obtaining men.

A new ration is provided which differs from the present ration in a very few things. Fresh fish and fresh fruit are added, and also fresh instead of condensed milk. This the Paymaster General thinks will give the men a much better ration than the one they have at the present time. It will cost about 83 cents.

Americans Arrested in Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 28.—It was reported this evening from Saratoff that two American correspondents, Laborshey and Darland, who had been investigating the conditions in the famine-stricken districts of the interior, had been arrested and temporarily detained. But no complaint has been received at the Embassy.

ATROCITIES BY COSSACKS.

TIFLIS, Transcaucasia, April 28.—The commission appointed by the Viceroy has completed the investigation of the charges made recently by Ashot, the Armenian Bishop of Shusha, Transcaucasia, who protested against the barbarity of the troops in disarming the population of that province. The commission found that many of the horrors were committed during the orgies of Cossacks who were "pacifying" the Caucasus.

In the Kutais Government especially the condition was worse than at first represented. Everywhere there were stories of burning, robbery, the assaulting of women, and the beating of men. The evidence especially condemns Gen. Alikhanoff, the commander of the forces in the Kutais Province, and a certain Col. Vevern.

ROSTOFF-ON-THE-DON, Russia, April 28.—The Public Procurator has begun the prosecution of the Governor, the Prefect of Police, and the Chief of Police, who are charged with being parties to the attacks of the police and the Cossacks made last Fall on the Jews.

The investigation of the Procurator showed that the property stolen from the Jews was chiefly in the hands of the Cossacks, and that the rough elements of the city before making their assault on the Jews first accorded an ovation to the Chief of Police.

ODESSA POLICE CHIEF SLAIN.

ODESSA, April 28.—The Chief of Police who played such a prominent rôle in the October massacres here and a policeman were assassinated by revolutionists here to-day in broad daylight.

The plot was wide reaching and contemplated also the assassination of Assistant Chief of Police Poltavtchenko and several other policemen. A young girl named Jerebtzova threw a bomb at Poltavtchenko, who was on the way to the hospital to visit one of the wounded policemen. Her aim was poor, and Poltavtchenko was unhurt. The girl was gravely wounded by Poltavtchenko's orderly.

WARSAW, April 28.—At Czenstochowa, in Russian Poland, to-day, a bomb was thrown at the carriage of the Chief of Police when he was returning from a funeral. The missile exploded, killing a policeman.

GEORGIAN CHURCH SECEDES.

Refuses Further to Recognize the Authority of the Holy Synod.

TIFLIS, April 28.—The Bishops and clergy of the Georgian Church, whose demand for the autonomy of their Church was recently rejected by the Viceroy of the Caucasus, have decided to refuse to further recognize the authority of the Holy Synod.

They will ask the Patriarch of the Greek Church to enroll them in that Church.

PENSIONS FOR AUTO VICTIMS.

BERLIN, April 28.—The Government introduced in the Reichstag to-day a project for a law obliging automobilists to pay life annuities to those dependent on persons killed by their motor cars or to persons permanently injured by such accidents.

The amounts are to be assessed by the courts, and the owners of the machines and not the chauffeurs are to be responsible.

The measure was referred to a committee.

Russian Mutineers Sentenced.

KIEFF, Russia, April 28.—The trial of the regiment of engineers which mutinied last Fall has been completed. All the officers were acquitted, but three noncommissioned officers were sentenced to death, nineteen privates were condemned to hard labor, and sixty-two were consigned to a disciplinary battalion.

THE CAMBRIDGE TO CLOSE.

Last of Its Guests Must Leave by Tomorrow Evening.

The old Hotel Cambridge, at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-third Street, is to be closed at 6 o'clock Monday night. Most of its regular patrons were getting out as fast as they could yesterday. Its present management doesn't know what is to be done with the building, whether the old hotel is simply to pass on under a new management or whether the building is to be torn down to make room for a larger Cambridge or for an office building.

Last night the old hostelry was in charge of two negro bellboys. The manager was gone; the night clerk wasn't to be found. Mrs. H. W. Walters, the present lessee, the boys said, wasn't in. Mrs. Walters's husband bought the lease several years ago from the estate of Lorenzo Reich, who founded the hotel years ago. Her husband died two years ago, and she continued in the management until the lease expired. It goes out May 1.

LOBBYISTS MUST REGISTER.

Law Regulating Them Believed to be Already in Force.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 28.—It is believed that the provision of the anti-lobbying law applies to legislation immediately and that attorneys and agents who appear before Gov. Higgins in the interest of bills from now to the close of the Legislature must register with the Secretary of State, giving the names of their employers and the legislation in which they are interested.

It is not known whether the bill requires the filing this year of statements of expenses incurred in promoting or opposing legislation.

Cuthbert W. Pound, legal adviser to the Governor, gave it as his unofficial opinion that the law was now in operation and that so far as the registration was concerned it applied to all persons who hereafter desired to appear on legislation.

SPOONER CHAMPIONS INDIANS.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The Senate o-day passed the Indian Appropriation bill. Mr. Spooner was the particular champion of the Indian in preventing the emoval of the restrictions from the allotted lands of the Choctaws, Cherokees, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, except the full bloods. Messrs. Teller, Long, and others, who favored an amendment taking the restrictions off, charged hat Mr. Spooner was misguided in his eal, and the Indians themselves wanted o be permitted to seek a market for their surplus lands.

Mr. Bailey argued that the removal of the restrictions was in the interest of the white sttlers, and the future of Oklahoma and Indian Territory depended upon getting farmers on these lands before the price became too high for the settlers to buy.

The appeal had no effect on Mr. Spooner, who said the entire argument appeared to be for the white man, with nothing for the Indian.

PARIS SALON REFORMS ABOLISH FAVORITISM

NO PRECEDENCE ON THE LINE

A Resume of Some of the Most Notable Canvases in an Exhibition Good Throughout.

PARIS, April 28.—The Salon of the Society of French Artists will open to the public on May 1. Heretofore all members and exhibitors having gained the title of "hors concours" (not competing) have been exempt from passing the Jury of Admission and by tradition were accorded the best places on the line, leaving for the great mass little choice of place except skyward. By the new rules in force this Spring all must now receive a number for place on strict equality. Favoritism has also been abolished in other directions as well. Many who have been first are now last, and many are cast into outer darkness.

The Salon is good throughout, but a serious examination of the merits of each picture worthy of note would be impossible. The following is a résumé of the most notable works:

Barrillot has some good cattle drinking at a ford.

Léon Bonnat has two portraits of men.

Mr. Asppe has two remarkable portraits bearing a strong impress of the English school, with a quality of coloring and handling distinctly personal.

Chartron sends one of the best portraits he has yet shown. It presents an Indian magnate. He has also a splendid portrait of a lady in black.

Henri Caron exhibits a good landscape.

V. Chica has three beautiful Spanish girls, full of light, movement, and color.

A. Dechenaud has a portrait of M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, the Under Secretary of State for Fine Arts.

Edgar Maxence has two heads of women. His "Legend of Brittany" does not lack interest.

P. A. Cross has a landscape, Georges Fauvel a group of bassets, and Gagliardini two fine landscapes.

Aston Knight, in his "The Giant Towns," has made a very ambitious attempt. He presents New York, Paris, and London in his composition.

TABAH BOUNDARY DISPUTE.

NAPLES, April 28.—King Edward and Sir Charles Hardinge, Permanent Under Secretary of the British Foreign Office and former Ambassador to St. Petersburg, who is in attendance upon his Majesty, have received many dispatches from Premier Campbell-Bannerman and Foreign Secretary Grey in regard to their trouble with Turkey over the Tabah boundary dispute.

LONDON, April 28.—The patience of Great Britain with Turkey over the Tabah affair is about exhausted, and, it was understood at the Foreign Office to-day, if the Sultan does not soon accede to the British demands there will be another demonstration before a Turkish port within a short time.

Some months have elapsed since the Egyptian Government discovered that Turkish troops had occupied Tabah, heretofore considered to be an unimportant port at the head of the Gulf of Akabah. Turkey, so Great Britain believes, occupied Tabah because she feared that Egypt, which proposed to extend a short line of railroad to that port, would obtain control of the Gulf of Akabah.

A BIBLE TEXT BOOMERANG.

Boarding House Story Used in House with Unexpected Results.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—A story told on the floor of the House to-day by Representative Cushman of Washington created a good deal of a sensation at the time, and supplied a topic for discussion after the House had adjourned. It was recalled that one of the most distinguished of the three or four men who today hold the highest offices in the Republic once suffered a mortifying defeat for re-election to Congress because of a questionable utterance on the floor of the House. The opinion generally expressed was that Cushman had hurt himself.

He was replying to John Sharp Williams's tariff speech, and was branding it as a "chestnut." He said he had heard Williams deliver the same speech so often that he had got tired of it.

"It reminds me," he continued, "of the young man in the boarding house who had to eat hash three times a day until he got tired of it. Then he asked the landlady to turn to her Bible and read the thirtieth chapter of Hebrews, eighth verse. She did so, and found this:

"Jesus Christ! The same yesterday and to-day and forever."

The House laughed, and this seemed to encourage Cushman, who, turning to Williams and swinging his long arms, shouted:

"Every time I hear the gentleman from Mississippi deliver that speech I say to myself:

"Jesus Christ! The same yesterday and to-day and forever!"

The laugh that he expected did not come. The application of the story came in such a fashion that it seemed to startle the House. There was a dead silence; which disconcerted Cushman a little, but he went on with his speech. There was not a laugh even in the galleries, and several people went out. No utterance quite like that has been heard in the House for years, and there was a great deal of talk about it.

PLEAD FOR COLUMBUS DAY.

New Yorkers Appear Before House Committee on Sulzer Bill.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Honor to the name of Columbus by creating Oct. 12 a National holiday was advocated to-day before the House Committee on Judiciary by a delegation of Italian-Americans of New York and Baltimore.

The hearing was on the Sulzer bill, which creates "Columbus Day." Those who spoke were Antonio Zucca, President of the Italian Chamber of Commerce of New York; Victor L. Zorn, President of the New York Fruit Exchange; Michael A. Refeano, Superintendent of the Italian Tenement House Department, New York; P. P. Acritelli, Coroner, New York; John J. Freschi, attorney; Vito Cortessa, President of the Sons of Columbus; Joseph Rinaldi, President of the Calabro-American Society, and Frank Trerotto.

NEW POST FOR WITTE TALKED OF IN RUSSIA

Report That He Will Be Made Head of Council of the Empire.

CABINET FEARS PEASANTS

Will Try to Appease Discontent Shown in Return of Extreme Radicals to Douma.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 28.—Reports were in circulation to-day that Emperor Nicholas will appoint Premier Witte to be President of the Council of the Empire.

The elections of yesterday show that the tide against the Government is rising instead of subsiding, for instead of a more conservative element, the candidates elected are even more radical in their opinions than those chosen April 8.

A notable feature of the result of the election is the increasing radical character of the representatives chosen by the peasants without the participation of other classes. In many cases the peasants named representatives with views which are even more extreme than those held by the Constitutional Democrats. At Saratoff, the capital of the province of that name, which has been a centre of the agrarian agitation, the peasants chose some of their number who are now on their way to exile in Siberia.

The Government has been trying desperately to win the support of the peasants, realizing that without it the Government will be in a hopeless position. During the preparations for the meeting of Parliament the Government will practically devote its entire attention to appeasing the peasants.

The plan for the solution of the land question, which is the keystone of its policy, is not yet finished, but the Minister of Justice has completed the projects for a law which will be introduced into Parliament immediately and which is designed to remove the evils of village administration which have been especially burdensome to the peasants. The principal of these reforms will be the abolition of the Higher and Lower rural district courts which exercise the greatest tyranny over the communes. It is proposed to supersede them by elected local Judges, besides making the local Government officials responsible for malfeasance in office.

For Universal Two-Cent Postage.

ROME, April 28.—Sir J. G. Ward, the Postmaster General of New Zealand, at to-day's sitting of the International Postal Convention, moved a resolution in favor of a universal two-cent postage, quoting the results obtained in New Zealand by its adoption. The motion was seconded by the Postmaster General of Egypt, and the debate was adjourned until Tuesday.

FRENCH SQUADRON HERE TO PAY CITY A VISIT

Three Cruisers Anchored Near Our Warships in North River.

TO STAY UNTIL WEDNESDAY

Gen. Grant and Admiral Coghlan Visit Admiral Campion — Sailors Get Shore Leave.

The French squadron which participated in the ceremonies attending the burial of the remains of John Paul Jones at Annapolis arrived in the North River yesterday to pay a brief visit to New York on the way home to France.

The fleet is under command of Admiral Campion and is composed of the three strongest armored cruisers in the French Navy, the Marseillaise, (flagship,) the Amiral Aube, and the Condé.

As the vessels steamed up the bay they received and acknowledged salutes from Fort Wadsworth, Governors Island, and all the vessels in the harbor. The French cruisers dropped anchor off Seventy-ninth Street just below the mooring ground of the Pennsylvania, the West Virginia, the Maryland, and the Colorado. The usual courtesies and visits were exchanged between Rear Admiral Willard H. Brownson, in command of the North Atlantic Squadron, and Admiral Campion of the French squadron.

As the two squadrons lay aligned in the river, the contrast between them excited much comment among the crowds who watched the arrival and exchange of salutes. The clean-cut, white, yellow, and gold American ships fulfilled the idea of French smartness rather better than did the real Gallic fleet. Each of the Frenchmen has four funnels that look like lighthouses nipped in the bud. The funnels are set apart, two forward and two aft, a curious arrangement in American eyes.

A reporter who is gifted with no language but his own, was sent yesterday to interview the French Admiral and get acquainted with the crews. Owing to the fact that he spoke no French and the fleet spoke no English, the unhappy reporter was suspected of being a spy, an agent of Toulon Anarchists, or, at least, a vendor of forbidden articles.

At the foot of West Seventy-ninth Street he approached the French officer in charge of the flagship's cutter. He was waved back with many excited gestures. The reporter tried an American sentry who said he would be glad to see him aboard the Marseillaise, but neither he nor anybody else knew just what the Frenchmen's plans were.

"I've no doubt they've got some," said he, "but they don't seem able to tell anybody what they are and we don't seem able to ask 'em. I only know that no visitors will be received before to-morrow."

The reporter then hired a launch and approached the big foreign cruiser. As the launch approached the Marseillaise, a gilded cutter ran up to the gangway. A tall man, resplendent in gold lace, mounted to the rail where a sentinel stood at attention. The sentry looked like a figure out of one of Meissonnier's pictures. Hundreds of other illustrations lined up to receive Admiral Campion, while behind the sentinel the second contre-maître, alias the bos'n, piped something appropriate.

Discouraged by the sentry, the reporter went to the windward side where a rope-ladder hung close to the water. He scrambled up that and in a moment was on deck, face to face with a big man armed with a bristling beard and a fixed bayonet. He exclaimed something in French; the reporter tried to explain in English; but neither understood the other. The sentry called out something. Six officers in gold lace and scores of men bore down on the reporter, who backed to the rail only to find that his launch was half way to the shore.

The reporter then wrote his name and the name of his paper. It was eagerly snatched, examined and carried to a superior officer, who read it carefully and gave it to still another superior officer, who in turn bore it the Admiral.

In a little while a reply came back which was apparently that the Admiral sent "a thousand regrets," that he was very tired, (this was conveyed by a weary rolling of the eyes,) but that he would be glad to see the reporter "demain."

The one who brought the message from the Admiral was a young man named Hué, who wrote down his name. The reporter put the paper in his pocket and started to explore the cruiser. He was followed everywhere by M. Hué and a detachment of bayonet bearers.

The reporter examined the guns, the torpedoes, and the signaling apparatus, while M. Hué and his comrades stood by, watching uneasily.

The interior of a French war vessel is more or less like a first lesson in French all the way through. Over one door one reads that this is "the galley of the cook of the food of the First Officer Lieutenant," and again that this is "the house of the master of the armory." On the lighthouse funnels in great letters are printed:

"Valeur—Discipline."

"Honeur et Patrie."

From the Manhattan or Jersey shore any one with ordinary eyesight may distinguish the big-lettered names of the ships on the bows of the French cruisers. Everything is in strange contrast to the severe, businesslike aspect of the American ships.

But the French warships now here are as fully equipped fighting machines as any. Wherever one may go on the Marseillaise the marks of modernity stand forth in the tremendous guns, the Maxims, torpedo shafts, searchlights, five-inch steel-walled gunrooms, and so on. The warships are apparently fully prepared for an emergency of any kind. It was said that they were armed as for war when they left France. Big and little torpedoes were to be seen everywhere, ready for action.

The sailor is in some particulars the same the world over. In the shadow of the superstructure there were many at recreation, some ironing their clothes, others darning their socks, while yet others, with paper pads on their knees, laboriously penciled letters to sweethearts in Touraine or mothers in Provence.

Three of them sat between decks playing a simple game of "grab." When black crowned black and the wiry brown arms shot out to take the pile of cards, the air was rent with shrieks, in the midst of which one of the players invariably stood up and denounced himself for a fool in all stages.

Last night many of the sailors got shore leave. They did not mingle with Americans until in the early hours of this morning when neither cared what the other was talking about. For the most part, the Frenchmen congregated in the lower Tenderloin, where the French have a colony. The French dining places were filled with them, while many orchestras played French airs at some time of the night.

The last misunderstanding the reporter had on the French flagship was just as he was leaving. The flagship band began to play its national and self-honoring war song. The reporter, who knew no French but two lines of that song, looked M. Hué in the face and chanted:

Allons, enfants de la patrie;
Le jour de gloire est arrive!

"A-a-ah!" cried M. Hué with enthusiasm.

Then his face darkened and he said something to the men with the bayonets which made them look grave. The group of officers came forward again, all talking quickly. When the reporter pushed off in the launch there was a light in their eyes which said that they had been deceived; that he was either a spy, a vendor of forbidden articles, or an agent of Toulon Anarchists.

The Mayor was out of town yesterday, and therefore no official courtesies were extended by the city. These will be observed when Mr. McClellan returns. Admiral Coghlan and Gen. Grant have paid their respects and are planning entertainment for the fleet, which will remain here until Wednesday. The French Consul General is arranging a banquet, while on Tuesday evening the officers of the fleet will dine on board the new French liner La Provence.

SCANT WELCOME FOR DOWIE.

Zionites Ignore His Return—Voliva Denounces Wife of Prophet.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 28.—John Alexander Dowie entered Zion City this afternoon at 3 o'clock. A heavy rainstorm burst over the town as he alighted from his private car. Only 125 persons greeted him.

Mrs. Dowie did not go to the station, but she opened the door of Shiloh House for him and took his hand as he crossed the threshold. Gladstone Dowie took no part in the welcome, and it was said that he had left Shiloh House.

Of the persons who met Dowie at the Zion City station, about twenty-five were children and about an equal number were curiosity seekers from the neighboring country. The others were the loyal Dowieites of the town. Overseer Voliva was in his office in the administration building when the train pulled in. He did not pause from work, and, following his example and his order, the rest of the community proceeded as usual. There was no cheering, though a murmur of greeting and applause arose as the former leader appeared first in view.

"I want to thank you," began Dr. Dowie, from the steps of Shiloh House, as soon as he had recovered the breath spent in the short walk. "I desire with all my heart to thank you for these words of greeting. It is not fitting that I should speak to you at length at this time, and I regret that the afternoon is too short for the opportunity.

"I shall hope to meet you all in the morning at our early service of sacrifice and praise at 6:30 o'clock, and again in the afternoon at 2 o'clock. I have done nothing since I saw your faces last to be ashamed of. Not one of the accusations against me is true. Peace be to thee."

Wilbur Glenn Voliva and his followers held a meeting in the Tabernacle to-night, the auditorium being about two-thirds full. In an address Voliva not only denounced Dowie, but Mrs. Dowie as well. He said:

"I do not propose to permit any sinner in this movement to escape. Do not think that Dowie is the only one to be called to account. The next one will be Mrs. Jane Dowie. In some respects she is as great a sinner as Dowie. She is on his side to-night, and always has been. The lust in her heart for power is as great as in his. I say the whole Dowie family must be swept off the earth."

This statement was roundly applauded.

ONE MANAGER'S EXPERIENCE.

A Picturesque Incident of Early Travel in the South.

A New York theatre manager who used to travel a good deal told a curious story the other night of an experience he had years ago in the South.

"In those days," he said, "our longest Southern stand was, of course, Richmond, Va., and we used to stay there sometimes two or three weeks. The principal theatre in Richmond was a big, old-fashioned affair that had never been remodeled. The only way to get from the box office to the stage was by way of the outer stage door. You had to go completely around the building through a dark passage that for part of the way was entirely out of sight of either street.

"On Friday nights, after the performance, when we carried the money in a little canvas bag around from the box office to pay the company on the stage, we used to joke about the probability of being held up in that dark alley.

"But nothing had ever happened, and we had done it week after week and season after season.

"One year, however, when I arrived in Richmond with a rather larger company than usual, one of the first things I heard was that the previous week somebody had tried to hold up the manager of a traveling company in that same passageway as he was going back to pay salaries. The robbers were frightened away and got nothing. But the city was much stirred up over it, and the Mayor and the chief local Judge had decided to offer a reward of $100 for the capture of the offenders.

"Lightning and thieves rarely strike twice in the same place, in successive weeks, at any rate, so I thought little more about the matter. And I was much surprised the next Friday evening on my accustomed midnight walk with the money bag to find a couple of dark forms barring the way in the middle of that passage. They had revolvers, but they looked like mere boys, and I didn't believe they'd dare shoot. I was pretty heavy in those days, so I thought I'd take a chance. I put my head down, threw my shoulders forward, and went through those two chaps like a Holstein bull, at the same time making a grab for their revolvers.

"The stage door happened to be open, and the stage hands, hearing the scuffle, rushed out. We had no trouble at all in securing the boys, for boys of 18 and 20 years they proved to be, and getting them locked up for the night.

"They wouldn't give their names then, but next morning they turned out to be the only two sons of the old Judge who had offered the reward. I was for letting them off with a good licking. But the Judge, who was a tall, white-haired Southerner of the old school, said sternly, 'No!' He stood up behind the desk of that courtroom and gave both those boys six years in the penitentiary. One died there two years later. I shall never forget the fine old Brutus figure he made just after he had sentenced them—standing with his jaw set and his figure tall, deep-set eyes looking after them as they were led out, while one hand fumbled tremblingly at his white stock."

CITY SHY ON SENATORS BY NEW APPORTIONMENT

KIND TO KINGS COUNTY

Over There They Get Eight Senators to Manhattan's Twelve—Will Shake Tammany Leaders Up.

Under the new apportionment plan, which has been approved by the Republican legislative caucuses, Greater New York will get but twenty-one Senators out of a total of fifty-one, although the State census of 1905 showed that the city's population is approximately one-half of the population of the State.

According to last year's census the population of the State entire was 8,066,672, while that of New York, Kings, Queens, and Richmond Counties alone was 4,014,304. In addition to these counties New York City includes a few election districts of Westchester County, the population of which, deducted from the up-State figures and added to those of the city, would give it fully one-half of the total State vote, probably slightly more. Thus on a basis of population New York City would have on any fair apportionment either twenty-five or twenty-six Senators, probably the latter.

By the Constitution, New York and Kings Counties, or either of those counties by itself, never could control the State Senate, for the Constitution, framed by Joseph H. Choate and Elihu Root in 1894, expressly provides that no one county of the State ever should have more than one-third of the members of the Senate, and that no two adjoining counties, or counties separated only by public waters, should ever have more than one-half of the Senate.

Under that basis New York could not have more than seventeen of the fifty-one Senators now provided for, and New York and Kings together could not have more than twenty-five Senators. This latter total they could have had, however, had the Republican powers so desired.

The Senate representation of the greater city has actually been held stationary under the new apportionment, in spite of the fact that a new district has been created in Kings County. At the present time Greater New York has twenty-two Senators out of a total of fifty. Nineteen of them represent districts wholly within the city limits, while three others have districts that include some city territory and some territory outside the city line.

For instance, Senator Keenan of the Second District represents all of Queens County and the County of Nassau, the latter not being city territory. Senator Burr of the First Senate District represents Suffolk and Richmond Counties, the former being rural territory and Richmond being in the greater city. Senator Carpenter of the Twenty-second District represents Westchester County, a small part of which is within the city limits.

Under the new apportionment the city has twenty-one Senators whose districts are entirely within the city limits, and then there is the new Twenty-third Senate District, which covers Westchester County, with its few election districts in the city limits. The Richmond, Suffolk, Queens, and Nassau County muddle is straightened out by giving to Senator Burr Suffolk and Nassau Counties, and thus framing a district wholly without the city, and joining Queens and Richmond, instead of having the districts Queens-Nassau and Suffolk-Richmond.

By this change, however, the city representation receives a blow, as the Queens-Richmond district, as framed, has a population of 271,087, of whom 246,187 are non-aliens. This, in point of population, is the biggest district of the State. Compared with it is the new Forty-third Senate District, composed of Cayuga, Seneca, and Yates Counties, with its non-alien population of 97,717. Five of the newly laid-out districts up the State have less than 110,000 population of non-aliens, and only four of the up-State districts have 150,000 or more population.

To what extent this sort of thing is carried may be seen in the fact that the Legislature has even declined to treat Manhattan and the Bronx as well as it treats Brooklyn. To New York County, with its population of 2,384,826, is given only twelve Senators, while to Kings County, with a population of 1,358,891, is given eight Senators. Brooklyn goes Republican frequently, while New York has gone straight Republican only twice in its history.

That the city could get a more liberal apportionment without injuring the Republican control of the Senate, under present conditions, however, is apparent. Were New York City to get twenty-six Senators, the up-State Senators would number twenty-five. Of the twenty-five up-State districts, twenty-four would be Republican under present conditions, because the Democrats long have been unable to capture any up-State district except one in Erie County, with its City of Buffalo.

Of the twenty-six Senators in Greater New York the Republicans would be sure to capture seven under any normal conditions, leaving twenty to the Democrats. This would mean that on a fair apportionment according to population the Republicans still would control the Senate by a vote of 31 to 20.

Several interesting features of the apportionment and its effect on Tammany Hall were pointed out yesterday. In the first place, Alderman "Little Tim" Sullivan of the Sixth District is thrown into a new Assembly district with John T. Oakley, leader of the present Fourteenth, and P. J. Ryder, leader of the Third District.

Oakley is put out of business by having his district divided among five other present districts, the Second, Sixth, Tenth, Eighteenth, and Sixteenth. Ryder will retire also, and "Little Tim" Sullivan will probably be the leader of the new district. There is some talk that Oakley may move into the district now within the Tenth Assembly District, and give battle to Coroner Harburger for the leadership, but nothing is settled.

The new Sullivan Senate district, in which "Big Tim" Sullivan will appear this Fall as the Senate nominee, includes the present Ninth, Seventh, most of the present Third, most of the present Sixth, the lower part of the present Fourteenth, and a small part of the present Fifth Assembly Districts.

Daniel E. Finn, John F. Ahearn, and Thomas F. Foley all are put into a new Senate district, which, however, as it will be divided into three Assembly districts, will permit them to retain their present district leaderships, but of slightly different territory. The Senate district will include a small part of the present Sixth Assembly District, with the bulk of the Eighth, Tenth, and a part of the Twelfth Districts. Charles F. Murphy's new Assembly district will take in all of his present Eighteenth district, with a part of the Fourteenth and a slice of the Tenth. Murphy will be put into a Senate district made up of his present Eighteenth district, the upper half of the present Fourteenth, the present Twentieth, Twenty-second, and the southern part of the Twenty-fourth.

There is bound to be great confusion in arranging for the primaries this Fall, as the Republican County and the Tammany General Committees will have to be reorganized after the primaries on the basis of the new districts. The election of delegates to the State Convention, on the other hand, will have to be on the basis of the present apportionment. The Democratic State Convention, however, will then have to arrange its new State Committee on the basis of the new apportionment.

Col. Michael J. Dady, who is regarded as ex-Gov. Odell's representative in Brooklyn, expressed dissatisfaction yesterday with the reapportionment plans for Senate districts in Kings County, and talked of a stiff fight against them at Albany.

"The lines for the districts," said Col. Dady, "are all wrong. I am confident that before the Legislature gets through with the plan it will be very materially changed."

BY THE BROADSWORD ROUTE.

Woman Porter of "Vanderbilt Cup" Used to be a Professional Fencer.

"Incogs" are easily managed among stage people. Probably few theatregoers have recognized in Ella Hattan, who plays Kate, the stalwart woman porter, in "The Vanderbilt Cup," a professional fencer who used to be known far and wide as "Jaguarina." She has a record of some forty-two broadsword contests on foot and on horse throughout the United States. Among her victories were those over Sergt. Owen Davis, United States Cavalry, and Capt. E. M. Jennings, in San Francisco some twelve years ago. Her last match was in Milwaukee, where she defeated Sergt. Charles Walsh of Boston, Mass., knocking him off his horse after a vigorous bout.

Miss Hattan went on the stage when she was 8 years old, and was for many years under the protection of Manager John Ellsler. One of her first rôles was Fadette, and in her younger days Mr. Ellsler himself used to make her up when it was too difficult for her to do it herself. While in Chicago she came under the notice of the fencing master, Col. Thomas H. Monstery, who used to be known as the "Modern D'Artagnan." The Colonel declared he would make the little girl the greatest woman fencer of her time, and from him she learned all she knew of the art.

Miss Hattan is fond of recalling one of her early stage experiences with Frank I. Frayne in "Cy Slocum." In the scene in which a band of riotous road agents made Slocum shoot an apple from his wife's head with a backward shot, sighted in a mirror, Mrs. Frayne used to play the risky part of the lady under the apple. One night Mrs. Frayne was taken suddenly ill. No one thought of asking anybody else to take her place in that particular ordeal, and the scene, which was of course the "thriller" of the piece, was about to be cut out, when Miss Hattan volunteered.

Frayne grasped eagerly at the offer, assured her there was no danger, and for two weeks in Indianapolis she played the somewhat nerve-racking rôle. Then, for some reason or other, she had to play another part, and the next week in Cincinnati the new substitute in the apple-shooting scene was badly wounded because she lost her nerve and flinched at the critical moment.

"But my bullet and sword days are over," declares Miss Hattan. "For the past five years I have been living a peaceful life. I always managed to keep my sword play and my stage work so distinct that lots of people never knew 'Jaguarina' and Ella Hattan had anything to do with each other. Now, it is seldom that any one spies out 'Jaguarina' across the footlights, but when they do, I always own up and congratulate them on their sharpness."

PROOF THAT HEPBURN ASKED.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The tariff discussion started in the House on Thursday afternoon, occupied practically all the time of the session to-day, until the House adjourned, at 3:30 o'clock in order, as Gen. Grosvenor put it, "to go to the ball game."

John Sharp Williams ended the speech he began yesterday, and consumed the first two hours in a two-star performance with Representative Towne of New York, in which Towne read the letters and other articles Williams wanted to include, and Williams, standing beside his assistant, kept up a running fire of interjectory comment, explanation, and argument.

For the first half hour of his talk to-day Mr. Williams devoted himself to demolishing Mr. Boutell's explanation of the watch-trust speech of Mr. Rainey. He showed by numerous examples how other concerns than the watch trust make a business of selling cheaper abroad than at home, and emphasized his demand for a revision of the tariff that shall make such practices impossible.

At last Mr. Boutell interrupted with a prepared question, which he read. He appealed to Williams to answer it as an economist, not as a partisan. He wanted to know whether it was not true that whenever the difference between the foreign and domestic selling prices was greater than the cost of transportation back from the foreign market to the domestic market, the goods would inevitably come back home and compete in the domestic market with the goods originally sold here.

"That is exactly what did happen in the watch case," replied Williams. "It was because those watches were sold abroad at a price low enough to enable their purchaser to pay for bringing them back that they were reimported and sold in the open market here for less than the trust prices for goods originally sold here."

"Oh, you can't dodge these facts any longer," cried Williams, shaking his fist at the Republican side. "You have got to defend this system or destroy it. You have got to reduce the tariff to the point where this thing will be stopped, or you must go to the country and justify it. You can neither deny the fact nor get out of it, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Boutell] attempted to get out of it. He was like the man who was accused of stealing a horse. First, he tried to prove an alibi. Then he tried to prove his own good character, then he tried several other things, but they crowded him and crowded him, until at last he said:

"'Well, I did steal the beast. But, boys, remember my poor mother, think of my wife and my little children. I did steal that beast, but it wasn't a very big horse. It was nothing but a colt, and the colt of a Mexican pony at that!'"

Mr. Williams also turned his attention to giving some of the proof that Col. Hepburn asked for the other day. Hepburn was challenging the assertion by Rainey that the Steel Trust sold rails cheaper abroad than at home. The proof offered by Mr. Williams was largely documentary. It was partly in the shape of testimony at hearings before Congressional committees, the first quotation being from Lewis Nixon, who said that ship plates had been sold for export at a considerable reduction from the domestic price. Then Mr. Williams had Mr. Towne read a letter from the President of a Georgia railroad, telling how the trust had made him pay $33,000 more for the rails for a fifty-mile extension than the same rails would have cost a foreign purchaser.

To that Mr. Williams added a letter from the President of the Mexican National Railroad, which has lines in Mexico and in the United States. The letter said that the road had bought rails for its Mexican lines at $24 a ton, delivered in Tampico, but had had to pay $28 a ton at the mills for rails used in the United States.

Toward the close of his speech Mr. Williams made this statement of his personal conviction:

"I would rather pay a direct tax and have it given out by the Government every week to the poor men working at less than fairly remunerative wages, than pay this indirect tax and have it go into the pockets of these favored trust magnates. It is no more Socialism than the present method. You say you are levying a duty to procure better pay for workingmen, but that is not the truth. It is a tax for the benefit of men who see to it that mighty little of it dribbles through to the workingmen."

TROWMART INN'S USEFULNESS.

It Fills a Place Heretofore Absolutely Unoccupied.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to your query, "Will it meet the needs of the majority of the working girls?" (referring to Trowmart Inn,) I would say that it will meet a need which has long been evident not only to the working girls, but also to those who are interested in them and wish to help them.

One would infer from Mr. Clark's letter that he was not aware that there are places in New York City where girls earning small wages can obtain board at prices within their reach.

If one takes the trouble to investigate one will probably be surprised at the number of such places one will find. There are at least two on Fourteenth Street; there are three on Seventeenth Street; the Methodist Episcopal Church has one, the Roman Catholic Church has one or more, and I know of several more of which there is not space to write, and I presume there are many of which I have not heard.

At all of the places mentioned board ranges from $2.50 to $3.75 a week, according to the number of girls sharing a room and the floor on which said room is located. To be sure, most of these places savor too much of the "institution" and personal liberty is almost lost sight of, owing to the inevitable "red tape," yet on the whole (and the writer speaks from personal experience, having been obliged to live in such places when earning small salaries) they provide good, clean accommodations, and in some instances extremely good food, considering the amount of board paid.

Living in a place of this kind, one can manage very nicely on a very low salary. The writer once worked seven months for $4.50 a week, upon which sum she was absolutely dependent, and not only met all expenses but saved a dollar a month. She paid $3 a week for her board, did her own washing, walked to work, carried a luncheon provided by the house, and made her own clothes, &c. She had to figure closely, but she managed, as do other girls when they have to.

Such boarding houses are, however, necessarily charitable; it being practically impossible to make them even self-supporting, let alone profitable. Some of those mentioned meet all running expenses excepting the rent, which is paid either by interested individuals or by an organization incorporated for the purpose.

These very low-priced boarding houses fill a long-felt want, and, numerous as they are, there is need of more of them, but the crying need for some time has been for a place such as I understand Trowmart Inn aims to be. If I am correctly informed, Trowmart Inn expects to provide working girls with good food and comfortable accommodations at a nominal price without obliging the girl to feel that she is under great obligations and getting what she does not pay for. I am told that Trowmart Inn will meet all expenses and make a little besides.

It has long been evident to those interested in the subject that girls earning from $7 to $9 a week were worse off than those who earn $5 or $6, for the former are barred from all places where board is obtained as low as $3.75 a week, and the next price seems to be $6 and $7, with no laundry privileges. Any one who has tried to find board for from $4 to $5 knows from sad experience that the person who obtains it is to be congratulated. One may succeed if one goes far uptown or into the suburbs, but there carfare will bring it up to a higher figure.

Then, too, it must be remembered that the more a girl earns the more she will have to spend for clothes. The clothes worn by the writer when working for $4.50 a week would not be suitable to wear in a first-class office, nor can she bring a luncheon and eat it in the office, as she did then. Her present salary is much larger than the former, yet she does not save much more in proportion, and she is not at all extravagant. This state of affairs often tends to crush ambition and make a girl regret an increase in her salary, since it only means that she must leave her comfortable quarters and probably in sheer desperation resort to doing her own cooking in a small furnished room. Dozens of girls ruin their health in this way, and almost starve in the effort to make "both ends meet." In view of these facts one can readily see that Trowmart Inn will undoubtedly fill a need as real as though its prices were much lower.

ANSWER OF OPERATORS DISCUSSED BY MITCHELL

Railroad Domination to Blame for Anthracite Conditions.

NO CONCESSIONS THE POLICY

Strikes of the Past No Lesson to Mine Owners—Employes Expected More Consideration.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., April 28.—President Mitchell gave out the following statement to-day:

"I have received, read, and formally acknowledged President Baer's answer to the last demands made upon the operators by the miners. It appears perfectly evident that the operators have not changed their attitude in any particular during the past six years, and that the strikes of 1900 and 1902 were no lesson to them.

"There is no instance on record during the quarter of a century in which the railroads have dominated the anthracite industry that an advance in wages has been granted to their employes. Every concession has been wrung from them by strikes and the pressure of public sentiment.

"The railroad coal combination not only fixes arbitrarily the price at which coal is sold to consumers, but seeks to fix arbitrarily the price at which labor shall be bought. It seems that every conciliatory overture we have made for a peaceful settlement has been interpreted by the operators as a sign of weakness and our conservatism as an evidence of cowardice.

"The question is asked by the operators where is the advance to come from if it is not charged up to the consumer of domestic coal.

"It occurs to me that the small advance proposed by the miners might have been taken off the exorbitant freight rates charged by them. What the outcome will be cannot be predicted until the convention is held.

"Personally I am much disappointed, and I am sure all mine employes expected more consideration than they have received."

President Mitchell said he had called a meeting of the miners' sub-scale committee to meet here or at Scranton on Monday and the latest reply of the operators will be submitted to the committee. Mr. Mitchell would not say whether all correspondence with the operators was at an end. He will remain here until Tuesday, when he will go to Scranton to be in readiness for the convention of miners which meets there on Thursday next.

President Mitchell was asked whether the answer of the operators threw any light upon the question of arbitration.

"I still maintain, and I cannot see it in any other way, but that it is simply a proposition to arbitrate whether or not there is anything to arbitrate," replied the miners' leader.

"Are the operators' figures accurate concerning the increase in the price of coal—36 cents a ton—in the event of your second proposition being accepted?"

"I cannot see it in that light. I feel positive that it would not be more than 18 or 19 cents a ton, basing it on the probable advance in the minimum of the sliding scale," was his answer.

TOUR FOR MISS PARKINA.

Protege of Mme. Melba Will Come to America Next Season.

Miss Parkina, a young American singer, is to make an operatic concert tour, beginning next October, under S. Kronberg, recently manager of Mme. Calvé. Miss Parkina is known as a protégé of Mme. Melba, through whose influence a concert tour of Australia was made by her last season. Miss Parkina is now engaged for her fourth season at Covent Garden, London.

She is a Kansas City girl, a daughter of Judge Parkinson. The quality of her voice was discovered when she was very young, attracting such attention that a benefit was given for her. With the assistance of a wealthy great-aunt, living in Philadelphia, she was sent to Mme. Marchesi in Paris. She made her operatic début there in "Lakmé." Her most remarkable experience was last season, when, on her way to Australia, she appeared in her own city in Convention Hall before a great audience.

NEW EDUCATION BILL ROUSES THE BRITONS

May Lead to Abolition of Sectarian Teaching in Schools.

IMPORTANT LABOR MEASURES

One Protects Unions from Legal Liability in Organizing Strikes—Gas as Motive Power for Ships.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 14.—The Government, in bringing in the new Education bill, and then adjourning Parliament for the Easter holidays, has given us all an opportunity for thinking, meantime, over the measure in its various bearings. Already it has raised a hornet's nest about the ears of the Administration. All along the line the murmurings of mutiny may be heard, and a lively time is expected when Parliament again meets.

Prior to the introduction of the bill, two labor bills, the Trades Disputes bill and the Workmen's Compensation bill, provided the topic of the hour; but both have been overshadowed by the Education measure.

The bill puts all public elementary schools under the control of local authorities, takes away from the church the privilege of having its dogmas taught in the schools classified as "voluntary," and confines all religious instruction to the teaching of the Bible without regard to any particular creed. At present nonsectarian teaching has been laid down only in the "board" schools, which differ from the "voluntary" schools in being supported by an exchequer grant and the local taxes and controlled by a school board.

The "voluntary" schools also receive a grant, but have depended for the rest of their local income on voluntary contributions. As being affiliated to parish churches, they have been the breeding ground for the Established Church, but as educational forces the "board" schools have outstripped them long ago. They became so poor, in fact, that in 1902 Mr. Balfour put them on the local taxes; thus contravening the Education act of 1870, which provided that no sectarian teaching was to be taught in local tax-aided schools.

The Nonconformists strenuously opposed the payment of the extra education tax thus levied, which went in support of the upkeep of schools where the religion of the Church only was taught, and as "passive resisters," as they were styled, many went to jail and had their goods destrained rather than pay. The measure, therefore, is a sop to the Nonconformists.

But the Church is naturally up in arms, and is not going to take any beating lying down. Jews, Anglicans, Catholics, agnostics, secularists, and Nonconformists have alike hurled themselves into the fray. It looks as though the knell of sectarian teaching in schools has been sounded by the bill, and that ultimately State education in this country will be framed on the undenominational lines followed in the United States. The strife might well even in the teaching of Holy Writ being excluded altogether, and education be wholly secular, for there are forces in Parliament strongly in favor of religion having no part in the school syllabus at all.

THE INNINGS OF LABOR.

The two labor bills referred to show that the British workman is pretty well having his own way with the Government. However much or little the late Unionist administration deserved well of the country by doing nothing in the way of labor legislation, and doing it very well, the present Government seems anxious to do a great deal at the risk of doing it very badly.

In toeing the line to the trades' unions by assenting to the clause in the Trades' Disputes bill, which protects them from legal liability for their acts in organizing strikes, while the unions may take action against individuals who cannot take action against them, the Government is countenancing a proposition which is regarded as a craven submission to arbitrary dictation. But there it is, and is likely to find its way on to the statute book if the House of Lords does not amend the clause.

Certainly a body of opinion exists which holds that the courts have done badly by the trades unions, and a larger humanitarianism reveals itself out of the burly-burly of politics, which rather recoils from forcing the unions to be placed within a category by which their failure in an action at law or two would play havoc with funds laboriously collected. The fear lies in the abuse the unions may make of their privileged position.

On equitable grounds, and on the principle which President Roosevelt has been credited with laying down, that trades unions have the same rights as any other organization, but no more, they are clearly asking for more than their due. Punch this week depicts the position in a cartoon, which illustrates blind justice holding the scales of "capital" and "trades unions" evenly poised, who is thus addressed by labor: "Excuse me, mum, but I don't like the hand of your scales. I think you will find this pair works better for me," and he points to the pair he is holding, with the trades union scale outweighing that of capital considerably.

There are 739 separate trades unions in the United Kingdom, according to the report of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies on the unions and their funds, which has just been published, but only for 1904. Of these 93 do not send in any returns, and they may apparently be counted as small and unimportant, as the 646 which do include all the well-known and wealthy organisations.

It is shown that the aggregate membership at the end of the year named was 1,344,461, the income $12,429,190, and the expenditure $11,738,995. The accumulated funds then amounted to $26,929,620, about $650,000 more than at the end of 1903—an impressive example of the dimensions to which the hoarded dimes of workmen can reach. These figures do not tell much except perhaps that much of the current income must have been devoted to benefit work, as the expenditure runs the revenue pretty close in a year not marked for any great strikes drawing on the unions' reserves.

It is suggested that the unions should allocate an equally large proportion of their reserves for benevolent and provident purposes, and the rest to be used as fighting funds, and as such be exposed to the risks entailed by fighting. There is, in fact, an amendment to the bill to this effect. Such a course seems to offer a solution to the dead-lock; but the unions decline to weaken their power by earmarking their funds in this way. They want to throw all their financial force into the fray without risk of counter-attack.

Workmen's Compensation.

As inspiring a public sympathy which does not so much conflict with the public sense of justice, the other new labor bill is less open to objection. It aims at broadening the scope of existing legislation in respect of the liability of employers to pay compensation to their workmen. Previous acts only cover accidents, and define certain trades. The new bill extends to diseases, such as lead poisoning, incurred by employes incidental to their work. It also covers practically all classes of workmen, and some, in fact, who cannot be so defined at all. Only domestic servants and clerks are excluded.

The small employer with five shophands alone goes scot free from being affected by the provisions of the new act, as being too poor to pay compensation, though the small farmer is not so exempt. Altogether the new measure promises to effect an immense impetus toward compulsory insurance.

An interesting development in ship-propulsion has been engaging the attention of the Institution of British Naval Architects this week, before whom J. E. Thornycroft read a paper on the subject of employing gas engines for marine purposes.

This is a new departure, and the innovation inspires much faith. Indeed, the chairman of one of the largest shipping companies in the United Kingdom told me some months ago that in the future all ships would be propelled by gas engines. As owning a large number of tramp steamers, gas engines plainly appealed to him as offering great economies in working (as they undoubtedly do,) especially in such an uncertain class of trade. Sir William White, late chief naval constructor of the British Navy, also thinks that the gas engines will play an important part in marine engineering.

It is only two years ago since Herr Emil Capitaine, the inventor of the new system, made experiments with his first boat. While gas-driven little vessels are not wholly novel on inland waterways of the Continent, and have been tried quite recently on English canals with very satisfactory results, the Capitaine boat, as far as is known, is the only vessel fitted with a gas engine and producer to run in the open sea.

For purposes of camparison, a gas-driven boat, fitted with a four-cylinder seventy horse-power suction gas plant, and a steam tug, fitted with a triple-expansion engine developing seventy-five horse power, and of nearly the same dimensions, were run from Hamburg to Kiel and back in bad weather at a maintained speed of 8½ knots. Measured for a period of ten hours the consumption of fuel was—for the gas boat, 1,530 pounds of German anhracite coal, and for the steam tug 1,820 pounds of steam coal, or a fuel economy of 1 to 3.44 in favor of the gas plant. A Scotch firm of shipbuilders, William Beardmore & Co., are demonstrating the possibility of using gas plants for large powers, and are constructing engines of 500 to 1,000 horse power, to run at a speed of about 130 revolutions per minute. A marked saving in cubic feet of machinery space, as well as in weight, is effected by installing gas plants on cargo boats.

AMERICAN WIVES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your comment upon my letter touching the American wife's annual desertion of her husband you "pulled your drive" a bit. Just how much any one interested can easily determine for his or her self.

Conditions have changed, but the change in the matter of "speed and comfort in travel" has at least equaled the other changes. It is quite as easy to-day for the family, that really desires it, to remain a unit all the year round as it was forty or more years ago. The family no longer desires it. It involves certain sacrifices on the part of husband and wife that neither is willing to make.

It is pitiably true that both have come to enjoy their freedom. The blame is mutual. To their credit, be is said, both have been content, in the main, to enjoy without abusing this freedom. The very first lesson that the American husband and wife begin to teach each other is, how well each can get along without the other—the man on the plea of business necessity, the woman on the plea of comfort and pleasure.

In a way the man learns slowly, but that he does learn there can be little doubt. As yet, the American wife has all the best of it, but if the man once learns the lesson, as he surely will, what then? We talk much and largely of the menace of trusts and graft to our civilization. As long as the family life of our people remains pure and wholesome trusts and graft are passing evils; we can and will deal with them as we have dealt with other passing evils. But once let the American man fully learn his lesson and relegate his wife to the traditional, though fortunately for the French, not the actual, position of the French wife, and we see the end of the Anglo-Saxon ideal of civilization, as far as we are concerned.

There be country "jays" who will say "what is true of wicked New York is not, thank God, true of our country." But the forty or more American wives who were introduced to a certain bewildered Frenchman did not hail from the metropolis. When he innocently asked if all American husbands died young, he was hitting more than wicked New York. I was, myself, not so very long ago, an unhappy inmate of a foreign "pension" where there were some forty American wives whose husbands had remained at the grindstone. Only two of the forty hailed from wicked New York. JAX.

Northampton, Mass., April 27, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Englishwoman's letters are most interesting, and as an Englishman (now a United States citizen) who has lived nearly an equal number of years in both countries I can fully testify to their fairness. On the whole they give an accurate picture of the American man's slavery to the dollar—and his wife. The absence of the wife and children in Europe or our great resorts for months a year is a prolific cause of a large part of the scandals and divorces. Young, beautiful, well-dressed women with plenty of money, married, (therefore safe,) are the prey of the roué and the rounder. The man grinding all day to send the dollars to his wife to enable her to keep up her extravagant life away from home is not (in our Summer days) living lonely in his club or bachelor apartment. There are frequent visits to the roof gardens and Coney Island, and the double life begins.

CITY BREVITIES.

Cable advices received at the offices of the Hamburg-American Line here announce that its steamship Amerika left Cherbourg at 11:45 o'clock last night with 770 cabin and 1,863 steerage passengers, and about 600 bags of mail. SONS OF IOWA DINE AND LAUD THEIR STATE

Great in Everything, Orators at First Annual Banquet Say.

NAME PRONOUNCED "IOWAY"

Hepburn Tells About Prairie Schooners He and Gen. Clarkson Rode In—Cheers for Gen. Dodge.

The Iowa Society of New York held its first annual dinner in the Astor Gallery at the Waldorf-Astoria last night. More than 200 ex-Iowans were present. Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, the society's President, was toastmaster.

Sitting at the guests' table were T. P. Shonts, head of the Panama Canal Commission; Congressmen Walter I. Smith, William P. Hepburn, John F. Lacey, J. A. T. Hull, and Elbert H. Hubbard; ex-Judge John F. Dillon and the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, all ex-Iowans. Among the other guests were ex-Gov. Odell, ex-Gov. E. P. Savage of Nebraska, and ex-Gov. Manning of Iowa.

At the outset guests of the society, other than native Iowans, learned that the proper way to pronounce Iowa is Io-way.

Gen. Dodge, after reading telegrams of regret from Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury Shaw, and Senator W. B. Allison, referred briefly to the founding of the organization. Judge Dillon responded to the toast "The Pioncer Judges and lawyers of Iowa." He eulogized at length the late Judges Mason, Miller, Lore, and Wright. Judge Dillon is general counsel of the Gould system of railroads.

The Rev. Dr. Hillis, called upon to speak to the toast "All Iowans," said Iowa is eminent among the States because its founders were advocates of the highest education.

Congressman Hepburn responded to "The Prairie Schooner."

"I know something about prairie schooners," he said, "because I helped to navigate one of them. I see before me a gentleman whom I saw in one of those vehicles with his father some fifty years ago. I refer to Gen. Clarkson, the Surveyor of the Port. If we can praise the prairie schooner for nothing else, we can praise it for taking the Clarksons into Iowa.

"Iowa is a great State. No State is in advance of it in recognizing the status of the wife, in regard to the control of her property, her children, and so on. I cannot refrain from speaking of the joy of all Iowans when they learned that their State was to be liberated by having four lines of railroad run through it."

Congressman Lacey, in speaking of "The Land of God's Farm," followed the example of his predecessors in declaring that Iowa was pre-eminent in all things, including the worst weather to be found in the country.

"I stood in a street in San Francisco," said he, "when the thermometer stood at 70 degrees. My uncle pointed to a mountain twenty-eight miles away and assured me that it was down to zero at the mountain-top.

"'That's nothing,' I responded, 'you can stand still in Iowa for twenty-eight minutes and get more change than that.'

"But I know," he concluded, "you all love everything in Iowa, even to the weather."

The speaker said that every forty acres of land in Iowa would support a family.

Congressman Hull told of the 80,000 soldiers furnished by Iowa to the Union armies in the civil war. At the mention of Gen. Dodge's name the diners sprang to their feet, waved napkins, and cheered for a full minute.

Congressman Smith was called to speak on "Iowa's Best Product: the Iowa Woman."

"I was speaking with President Roosevelt some time ago," he continued, "and mentioned the name of Gen. Dodge. 'That is the ideal American,' he said. 'If he were a few years younger he would be the man for the head of the Panama Canal Commission.' He did, however, appoint another Iowan, T. P. Shonts."

BERNARD SHAW IN HUNGARY.

"The Devil's Disciple" Greatly Pleases Budapest Critics.

Writing to a London daily a Budapest correspondent says that for a week or so preceding the first performance of Mr. Bernard Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple," he was beset with questions concerning the personality and dramatic power of the now popular Irish playwright, who has at one stride reached the happy area of Hungarian popularity. At the Vig Szinhaz the reception of the play was flattering indeed, to an Englishman, while the criticisms which have appeared are adequate and fearless.

The Budapest Hirlap, which is the "Times" of Hungary, says: "It is the most independent, most original indication of the literary spirit of modern England." Another of the leading journals calls it "one of the most interesting melodramas ever staged. This Bernard Shaw is a fine man, and he knows his public as a man knows bad money." The success of the play is unprecedented. It was Shaw's patriotic references which first of all captured the interest of the nation, and the crowd from pit and gallery repeatedly shouted out "Ugy van," ("It is so.")

One of the most delightful criticisms of the play is given by Karoly Sebestyén, who says: "The public has seen it, understood it, and applauded it." And Joseph Keszler, in speaking of Shaw, says: "Not only is he the best living writer we have seen out here, but the shyest theatre fox."

The play is the talk of the city, for Budapest has in a way been prepared for "Az ördög cimborá ja," to give Mr. Shaw's play its Hungarian name, by a series of articles discussing the genius and scope of the satirist.

CLEARING HOUSE CURRENCY.

Plan for Incorporation Under National Charters.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In an editorial entitled "Money Market Facts," which appeared in your issue of Wednesday, April 11, 1906, you say: "It must be admitted that no banker has suggested any system of money so elastic that it would expand between forenoon and afternoon so as to meet the range in the New York money market between 6 and 30 per cent."

That result has been attained not infrequently in the history of money disturbances, and the example of the Bank of France, whose rate of discount has remained unchanged four years at a time, is standing proof that such a condition may be reached by appropriate legislation.

It is only necessary to refer you to the proposed method of issuing currency through clearing houses, which is in some points analogous to the methods of the Bank of France, to prove that many bankers have suggested a system which would protect our business community from violent changes in interest rates and insure them against the ravages of monetary panics.

This system was approved by vote of the Bankers' Convention of the State of Washington in 1903, after hearing an elaborate discussion and many arguments in favor of various currency proposals. The negative vote was so small that a count was not asked for.

In the same year the Nebraska Bankers' Convention had a similar discussion, and there was a majority in favor of the clearing house system, though the resolution was not pressed to a vote out of deference to the wishes of some of the larger bankers.

In December, 1900, Lyman J. Gage, then Secretary of the Treasury, in an address before Group 8 of the New York State Bankers' Association, convincingly described the operation of clearing houses associated for mutual support, and asked: "Is it not possible under the sanction of law to perfect and extend for the general good of the country a similar plan and one which has been so well demonstrated?"

The late Charles Parsons of St. Louis, ex-President of the American Bankers' Association, was a strong advocate of this system. Many other bankers and some financial journals are among its supporters. Mr. Schiff, in his admirable address on currency reform before the Chamber of Commerce, spoke of the issue of currency through clearing houses as a feasible plan.

The system has been worked out in a bill to carry it into effect which was introduced in the Senate by Senator Platt and in the House by Representative Pugsley. The bill provides for the incorporation of clearing houses under National charters, and gives to one in each State the power to issue currency to bank members on pledge of bank assets at 75 per cent. of their appraised value. Under the provisions of the bill the banks could make arrangements in advance of need, so that "between forenoon and afternoon" they would be able to meet calls for currency without disturbing their gold and legal-tender reserve. Such issues would be but a drop in the bucket compared to the business of the country. It must be remembered as a fact established by experience and the best authorities that there can be no stringency if the reserve is maintained undisturbed. A clearing house currency would protect the reserves of lawful money by doing the work now done by gold and legal tenders, with the consequent destruction of four times the amount thereof in credits based thereon. Clearing house currency would be maintained at par throughout the land because all members of clearing houses would be required to accept it at par for all debts due them, as is the case with National bank currency. Such currency would retire itself when its work was done, because it would be payable on demand in gold. No more conservative agency could be devised for the issue of currency than the clearing houses.

While this system of incorporated clearing houses is before the community supported by such prominent names in the banking world it cannot be admitted that no banker has suggested a system of money sufficiently elastic to meet all the demands of business, prevent violent changes in the rate of interest, and insure us against monetary panics in the future.

Banks receive their charters from the States and the United States not only to make money for themselves, but also to serve the public by the transaction of its banking business safely and economically. It is only meet and right that the banks should do whatever is necessary to preserve monetary stability. In the clearing house system they add to their direct recourse on the business public, which at present is their only mode of easing themselves, but by which in the past panics have been created and enormous losses have been occasioned, another method of protecting themselves—that is, taking out money from the clearing houses, which would save the public from forced liquidations and financial disaster.

Experience has shown that our banks, even with their great resources, are not able under the present system to prevent monetary disturbances. Reform in our methods has been delayed by the efforts of the big banks to force through Congress the branch banking system and other plans for their pecuniary profit. To these plans the country has said "No!" It now remains for the banks to propose voluntarily such changes in our system as will produce quiet and avoid extreme high rates for money. If they cannot agree on a plan, and surely they are taking enough time about it, then it devolves on Congress as the representative of the people to make the necessary changes. No plan is more easy to accomplish or more certain in its effects or has such strong support as has the clearing house system, which has been called the only plan which has any chance of being carried into execution.

THEODORE GILMAN.

New York, April 27, 1906.

(Mr. Fowler, Chairman of the House Banking Committee, introduced a bill proposing an arrangement similar to that discussed above, but it was adversely criticised and rejected through the jealousy of the small banks, who oppose anything even remotely resembling the branch bank system. It is easier to suggest expedients than to clear the ground for their consideration upon their merits.)

GUILTY OF BLACKMAIL, GOES INSANE IN COURT

BROTHER BEATS PROSECUTOR

Indicted Man Resents District Attorney's Smile—Brothers Accused of Extortion from Grafters.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, April 28.—Frank Schultz, a German newspaper man, went suddenly mad in court to-night, when he was convicted of extortion. Before he was quieted he had driven the jury from the room, and one frightened member of it fainted in the District Attorney's office.

While the convicted man was raving in the main courtroom, his brother, Fred, also a newspaper man, under indictment on similar charges, became violent. He rushed to the District Attorney's room, seized District Attorney McGovern by the throat, shook him, threw him to the floor, and beat him before the Assistant District Attorneys and spectators could interfere.

Schultz lost his place on The Germania, a local newspaper, because of his indictment. In his defense he declared that he was the author of the exposure of the local grafting. He declared that it was in revenge for his exposure of the grafters that charges were made against him by the chief of the grafting, County Supervisor Edward F. Strauss, on whose confessions more than 100 indictments were returned.

Strauss testified that Schultz had extorted money from him on the threat of printing charges of grafting in the county board. Schultz showed that after the time of the alleged payment of the money to keep him still he had continued his exposures. He fully expected to be acquitted.

When the jury came in and reported a verdict of guilty he sat as though stunned for five minutes, while the court was adjourned. Then he started up with a shriek, saying: "It can't be true." Men in the room tried to hold him, but he jumped to his feet and screamed at the jurymen and rushed toward them.

The twelve fell over chairs and knocked each other down in their rush for the safety of the District Attorney's office.

Fred Schultz declares that District Attorney McGovern was leering at him as though to say, "You'll be next." He and McGovern have been bitter personal as well as political enemies. The smile made Fred Schultz violently angry, and he rushed upon McGovern, threw him down, and beat his shoulders against the floor. Then the attachés of the office and spectators rushed upon him and dragged him away. He struggled for fully twenty minutes before he could be calmed.

The convicted brother meanwhile had been subdued by court officers after a hard fight. He did not become reasonable for half an hour.

STRONG IN COMEDY.

One Author Who Does Not Appreciate His Own Ability.

A new and expeditious method of turning out plays is suggested by the following letter, which Etienne Girardot of "Charley's Aunt" fame received a little while ago from a budding playwright in an Eastern Pennsylvania town:

"My dear Mr. Girardot," began the correspondent, whose name may be quoted incorrectly as Joseph Smith, "you will remember that about seven years ago when you appeared here in 'Charley's Aunt,' I called to see you during the performance. I desired then to read to you my four-act play entitled 'The Burglar's Dream,' but owing to the numerous changes of costume which you had to make it was impossible for you to spare the time.

"I am now sending with this letter the outline of a new play which I have written, and which I am sure will meet with unqualified success. My object in communicating with you is to request that you write in the blank spaces the comedy lines for the characters of Bess and Trixy and also the lines for Jean and Alphonse L'Hommedieu. I think I am a little weak in comedy, and therefore trust you will help me out. After you have completed the work, will you kindly submit the same to Mr. Richard Mansfield and get his opinion on the entire piece for me? Kindly note that the manuscript is copyrighted. A word to the wise is sufficient.

"I am also inclosing a photograph of myself and of my studio, which I hope you will hand to one of your many newspaper friends in New York and ask him to publish it in his paper with a paragraph stating that Joseph Smith, the well-known playwright, is at work on a new drama which is intended for Mr. Richard Mansfield. Yours truly, Joseph Smith."

Mr. Girardot returned Mr. Smith's manuscript with a note saying that after careful consideration he must confess himself by no means as "strong in comedy" as the author.

STORY OF A NEW FRENCH PLAY

M. Catulle Mendes's Work as Represented at the Odeon.

M. Catulle Mendes's "Glatigny," the new play in five acts produced at the Odéon Theatre, opens in a Norman village at night. On one side of the way Glatigny makes love to the Postmistress; on the other side the itinerant actors of a troupe try to climb out of the inn, where they are detained till they can pay. Glatigny catches sight of the "star" of the troupe, ransoms them, follows them—and through them the dream of a freer self-expression—toward Paris.

In Paris he becomes known, and seeks service with a journalist who means to be a Minister. He seeks service because his capricious love—the "star" of the troupe—demands wealth and position. To make a jest he loses his chance of wealth and position; he turns the journalist's dispatch into verse, so that the world laughs. But Lizaine, his love, leaves him for others. The third act is in "The Brasserie." Glatigny is mute with grief in the midst of the mad blasphemy of poets that have failed against poets that have succeeded. But Lizaine returns to him, and they go out again together. At the mercy of some caprice, she demands as the price of her love more than a thousand francs. He exchanges the only treasure he has got, and gains her.

The scene is now in a café concert. He gives her the present between her light dances on the stage. Then he goes on to improvise himself—"There is no happiness but the lover's." But while he improvises Lizaine's old lover carries her off.

The last act takes us back to Winter, seven years after, in the Norman village. Glatigny is consumptive, but cared for by his wife, the Postmistress. But in delirium under the snow at dawn he steals out, mimics the beginning of his lost and futile adventures, runs up the hill as he ran out of the first act, with the same words, "Je leur reviendrai chargé d'or et de gloire." Dawn breaks, and they bring him home a corpse.

According to one reviewer the play has no development or logic. The central idea—the love of Lizaine—does nothing more than reappear in various interesting situations. And the central idea itself is factitious. It was not really Lizaine that Glatigny loved—even on the stage—it was glory, poetry, expression—things which cannot be impersonated. The only triumphant moment is the fourth act—this play within a play—when the whole apparatus and action of a mediocre music hall stage is deployed on the stage of the Odéon.

MARBLE GIRL AMAZED THEM.

In the Tenderloin Station She Abashed Many Habitual Prisoners.

All day yesterday the marble bust of a young girl stood on the end of the Sergeant's desk in the Tenderloin police station. It still stood there at night under the green light. No one could tell, or would, last night whence it had come or to whom it belonged. Sergt. McCarthy held that it must have been taken from a thief. Some of the detectives argued that it was a present to Capt. Hodgins.

At all events, it made an impression upon those who had to go into the smoky old station. The bust is that of a girl of about 17. She is out in the country, for there is a little sunbonnet on her head, tied on by a ribbon under her chin. Caught in the bosom of her dress is a rose. She is evidently about to smile.

The detectives brought in two wagonloads of women from a place in Twenty-seventh Street. They couldn't keep their eyes from the girl in carrara up there under the green lights. The marble girl was a country girl, and she seemed to make the prisoners think of new or very old and forgotten things, and they weren't nearly so ribald as they usually are.

A policeman brought in an old man who was drunk. He began to curse every policeman that ever drew breath, holding that any man who had the price was entitled to get drunk so often as he pleased. It was nobody's business, he said, and he was going on with more when he saw the little girl in marble with the sunbonnet. He stopped all at once and wept as only the drunken can weep.

It being Saturday night and 11 o'clock, of course Sentimental Mary was brought in intoxicated, blue and remorseful as usual, direct from the back of the saloon where she sits at a table alone once a week, drinking and thinking. The bust of the girl in the sunbonnet had been turned so that Sentimental Mary could see the profile. So clear was the marble that the light behind it made it seem as soft and as white as flesh.

"What's this?" she called out wrathfully. "What the dickens has this station come to?" she yelled. "Statues! Little girls with sunbonnets on, of all things in the world! I'll not be pinched again if this is to keep up, that's all. Take me back, matron, quick; that thing is not good for my blues. White statues of country girls with flowers in their bosoms in the Tenderloin station!"

She went "back," still protesting.

JOCKEY CLUB STILL TIES POOLROOMS UP

No Jamaica Odds or Scratches Sent Out in Advance.

PLAYERS ARE DISGUSTED

If These Conditions Last After the Legislature Adjourns, Half the New York Rooms Will Quit.

Whatever precautions were adopted by The Jockey Club at the Jamaica track yesterday afternoon to prevent racing information leaking out and reaching the New York poolrooms were most effective. There was not an establishment in the city which made any pretense of posting track odds, and it was not until the last race had been run that a start was made at paying off on the first.

The poolroom men were fairly confident up to the very opening of Jamaica that there would be some relaxation in the vigilance of the agents in the employ of The Jockey Club, after the Aqueduct meeting closed. The first day at Jamaica shook their hopes, but they were advised by the agencies which are supposed to supply the information necessary to the conduct of their business that it would be all right yesterday. Despite the fact that this cheering promise has been made time and again since the opening of the season, they received it with joy.

The first day at Jamaica saw them, if anything, worse off than they had been at Aqueduct. Yesterday, with the Excelsior Handicap as the star attraction, they were counting upon a big play. The players were on hand in numbers, but when the time for the first race came and the rooms were unable to get the scratches and jockeys, to say nothing of the betting, it was plain that the situation had not bettered.

In nearly all of the rooms Sue Smith was posted a favorite in the first race. She didn't even start, and it was not until well along toward the fifth race that it was learned that the Brown filly had been scratched. There were no odds to be had on the second or third races, and the room managers, in most instances, posted notices to the effect that if players preferred they might wait until Monday and be paid off on newspaper odds.

For the Excelsior Handicap, Roseben, who closed at 2 to 5 on the track, was generally held in the rooms at 6 to 5, and there was a heavy play on the big Johnson sprinter at these figures. Had Roseben won the rooms would have been scorched, but as things turned out the liberality of their figures proved of benefit to them.

After post time for the Excelsior most of the players in the uptown rooms departed in disgust:

"What's the use of coming to a so-called poolroom," asked one disgruntled player, who thought he had lost a bet on Sue Smith, "when you can hand your money to a handbook man in the morning and do just as well?"

The poolroom interests admit that there isn't much use, and, if The Jockey Club persists in its methods after the close of the Legislature, at least 50 per cent. of the rooms doing business in New York will close. A few of the big gamblers profess to believe that, as soon as the Legislature adjourns things will be easier for them, but in view of the fact that the time has already passed when the Cassidy-Lansing bill could be resurrected or a new anti-racing bill introduced with a chance of passage, this belief seems baseless.

NEW MILK INDUSTRY.

Casein, a Substitute for Celluloid, Valuable By-Product in France.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Consul Brunot of St. Etienne calls attention to an indutsry that has been recently created in the west of France, at Surgeres, the seat of several co-operative dairies, and in the space of a few months has grown so rapidly in importance that it deserves notice.

This industry is the extraction of casein from skimmed milk. When the cream is taken from the milk to manufacture butter there remains, besides lactose and mineral elements, a little more than an ounce of casein per quart. Two experienced Germans went to live at Surgeres and commenced to extract the casein from the skimmed milk. The orders for it from Germany came in so fast that the premises had to be enlarged.

The daily production for last year was 2,000 kilos, representing 22,000,000 quarts of skimmed milk, furnished by ten dairies, bringing to these latter a profit of $20,000 a year. Nearly all the casein is exported to Germany, where it is employed in the manufacture of high-toned paper, playing cards, and, when transformed into a special kind of gum, it is used in the stiffening of textiles. In the dyeing industry it replaces albumen to fix the mineral colors, and in commerce furnishes colors composed of casein, hydrate of lime, and coloring matter.

The elementary principle of producing casein is simple. To the liquid contained in large reservoirs very active rennet is added, which coagulates the albuminoid matter. The curd thus obtained is pressed, powdered and dried in an oven, giving a very hard substance, yellowish white in color, with a slight odor of cheese. This casein is treated by repeated washings, dissolutions, and precipitations until it becomes of transparent whiteness, and almost inodorous.

Specially prepared and pulverized, casein constitutes an excellent nutritious food of easy digestion. Over 20,000 kilos of this kind of aliment have been sold monthly by the manufactory of saugeres. But it is chiefly in the manufacture of artificial ivory called galalith, as an excellent substitute for celluloid, that casein finds its use. Galalith, or milk stone, is of German invention, and is obtained by hardening the casein by means of formaldehyde. The combination of these two bodies gives a hard substance, but as easy to work as wood. More brilliant and more solid, although a little heavier than celluloid, galalith possesses two important advantages over the latter—it is non-inflammable and cheaper than its rival, which, being composed of camphor and gun cotton, is both costly and dangerous.

With the milk stone is also manufactured a host of objects rendered attractive not only by their cheapness, but also by their polish and solidity, such as penholders, combs, piano keys, buttons, cigarholders, knife handles, &c. Being a non-conductor of electricity, galalith is extensively employed in all industries based on electric energy.

Funds Wanted for Leper Charity.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Father L. L. Conrardy, M. D., an American citizen and a graduate of an American medical college at Portland, Oregon, who has been Father Damien's companion and successor, and who administered the last rites of the Church to him in his dying hour, April 15, 1889, is now in this city on his way to the Province of Canton, China, where he intends to do work among the Chinese lepers.

Father Conrardy would start immediately for his field of labor, provided he was assured of a guaranteed income of 2½ cents a day for each leper. He hopes to obtain sufficient means to start work with 300 lepers. Of course, there are many more who ask to be received. In the Province of Canton there are 30,000 lepers, and in the city alone there are over 10,000.

Any help given to Father Conrardy for the sake of the lepers will be cheerfully received and gratefully acknowledged. His address for the present is St. John's Home, 992 St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. He will deliver an address on the subject on Sunday, May 6, at the Church of St. Francis Xavier.

A COUNT'S WATER COLORS.

Count G. von Seckendorff is showing a small collection of water colors in the lower gallery of the Knoedler establishment, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street. They are the work of a practiced hand and not without a sense for harmony and color; but at the same time they do not rise very far above good work by the amateur. One feels in them a sane, intelligent observer of nature, who recognizes the picturesque in landscape and has the skill to fix it on paper, but one also who does not take the highest flights. Interesting enough some of them are, like the views of Kufstein, Brixen, and Bordighera, and the aspect of the Church of the Salute in Venice from the side canal. The best of them would not look wrong in an exhibition of water colors anywhere. Nevertheless they have little tang, little force; perhaps the best expression for them might be "cultured," or, again, "well-bred."

Count G. von Seckendorff is a gentleman with distinguished and charming manners, who was never very popular in Berlin because his Empress was an Englishwoman and excited the jealousy of the people. He was the favorite Hofmarshall of her Majesty the Empress Dowager, mother of the present Emperor, an abler woman than her own mother, Queen Victoria of England, but not so lucky in her surroundings. It has always been asserted, despite frequent denials, that the German Dowager Empress was consoled for her widowhood at last in a marriage to Count von Seckendorff, but in private, owing to the well-known hostility felt toward her in Germany. While some consider this a fact beyond dispute, others insist that it was a canard. Be that as it may, no one can deny to Count Seckendorff qualities which render him worthy of the attachment of a clever woman.

Perhaps the Count shines more on the social side than the artistic; but in these watercolors there is much to admire also. It may be that they reflect some of the fine tact Count Seckendorff used to display when managing the little Court of Victoria's eldest daughter. Authors and artists were not particularly welcome at the Court of Emperor William; but science, art, and literature were passports to the palace of his mother. Seckendorff's duty was to steer the long-haired musician and the short-haired scientific person, the frock-hating painter and the clumsy sculptor through the simple yet confusing steps of etiquette—bring them up to his august mistress, see them paralyzed by her learning and language, and then get them safely back to their places in the crowd. His ability in this line was the envy of courtiers.

CARVING SHOW BY STUDENTS.

Students of carving in the atelier of Karl von Rydingsvärd held on Friday a good-bye exhibition of the Winter's work at 96 Fifth Avenue. In May Mr. von Rydingsvärd departs for the coast of Maine, where he carries on a large atelier of carving throughout the Summer. This Spring, however, he intends to revisit Europe and make a tour of the Gothic churches of France and Germany, ending with a trip to his native country, Sweden.

Among the useful articles in wood decorated by pupils is a "chafing dish" stand, with compartments below to hold the various utensils. The doors and sides have been carved in low relief by Miss Josephine Taber, the wood being oak treated with oil, but not stained. On the door of the closet is a design of fish; on the sides one of lobsters. Another stand of this sort by the master has the scene of the witches in "Macbeth" on the front panels. The portrait painter Frederick Glover treats a coffer or cassone with bold interlacing design of a Norse order, and Miss Janet Prentiss carves a broad border of pomegranates around the cover of her cassone.

Miss Muriel Gould uses the same fruit, the pomegranate bursting, for a chest of tinted oak, but in a very different design, and shows book racks and other objects very skillfully carved. Miss Strong, a teacher from South Carolina, shows a long jardinière in colored oak, with dragon heads for ends and interlacing Byzantine designs on the sides.

JO JEFFERSON'S LANDSCAPES.

One of the rooms at the Blakeslee Galleries contains a number of the later paintings by Joseph Jefferson, the comedian, who was a lover of palette and "turps" for a long, long time, and kept up the hobby until close upon his death. Fishing and painting were his delight, but he took more pride in the quality of a landscape than the length of a tarpon.

"Fish are not all there is of fishing," was one of Jo Jefferson's adages, and he might have said, "The picture is not all there is of painting." His enjoyment of the art of painting was in singular contrast to the hatred of brushes and canvas shown by some eminent masters. That, because for Jo Jefferson it was a relaxation, while for the master it was just dull, damnable work.

In looking over these river scenes and sawmills, these glimpses of the Louisiana bayous and the shores of Buzzard's Bay, one feels that although some of the landscapes are dated 1900 and even later, yet the impression made by painting on Jo Jefferson's mind was older by thirty or forty years. Düsseldorf and the Hudson River school look from these cascades and romantic woodlands. Although he followed a later Dutch school of landscape in his purchases—sold Friday night at Mendelssohn Hall—yet his point of view belongs to an earlier period.

Among the landscapes a night scene with moon struggling through the clouds is interesting for its sky. These pictures might well be acquired by admirers of the genial man and exquisite actor as souvenirs of a personality rarely to be found. They vary from sketchy landscapes with brawling rivers rather ropy in texture to quiet woodland scenes in which the hand of the painter has hit a fair measure of harmony.

FEW STRIKES PLANNED FOR THE FIRST OF MAY

SHOP TRADES DISSATISFIED

Rockmen and Excavators Also Wish Higher Pay, but Machinists' Demands Not Yet Formulated.

The 1st of May, which at one time was frequently attended with big building strikes, will be peaceful in the building trades this year, according to the reports of the unions.

Over thirty organizations are now working under the arbitration agreement of the Building Trades Employers' Association. The only union in the building trades which is on strike is the Housesmiths' Union, which still opposes the open-shop declaration of the Allied Iron Associations.

Attempts have been made in the last month to get the unions bound by the arbitration agreement to strike in sympathy with the housesmiths, but these organizations have decided to stand by their contract.

Strikes are threatened in some of the shop trades on May 1, and the members of the Rockmen and Excavators' Union, over 30,000 strong, threaten to strike against all employers who refuse to grant demands for higher wages which they have formulated to go into effect on May 1. Most of the rockmen and excavators are employed by the Contractors' Protective Association, whose members take contracts for excavations for buildings.

Demands have been made by the iron molders and coremakers of New York and vicinity on the New York and New Jersey Founders' Association for an increase in the minimum rate of wages from $3 a day for molders and $2.75 for coremakers to $3.25 and $3 respectively, to go into effect May 1. If the demands are refused, 1,300 molders and coremakers will strike and expect the co-operation of the allied metal trades.

The International Association of Machinists, which has a National membership of 100,000, has started an agitation for the eight-hour work day, but the date will not be fixed for the eight-hour demand until all the locals are ready to make it at once. The International Executive Committee will meet in Washington on April 30, to consider the date for the demand.

A mass meeting of the Socialist Labor Party will be held in Cooper Union on May 1, at which eight-hour resolutions will be passed. The united Hebrew trades, composed of the Socialist unions on the east side, will hold an eight-hour mass meeting in the People's Theatre, and eight hour meetings of various unions in the clothing industry will be held in the Star Music Hall, 8 Forsyth Street, and other meeting places.

The Socialist unions will have a mass meeting on May 1 at Grand Central Palace, which will take the form of a protest against the imprisonment of Moyer, Haywood, and other officers of the Western Federation of Miners, who are in jail at Boisé City, Idaho, charged with complicity in the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg and others. Similar mass meetings of the kind will be held by the Socialists in various cities throughout the United States.

NEGRO WOMAN SHOT DEAD.

Woman Who Killed Her Prayed for Her and Then Surrendered.

Two young negro women, well known to the police of the Tenderloin, met early yesterday morning in front of a saloon at 120 West Twenty-seventh Street and began to fight. The fight grew out of a quarrel of several weeks' standing, one believing the other had caused her arrest in connection with the robbery of an Italian.

Marie Louise Baker, 138 West Thirty-second Street, was standing in front of the saloon talking to Gertie Marshall, a friend. Bella Bailey, 369 Seventh Avenue, came sauntering down the street. Gertie and Marie Louise had evidently been discussing Bella, for one of them said, "There she comes now."

At that the Baker woman stepped out in front of her enemy, drew a knife, and began to flourish it in the face of Bella Bailey, who produced a revolver and shot Marie Louise five times, every bullet taking effect. The first shot felled her to the sidewalk; the other bullets were shot into her as she lay there. She died almost immediately.

Bella Bailey disappeared in the crowd that quickly gathered around, handing her pistol to one among them. The body of the dead woman was removed, and the police started to look for the murderess. While they were out after her she walked into the Tenderloin Station, saying to Sergt. McCarthy:

"Here I is, boss. I is de lady whut shot de yutther one dis mawnin'. I had to do it onless she wuz to cut me to pieces. I went home, an' I been prayin' fer her an' me ever since."

Bella Bailey was remanded without bail by Coroner Schrady.

A WARNING TO THE SENATE.

Attitude Toward La Follette Indicative of Shortsightedness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a popular notion abroad that a good many United States Senators are not straining their eyes in search of new light on the rate-making question. This may or may not be fair to them. But, if they had tried to devise an ideal scheme to deepen this impression they could not have thought out a better one than to vacate the chamber, as they did, when Senator La Follette delivered his exhaustive argument.

La Follette may be a sinner, or he may be a saint; he may be a visionary, or he may be a sage, but one thing is sure, that he knew what he was talking about and said it in good shape. It is questionable whether there were any two of those of his colleagues who declined to listen to him who have had as much practical experience with railroad regulation as the fighting Senator from Wisconsin. If I am to credit the news columns of an influential New York paper, which certainly never goes out of its way to throw any bricks at capital and has little love for the President or his pet measure, La Follette's speech was distinctly the most able and comprehensive contribution that has thus far been made to the discussion. Moreover, if the rumors that come out of the West can be credited, this pugnacious statesman from the Badger State is not of the temper to be dismayed by a few tiers of empty seats, especially when, as in this instance, he has the gallery with him. In the last analysis the galleries usually furnish the votes. It might be well for sensitive politicians with the band wagon habit to keep their eye on him.

They say it was Lincoln's sense of humor that kept him from making political blunders. If so, we would cheerfully recommend this prescription to the upper house of Congress. To the man on the street the spectacle was amusing. Venerable statesmen, gray-headed and loaded with dignity, engaged in the discussion of a problem that in its various ramifications strikes deeper than any that has come before it since the days of reconstruction, go trooping out of the Chamber like sulky schoolboys, all because a new member, admittedly the master of his theme, exercises his constitutional right of getting up to make a speech. Possibly this was the reappearance in a new form of that ancient stalking-horse called "Senatorial courtesy."

Senator La Follette's pat warning, that the seats then vacant as a personal snub to him might become permanently vacant by the suffrage of the people, is altogether too grim to be a joke. The Senate has its faults, but for all that it is a noble institution. Those of us who are inclined to get out of patience with its obvious friendship for vested interests at this time should bear in mind that it was not so many years ago that we were congratulating ourselves that we had such a body, and it is not difficult to conceive of a set of conditions arising in the near future when we would do so again. The trouble is that some of its members seem to be fatuously pursuing just the policy that is best calculated to bring about those conditions. Barring a certain vein of stubbornness and an occasional move on the chess board that leads the initiated to lower the eyelid, it seems to be fulfilling pretty faithfully that conservative function which the framers of the Constitution had in mind when they created it. With all due respect to the "muck-rakers," we are inclined to the opinion that seldom in its distinguished history has the United States Senate possessed a higher average of ability, patriotism, and integrity than it does to-day.

But it cannot whistle down strong men of the Roosevelt and La Follette type by any such catcalls as "radicalism." If its brigadiers beat out the President in this fight, they may be introduced to the real article of radicalism sooner than they wish. The Hearst cloud is hanging on the declivities of the mountains, and may descend at any moment into the plain of the Carnatic. And, mark my words, it will be to the Roosevelts and La Follettes, and not to the Aldriches and Forakers, that the vested interests will turn for leadership and protection when the walls of Jericho begin to rock.

THREE ARRESTS MADE IN SILK THEFT CASE

POLICE SAY THEY CONFESSED

Third Man Arrested Had Part of the Stolen Silk in His Place—Says He Bought It Innocently.

Samuel Diamond, 28 years old, of 987 Second Avenue, and Joseph Rosenberg, 46 years old, of 592 De Kalb Avenue, Brooklyn, were arraigned in Yorkville Court yesterday on a charge of silk stealing. They were held in $3,000 bail for further investigation of the case.

The men were arrested by Detectives Skelly and Van Twistern of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station, charged with having stolen $3,000 worth of silk from the store of Louis Perlman of 1,466 First Avenue. The men were traced to a room in the Broadway Central Hotel, where they were found with silk in their possession.

When taken to the station the prisoners, the detectives say, confessed that they had been wanted by the police for some time on a charge of robbing the store of Hyman Fainer of 1,713 Madison Avenue on April 17, and taking away $2,000 worth of silk in bulk. They also confessed, the police declare, that they sold the silk to Samuel Zalshetz of 61 Chestnut Street.

When Capt. Galligan of the East 104th Street Station was notified of the capture and the alleged confession, he went to Chestnut Street and arrested Zalshetz, at the same time seizing $3,000 worth of silk in bulk found in the store. In Zalshetz's pockets there were also found a number of German lottery tickets. The charge of having these in his possession was preferred against him.

Zalshetz declared that he had purchased the silk in good faith. About $800 worth of the stuff found in his store was identified as part of that stolen from Fainer's store, and he was locked up with the added charge of receiving stolen goods.

RAILWAY HIRES A GEOLOGIST.

The Great Northern Railway, it was learned yesterday, has established a special department of geological research, through which the management of the road intends to obtain as much data as possible in regard to the mineral resources of the territory served by the company. Dispatches from Butte, Mon., received yesterday, announced that Horace V. Winchell, Chief Geologist of the Amalgamated Copper Company, has resigned for the purpose of taking charge of the new department.

From the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Coast the country traversed by the Great Northern abounds in minerals of many kinds. An official of the road said yesterday that the company has gathered more or less information along these lines through its engineering department, to which a number of chemists are attached.

DOESN'T PAY TO CHEAT.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—In 1880 the United States exported 39,000,000 pounds of butter and 12,000,000 pounds of cheese. Twenty-five years later, in the calendar year 1905, this country exported 16,000,000 pounds of butter and 8,000,000 pounds of cheese.

This tremendous decline, notwithstanding the increased demand abroad, was due to the methods followed by some American exporters, who shipped adulterated butter, sold oleomargarine for butter, and used similar methods in the exportation of cheese.

The Canadian Government did not permit of such conduct on the part of its people, and as a result Canada last year exported to the United Kingdom alone 32,717,104 pounds of butter and 76 per cent. of the 274,000,000 pounds of cheese which Great Britain bought in that year. The United States statistics for the calendar year 1905 show an export of only 6,271,221 pounds of cheese to the United Kingdom, as compared with 17,159,811 pounds in 1904, and still larger exports in 1903.

TRICKS OF PAWNBROKERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I naturally dislike to "write me down an ass," but it has been said that "the best of men sometimes make mistakes," and if a recital of my unfortunate experience will aid any of your many readers to avoid one of the numerous pitfalls prepared for the unsuspecting in this city, my experience will prove of value to others than myself.

Having need of a scientific instrument, I advertised in an evening paper. Among the answers was one requesting an interview. The person answering seemed honest, told a plausible story of urgent need necessitating his pawning such an instrument as I desired, and as his voluntary description thereof agreed with my particular need I decided to purchase the pawnticket calling for the instrument.

The amount I paid together with that required to redeem the instrument he described was equal to one-half its value when new, and was a good price to pay for one that had been used. The ticket was issued by a pawnbroker with a pretentious establishment on a prominent avenue of this city, and I felt justified in assuming that the amount represented as loaned on the instrument expressed about one-half its present value. But I was greatly mistaken.

On obtaining the instrument I found that while it bore every outward resemblance to what had been represented, its total value when new could not have exceeded $2. It was clearly a cunning imitation, and its value was far below the amount stated in the ticket.

I have since learned that many pawnbrokers resort to this trick of issuing tickets for fictitious amounts, putting them in the hands of plausible agents to dispose of.

I think the pawnbrokers as a class have brought on themselves all the odium they are subjected to, and it ill becomes them to object to the laws that would keep them under the strict supervision of the authorities.

630 RABBITS IN A NIGHT.

Wonderful Work of a New Type of Traps in Australia.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Consul General Bray reports from Melbourne that a new rabbit trap is being used in Australia with great success, whereby rabbits may be caught alive in very large numbers. It is used in connection with small trap yards. The trap itself is 18 inches long, 12 inches high, and 6 inches in width. It has a balanced moving floor and a door at each end, which opens and closes automatically.

The weight of a rabbit on the inverse end of a floor closes the door behind him by which he has entered and opens the door in front leading to the trap yard, so that the rabbit has no option but to go on, and when he leaves the trap it goes back to its former position, thus resetting itself.

The small trap yards are constructed of double wire netting fences, in the spaces between which green fodder or hay is cultivated or provided, and although these foods cannot be reached by the rabbits, it entices them to enter through the traps to try and get out the fodder from the other side. Two, three, or more traps may be used in connection with each trap yard.

The invention has been tried with great success on several extensive ranches in Australia, and the inventor has a number of certificates from leading ranchmen, one of whom states that with two of the traps set at a small water hole he caught 630 rabbits in one night.

MILITARY SHOW LOSSES CAUSE TALK OF CHANGES

Innovations Promised as the Week's Carnival Closes.

BIG CROWD ON LAST NIGHT

Patriotic Spirit Pervades Garden and Vents Its Feelings by Enthusiastic Cheering of National Airs.

The Military Show closed in Madison Square Garden last evening in a plethora of patriotic enthusiasm. The inspiriting strains of National airs stirred the big crowd that gathered for the last night, and, as the martial pageant passed in final review, the spectators rose and cheered to the echo, while the Stars and Stripes and the Cross of St. George waved in complete sympathy with their feelings. It was the gala night of the week and was suitably acknowledged.

Again the Queen's Own Rifles, led by Lieut. Col. Sir Henry M. Pellatt, mounted upon his white charger Prince, provided the feature of the night's programme. The Canadians preceded the regular review. When they came swinging into the arena, with their band playing "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the men saw the red field of the Cross of St. George draped about the boxes, their ringing cheer was caught up by the spectators. Their manoeuvres kept the enthusiasm at its height, to the evident delight of Sir Henry, who put his troops through the evolutions with a snap to which they responded nobly.

It was a great ending of a none-too-successful week. There is no denying that the show this year has not scored the success of other years. The officers of the organization were at variance at times, and it is an open secret that Col. William F. Morris of the Ninth Regiment will retire as President of the league. Last year the league lost $2,600 because of the failure of the show. This was the statement of Major W. A. Turpin, Thirteenth Regiment Heavy Artillery, its Recording Secretary. What the losses are this year is not as yet known. Only two nights has the Garden been filled. Younger commissioned officers of the National Guard declare that the league is suffering from mismanagement.

Major Turpin, who has been the most active officer in the league since its inception, said that the work of the league would be continued, and that after the clearing and straightening out of the present difficulties the league would come forth stronger and better than ever before. He said that the esprit du corps would show more clearly at a greater military show next year, and that despite indifference manifested among some of the military organizations a show would surely be held in the Garden.

Among the officers generally the scheme to make the league a New York State organization, with Adj. Gen. Nelson M. Henry at its head, was said to be impossible. It was argued that such a move would not benefit it. The league has offered a prize of $2,000 for a special military feature which would provide a sensation. Major Turpin said that every effort was made this year to arrange for the appearance of a single battalion of Japanese infantry that had seen actual service in the Japanese-Russian war. Negotiations had been opened through the Japanese Ambassador at Washington and the league had agreed to pay $7,000 for the detail of such Japanese soldiers, but that because of the hard service that the little soldiers had been through, their Government refused to consent. It was said, however, that next year's show might witness these wonderful soldiers in the arena of the Garden. Native Philippine troops under the United States flag are also among the possibilities of 1907.

While the officers were loth to discuss the retirement of Col. Morris last night they were ready with suggestions as to his successor. Major Turpin, whose devotion to the interests of the league have in many instances proved its guiding star, was enthusiastically declared to be the best officer for its head. Col. David E. Austen of the Thirteenth Regiment Heavy Artillery and Col. William G. Bates of the Seventy-first Regiment of Infantry, were also mentioned. It was also declared that it was the intention of those in command of the league's affairs in future to make public statements of the league's receipts and expenditures, and to acquaint the public with its equipping of army posts and ships of war with athletic apparatus for which no provision is made by the United States Government.

Cadet corps held a competitive drill at the matinée, and their spirited manoeuvring evoked hearty applause. The battalion of the New York Military Academy, Cornwall-on-Hudson, Capt. M. O. Frend commanding, won the stand of United States colors in the first section, while the cadets of St. Francis Xavier, this city, Cadet Captain M. F. Eagan commanding, captured the colors in the second section. Brig. Gen. John G. Eddy, Forty-seventh Regiment, acted as reviewing officer at the matinée, and Col. Harding, Twenty-sixth Regiment; Capt. Stanley Ford, Fifth United States Infantry, and Capt. Myer, Marine Corps, acted as judges of the competitive drill.

The athletic events were finished, the Twenty-second Regiment Engineers winning the regimental championship, held by the Thirteenth last year, with 99 points; the Seventy-first Regiment, with 27 points, was second, and the Thirteenth Regiment, with 19 points, was third. The summary:

LOST $6,000; WANTS IT BACK.

Percy L. M. Tower, a lawyer, living at 126 St. Mary Street, Boston, went to Police Headquarters yesterday morning with his son, Benjamin Curtis Tower, 22 years old, and told a story which led to the arrest last night of William Anderson, who said he was 45 years old, an architect, of 36 East Seventy-fifth Street, and Percy Allison, 27 years old, of 15 East Seventy-seventh Street, who said he was a civil engineer. They were charged with grand larceny, and will be arraigned in the Tombs Court this morning.

The Towers had a letter of introduction to Inspector McLaughlin of the Detective Bureau from Chief of Police William Watts of Boston. They told the Inspector that young Tower had lost $6,000 in a horse race betting scheme at the instance of the two men whom he met at Pinehurst, N. C., under the names of Forrest Middleton and A. K. P. James. This was early in the present month. The three were stopping at the Hotel Carolina at that time and later went to Atlantic City together.

Young Tower alleges that the men confided to him that they were personally acquainted with many race horse owners and possessed extremely accurate racing information.

On April 11, Tower alleges, he handed over to the men $1,000 to put on a "good thing" at Aqueduct. The "good thing" lost.

On April 14 Tower told the Inspector he was persuaded that a "very good thing" was to run on the same track. He gave them $1,000, and then got a draft from his father at Boston for $4,000 more, which he placed in the hands of the men, he says, to bet for him. Afterward they told him that the horse had lost.

Young Tower went to Boston and told his father the story. Then the Towers came to this city. They said they were looking for that $6,000, as well as to punish the men. Inspector McLaughlin learned that Allison was at the Gallatin Hotel, 70 West Forty-sixth Street. Anderson registered at the Hotel Astor April 12, from Pinehurst, N. C.

EARLY VOTE ON RATE BILL.

Senate Will Probably Fix Some Day Next Week.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—It is the generally expressed opinion about the Senate to-day that an agreement to vote on the Railroad Rate bill will be secured early next week, and that the vote will probably be fixed for some time during the week beginning May 7.

The final vote on the bill itself will be preceded by debate of several days' duration on the amendments to the bill. The reasons given for predicting an early vote are that the debate is practically exhausted, and that there is a strong pressure from the House of Representatives, whose members are anxious to bring the session to an end in order that they may have opportunity to give attention to their campaigns for re-election.

WEST POINT FENCER FIRST.

Breckenridge New Champion in Foils—Chicagoan Takes Sword Event.

S. D. Breckenridge, a West Point graduate in the class of 1903 and now an instructor in Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., won the National championship in foils, and William Grebe of Chicago won the championship in dueling swords last night att he New York Athletic Club, where the annual fencing tournament of the Amateur Fencers' League of America was held. The competition brought out a high-class lot of contestants, the West being particularly well represented, and this is the first time that one of the National championships has gone to that part of the country.

Breckenridge represented the Washington Fencers' Club. His work throughout was characterized by aggressiveness and accuracy, and in the final round his defeat of V. P. Curti, the new junior champion this year, gave him his National honors.

From a field of eight who entered for the dueling swords, Grebe scored six victories, his only defeat being by W. L. Bowman, the Boston representative.

Twelve fencers met for the championship in foils. They represented six divisions in the Fencers' League, all expert swordsmen. It was the first time in the history of the National championships that so many divisions have sent contestants and it spoke well for the growing interest in fencing. The men were divided into two squads and the two leading men in each squad were picked for the final bouts. After an interesting series of contests V. P. Curti of the New York Turn Verein, John Allaire, Brooklyn Fencers' Club; S. D. Breckenridge, and W. L. Bowman, a Harvard student and entered from the Boston A. A., qualified. The ex-champion, Charles Bothner of the New York A. C., scored only two victories. A bad fall from a carriage during the day injured his leg so that it was with considerable difficulty that he was able to fence at all.

The contestants who had previously qualified for their respective events were:

Sabres.—New York Division—K. B. Johnson, A. S. Anderson, F. J. Byron, New York A. C.; Dr. G. A. Lawrence, Fencers' Club. Long Island Division—John Allaire. Chicago Division—William Grebe.

Kildare Men's Games To-day.

Kildare men have been anxiously awaiting the time for the annual games of the Kildare Men's Association, which are scheduled for Celtic Park, Long Island City, to-day, and all indications point to the largest gathering that ever attended an event held under the auspices of the association. Football will be a special feature of the games, and some of the best players under Gaelic rules in the metropolitan district will participate. There will be three games, the draw bringing together Leitrim and Mayo, Louth and Meath, and Kildare and Armagh, and all promise to be stubbornly contested. On the Kildare team James Dunne, Superintendent of Sewers in the Borough of Brooklyn, and one of the most skillful hand ball players in the world, will play for the first time in many years.

HUNTING SET AT RACES OVER ROCKAWAY COURSE

Annual Meet Attracts Fashionable Throng to Cedarhurst.

SIX EVENTS ON THE CARD

With a perfect day and all Long Island gathered on the course at Cedarhurst, the annual Spring race meet for ponies and hunters of the Rockaway Hunting Club was a pronounced success yesterday. From all the surrounding settlements, and even from as far as Oyster Bay, in drag or auto, carryall or coach, the sporting fashionables came early to the meet. The sun was just warm enough to make the light south wind from the ocean feel uncomfortable. The day called forth a galaxy of pretty women, charmingly gowned in bright Spring costumes that on the pretty lawns presented as picturesque a spectacle as one well could imagine.

And the races were all that could be asked. They were well conducted and well contested and interesting from start to finish. There were six events on the card, two flat races that opened the programme and whetted the appetite for the steeplechases that were to follow. Then came the three important contests for the special cups, and finally a short hurdle. With the card well filled and few scratches, the programme was completed with only one mishap—when David Dows's Wexford, with her owner up, fell in the race for the Cedarhurst Cup. But neither horse nor rider was hurt, and, remounting, Mr. Dows put after his field and avoided being last at the finish, in spite of his handicap.

There was a considerable amount of betting on the course, but mostly in small amounts. Books were openly made in one corner of the inclosure, and the layers were always well patronized. The small bets seemed to indicate a feminine interest rather than any serious wagering, though there was considerable money changed hands on the fifth race. As might be expected, the talent did not get it. Beverly Robinson, who had two horses in the Governors Cup, sent Pat to the post the favorite, backed down from 3 to 1 to 2, but John R. Townsend's Solution, well played at fours, though carrying seven pounds heavier impost, romped home a winner, after beating the Robinson pair all the way.

The flat races that opened the day were both won by E. C. Cowdin's Orton Dobbie. The chestnut mare was not favored by the knowing ones in either race though in the first she went to the post second in the betting. This was a quarter-mile sprint, in which the first three in a driving finish were scarcely noses apart, Orton Dobbie, W. Gould Brokaw's Rough and Ready, and H. L. Nicholas's The Orphan. In the third race, W. Gould Brokaw's Gray Sam was the choice, with a play on Allan Pinkerton's Victory Belle, but J. C. Cowdin on the chestnut mare, upset calculations by beating the pair out, they finishing in that order and well up behind her. The distance was a half mile.

The Cedarhurst Cup was the first of the steeplechases. The course was four miles laid over fair hunting country encircling the field. By shifting from side to side of the inclosure nearly the whole course of the race might be confortably watched

There was no pronounced favorite for the Cedarhust and the choice of the field was offered at 2 to 1. W. A. Hazard's Pacific, P. F. Collier's Ascetic and J. Watson Webb's San Marcus were most favored. San Marcus and E. Kernochan's Cresset made the running and drew away from the field. Approaching the last jump Hayes let Cresset out and he flew away from the others, winning by fifteen lengths in easy fashion.

The feature event, the Rockaway Cup, followed. The trophy must be won twice to be permanently held and as L. V. Froment who won with New Zealand last year had no entry in the race, it was virtually a new competition. There was an even division of sentiment between Charles Pfizer Jr.'s Silent Bliss and H. P. Robbins's Quirt, both backed at 2 to 1. The two made the running on the first round with R. Nelson Buckley's Dorval in a good position behind. On the back stretch of the round, Hayes, who had the mount on Dorval, moved up in front, but in the final half of the round Quirt came with terrific speed and overtook Dorval and went after Silent Bliss, who had taken the front. It was neck and neck to the wire, both forced to the limit, but Silent Bliss managed to stick her nose in ahead.

After Solution's victory in the Governor's Cup race, there was some money recovered on Charles Pfizer's Trespass in the hurdle. Trespass never faltered from start to finish and after setting the pace all the way won as he pleased, with Singleton Van Schaick's Simper, E. C. Tone up, second, ridden out. The summaries follow:

MICHIGAN MAKES RECORD IN FOUR-MILE RELAY

Western Runners Defeat Penn and Yale in 18:10 2-5.

DARTMOUTH'S EASY VICTORY

U. of P. Team Captures Mile Event—New York Law and Commerce High School Winners.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., April 28.—Michigan athletes covered themselves with glory in the twelfth annual relay races of the University of Pennsylvania, held to-day on Franklin Field. In winning the four-mile college relay championship Michigan's fleet runners made a new world's record of 18:10 2-5. The former record, 18:25 3-5, was held by the same university, and the indoor record is 18:20 1-5, made by Cornell. In the field events Michigan won three firsts. Coe led in the shot put with 46 feet 5½ inches, Patterson won the high jump with 5 feet 11 inches, and Garrells captured the discus throw with 126 feet 1 inch. Coe was second in this event.

Michigan's feat in establishing the world's record stirred up much enthusiasm, and Pennsylvania also received applause, as her time was 18:24 2-5, or 0:01 1-5 better than the former record.

Pennsylvania won the one-mile relay championship principally through the good work of Cartmell, her third relay runner. Syracuse had a good lead up to the half mile, but on the third quarter Cartmell by good sprinting caught the Syracuse man and passed him. He increased his lead and gave Pennsylvania's last runner a good start. In this quarter Chicago also passed Syracuse, but her last runner could not hold the position, and Syracuse finished second.

In the two-mile championship Dartmouth took the lead from Pennsylvania on the second relay and held it to the finish, winning by 25 yards. Columbia secured second place from Pennsylvania by 15 yards.

The one-mile relay championship for high schools went to the Wendell Phillips School of Chicago, which defeated Baltimore City College and New York High School of Commerce in fast time.

New York Law School won the relay for colleges against Medico-Chirurgical College and Art and Textile School of Philadelphia. The New York High School of Commerce finished first in the high school relay, defeating Newark High School and Radnor High School.

A big crowd witnessed the sports and was kept in a constant whirl of enthusiasm by many close finishes in the relay and short-distance races. There were about 1,200 athletes, representing 190 educational institutions, entered in the athletic carnival, which consisted of relay races and field and track sports.

What was expected to be the closest race of the day, the four-mile championship, proved to be a procession and an easy victory for Michigan. Pennsylvania led on the first mile, but the second Pennsylvania relay man was unable to keep the lead and Michigan's runner easily caught him and took first place. After that it was only a question of how badly the Western University would beat Pennsylvania, as Yale, the only other entry, was almost lapped on the quarter-mile track.

One of the features of the field events was the high quality of the entries in the pole vault. Five of the participants in this contest cleared 11 feet 5½ inches or over. Summary:

One-Mile College Relay Championship.—Won by Whitham, Haydock, Cartmell, Bonsack of Pennsylvania; Young, Cox, Crary, Squires of Syracuse, second; Taylor, Barker, Merriam, Groman of Chicago, third. Time by quarters—0:51 2-5, 1:43 2-5, 2:33 3-5, 3:23 1-5.

TRADITION ON SICK LIST.

The so-called "skin disease" which caused a stoppage of the training of Sysonby for the Spring handicaps last week has made an appearance also in the stable trained by A. J. Joyner, in which establishment the great filly Tradition now is reported to be on the sick list. Tradition's trouble is not nearly as severe as was Sysonby's, however, and there seems to be every probability that she will be returned to active work in a short time.

James R. Keene has not yet announced his determination concerning the declaration of that horse from his early engagements, which would include the Metropolitan and Brooklyn Handicaps, but the horse's condition is reported to be much improved.

Horsemen are inclined to attribute the trouble to the damp weather conditions prevailing when the horses raced at Belmont Park last Spring.

Jockey Nicol Rode Five Winners.

LEXINGTON, Ky., April 28.—With the exception of one, every favorite on the card won to-day at the Kentucky Racing Association track. Five favorites, all winners, were ridden by Jockey Dave Nicol. Boxara, 4 to 1, ridden by Swain, captured the Blue Grass Purse by a nose from Bud Hill, ridden by Nicol.

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

Jockey Herman Radtke's career at Jamaica came to a halt yesterday, when he earned Starter Cassidy's displeasure by misbehavior at the post and was suspended for two days, thus putting off his next appearance in the saddle until next Wednesday. The suspension is the second that Radtke has earned in two weeks of racing, his achievement in riding four winners Friday marking his reappearance after a term of suspension at Aqueduct.

Ram's Horn, the star horse of the W. S. Williams stable, was withdrawn from the race for the Excelsior Handicap at Jamaica yesterday because the horse had contracted a severe cold and was not in condition to run. The owner denied a report that the horse had catarrhal fever. Phil French, from the same stable, was scratched because the stable did not believe he had a chance against the horses that ran, but after the race there was regret by the owner that he had not taken the chance and run.

J. L. McGinnis yesterday sold on private terms to M. Gascoigne, a Western owner, the fast horse Fireball, which carried the McGinnis colors in several races at Aqueduct.

Three carloads of horses arrived at the Sheepshead Bay Depot of the Long Island Railroad yesterday from Kentucky, the horses including the racing stables of Woodford Clay, Julius Bauer, and W. W. Darden. All three arranged to stable at Gravesend.

Escutcheon, winner of the first race at Jamaica yesterday, and entered to be sold for $800, was bid up to $1,500 by Joseph Marone, and retained by his owners, the Arverne Stable, for the usual $5 additional.

With the Saturday holiday to free him from thoughts of school, the apprentice jockey, Garner, attached to Enoch Wishard's stable, took a big jump forward in his remarkable record for a featherweight boy by riding the winners of one-half of the Jamaica programme, or three winning horses. Garner's winning mounts were Blue Dale and Mary Morris, both of which carried J. H. McCormick's colors, and Halifax for Alexander Shields. He also rode Listless in to third place for W. C. Daly, that being his only other mount for the afternoon.

SEA GIRT'S RIFLE RANGE.

Many Improvements Being Made for the Next National Match.

Plans are being perfected for holding the next National rifle match at Sea Girt, N. J. Although the Government has a range at Fort Riley, Kan., which is thoroughly adapted to the needs of the annual rifle competition, the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice decided to again hold the annual match at Sea Girt. The range, which is undergoing extensive improvements, promises to be to America what Bisley is to England. Everything about the range is permanent except the accommodations for the marksmen, who are quartered in tents supplied by the New Jersey National Guard.

Gen. Bird W. Spencer, commanding officer of the New Jersey National Guard, is enthusiastic over the range, and says:

"When the improvements in course of construction at Sea Girt are completed we will have 56 targets at 200 yards, 40 at 300 yards, 40 to 500 yards, 42 at 600 yards, 40 at 800 yards, 40 at 900 yards, and 40 at 1,000 yards, 25 revolver targets, and 24 groups of skirmish targets, a total number of firing points of 347. This is the largest equipped range probably in the world, except the famous Bisley range in England."

Marksmen of the country are looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to the matches next September at Sea Girt. The matches of the National Rifle Association, which cooperates in every way with the National Board, will be held at the same time.

An important change in the programme has been made. Last year the National individual match was shot first, that the marksmen might have the benefit of the practice before shooting on the teams in the National match. There were so many entries for the individual match, over 500, that considerable time was consumed and team Captains fretted over the delay. This year the National match will be shot first, so that the members of the teams can then be free either to remain for the individual match or return home. Plans are in process of being perfected, which, if they can be carried out, promise to make the coming National individual match the greatest ever shot in this country. It is probable the cash prizes provided by the National Government will be supplemented handsomely by others from the friends of rifle practice.

Penn and Annapolis Crews Win.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 28.—The first crew of the University of Pennsylvania defeated the Naval Academy's first crew by three lengths, and the second crew of the navy defeated the second crew of Pennsylvania to-day. Pennsylvania's first crew was ahead throughout the race, winning in 10:25. The navy's second crew's time was 10:38.

Yachts and Yachtsmen.

Thomas B. Leonard has bought the auxiliary yawl Lotus from Grier Hersh of Baltimore for use on the lower bay.

Morgan Barney has designed a fifty-seven-foot motor launch for Henry C. Pearson of this city. Construction has been begun on her at Portland, Me. She will be a commodious cruiser, and will be called Portunus.

P. G. Sedley's sloop Gladys is being converted at Mariner's Harbor by the addition of a fifty-horse power motor into an auxiliary. The Gladys is the last cutter turned out by Edward Burgess, and was a capable boat of her inches. She measured 42 feet over all and 30 feet on the water line, with seven-foot draught and 12-foot beam. She is registered in the Seawanhaka-Corinthian fleet.

William M. Lovering's cabin launch Tringa has been launched and will be tried out in a few days. She is the same type as the Herreshoff boats Scout, Mirage, Tramp, and the like, and is from designs by Fred Lawley.

G. P. Granbery of the New Rochelle Yacht Club has bought the fast sloop Rube, formerly owned by H. L. Bowden of Waltham, Mass., and will bring her around to New York next week. She will be raced on Long Island Sound in the handicap class this year.

The Boston sloop Babs, which is considered one of the fastest of the new boats that will be seen in New York this year, will be brought around Cape Cod by Harry A. Jackson, Jr., and E. C. King, her new owner, this week.

Louis M. Clark has bought the cruising sloop Paola from C. H. Sherbourne, through the agency of Hollis M. Burgess.

F. M. Smith is among those announced as proposed for membership in the Atlantic Yacht Club. This is the forerunner of the appearance of the new sixty-footer Effort on the Lower Bay and on the Atlantic's cruise.

E. E. Malcolm, Chairman; W. H. Remick and E. Hunt Allen have been named as House Committee by the Trustees of the Atlantic Yacht Club.

The launches for W. Butler Duncan and J. Rogers Maxwell, which are building at Bristol, have been put overboard.

John B. Rose's new motor boat Brushby made the run from New York to Newburg, carrying eight people, in three hours.

The fleet of steam yachts refitting at Morris Heights has been augmented by the addition of Brayton Ives's Vitesse, John D. Archbold's Vixen, S. Parker Bremer's Velthra, C. V. Brokaw's Nanita, John H. Hanan's Edithia, Lewis Herzog's Gray Fox, Walter Luttgen's Linta, and S. H. Vandergrift's Cherokee.

Thomas Fleming Day is the latest convert to the motor. The keenest of sailboat men, his alteration of his sloop Gracie into an auxiliary is surprising.

The last of the six one-design boats building for the members of the Penatauquit Yacht Club has been laid down at Huntington's yard. The others are nearly finished. It is expected that they will all be delivered by May 15.

A. A. Fowler has cut down the racing rig of the sloop Tito and changed her name to Gypsy.

F. D. Wright has purchased the Saracen and put four tons of inside ballast in her, cutting down her lead keel.

Capt. Rhodes will again handle W. Gould Brokaw's Sybarita and will ship his crew this week. The yawl expects an active season's racing against the Vigilant in the hands of William E. Iselin.

The Kaiser Cup racer refitting to be placed in commission shortly is the Hildegarde, which Edward R. Coleman is having prepared at New London.

Cox & King, English yacht brokers, announce the order of a well-known American yachtsman, name not announced, of a first-class 920-ton steam yacht, to be built under Lloyd's restrictions by Ferguson & Ramage, at Leith, and to be delivered in America late this Fall. The boat is to be up to date in all respects, to be fitted with twin screws and engines, and to have an indicated power of 1,600 horses. The yacht will be the biggest steam yacht in America with the single exception of Mrs. Ogden Goelet's Nahma, being larger than W. K. Vanderbilt's Valiant by over sixty net tons.

The order is also announced of a motor yawl for F. M. Singer of the New York Yacht Club to be built by H. S. Hansen & Co. at Cowes. She was launched last week, and will be ready for delivery in the latter part of May. She is 76 feet over all, 16 feet 8 inches beam, and will draw 7 feet 9 inches. She is from the designs of J. M. Soper.

Crescents Win at Lacrosse.

The University of Pennsylvania lacrosse team, which was to have played the Crescent Athletic Club twelve yesterday afternoon at Bay Ridge, canceled the game by wire yesterday morning for the reason that the Quaker Faculty refused to allow the students to leave Philadelphia, ordering them to disband the team. THE NEW SAN FRANCISCO.

The return to this country of Mr. D. H. BURNHAM, the head of the commission some time since employed by the Merchants' Association of San Francisco to submit a new plan for the city, with a view both to greater convenience and to greater beauty, emphasizes one of the chief consolations of the great calamity. That is the possession of a plan in accordance with which a greatly improved city can be built on the embers of the old.

When the fire of Baltimore occurred this journal pointed out what a great thing it would be if a new plan were available which would widen and straighten the narrow and tortuous streets that intersected the burned district. If such a plan had been prepared and adopted beforehand Baltimore would no doubt have derived a very great advantage from its possession. But the pressure for rebuilding at the earliest moment practically forced a reconstruction on the old lines, or far too nearly upon them to give the best result. In this respect San Francisco has a great advantage in that the general lines of the new plan have been laid with wider streets and greater and more frequent reservations of open spaces the existence of which would have retarded the spread of the flames and might conceivably have saved a great part of the city which was in fact destroyed.

At the time of the Baltimore fire THE TIMES also endeavored to impress upon our own local authorities the importance of having a circumspect plan for a new New York, which might be executed in parts as occasion served. Something has been done in that way by the Mayor's commission, but not enough. Immediate practicability, meaning mainly the cost of taking property already expensively occupied, ought not to be too much considered in the framing of such a plan. The plan should provide in the first place and in general for the most convenient and beautiful city that could be laid out upon the site, irrespective of the actual improvements, and such a plan should be adhered to as nearly as practicable when occasion served. Sir CHRISTOPHER WREN made such a plan for the new London after the fire of 1666, and modern Londoners agree that it would have been a great thing for London if the plan had been executed. But the point is that it is not good to wait for a great calamity in order to have a plan for a better city which can be executed in detail from time to time and which some dreadful calamity making the city a "tabula rasa" may at some time give you occasion for executing practically in its entirety. That seems to be the case with San Francisco. It would be merely provident for New York to have such a plan prepared and adopted in advance and ready to be executed in case of such a general and extensive destruction as has befallen other great cities. The existence of such a plan ready for execution would be one of the chief alleviations of such a destruction.

SUPERINTENDENT MAXWELL.

Dr. MAXWELL, City Superintendent of Schools, had what must have seemed to him a novel experience at the latest meeting of the Board of Education, when his most earnest opponent, Mr. ABRAHAM STERN, very emphatically supported a resolution to advance the salary of the Superintendent by 25 per cent., praising his "good faith," his "ability," and his general "qualifications" for the difficult and important office he has held with such distinction.

This cordial praise was as creditable to him who gave as to him who received it. We heartily join in it, and we think that the great body of intelligent school workers in this big city will approve, as we know that the leaders in education throughout the country will. Of the qualifications which Mr. STERN so generously recognized one, of the chief is a singular devotion to the cause of education quite apart from his own professional interest in it. Dr. MAXWELL is constantly showing that this cause appeals to his heart as much as to his intellect; he is deeply convinced of its importance in the actual and in the future organization of the community and the Nation, but beyond that conviction is the natural, simple, unaffected love he has for the vast company of pupils confided to his care. This is a qualification not to be acquired by study and not to be assumed when it is not possessed. It is one of the secrets of the second essential qualification of the doctor for his work, his spontaneous, sustained, untiring energy.

Earnestness of sentiment and energy of temperament inspired by a rooted sentiment, it must be said, have their dangers, and in the case of Dr. MAXWELL these are not entirely avoided. They tend in some degree against openness of mind, as we think he has at times manifested. But that tendency, we think also, is incidental and relates rather to small than to large things. Give him time and decent treatment and the Superintendent is likely to face facts opposed to his own opinions with a great deal of candor and with unusually sound judgment. His love of the schools and the scholars, his energy, his long experience, his acuteness of intellect, and the breadth of his study and observation—not to mention his integrity, which all who know him will take as a matter of course—make him an exceedingly valuable man for his place, and New York is fortunate in possessing him.

THE TURK IN EGYPT.

In order to understand the present tension between the Sultan and the Khédive, which is really between the Sultan and the British Government, it is necessary to go back a long way, long before the beginning of the present Khédivate in 1892, and even to 1841, when the Khédivate was made hereditary, by a firman from the Porte, in the family of MEHEMET ALI. At that time Egyptian pilgrims to Mecca went by land, and to guard them the policing of the Sinai Peninsula was delegated to Egypt, although not all the territory of which it consists is Egyptian. But for many years the pilgrims have gone by water to Djeddah, the nearest port to Mecca on the Red Sea. When the present Khédive succeeded, in 1892, Turkey wished to put an end to the arrangement as no longer necessary and as trenching on her rights. The matter was settled by drawing and marking a line through the peninsula and giving Egypt control to the westward of it. It is not denied that Taba, the place occupied by the Turkish troops, is on the Egyptian side of the line. The Turkish commander is accused of aggravating his offense in occupying Egyptian soil by destroying the monuments of the boundary as settled in 1892, a procedure naturally resented both at Cairo and at London.

It is further charged that Egyptians visiting Syria and Palestine have been wantonly annoyed for a year or more by the Turkish authorities. This course is imputed to the Ottoman High Commissioner, MUKHTAR Pasha, whose son and chief counselor is said to be a fanatical Anglophobe. The ultimate objective of the Porte is surmised to be to "show his power" to the Mohammedan nations south of Arabia. His position as "Sheik ul Islam," or Mohammedan Pope, depends in considerable measure upon his control of the means of access to the holy cities of the Mohammedan faith. But it must already be clear at Constantinople that Great Britain will tolerate no infraction of the chartered rights of Egypt, and a naval demonstration in the Levant may be expected to be the next form of British protest.

Naturally, the British suspicion goes to "German intrigue," the German Emperor being regarded in England as not only the general marplot and disturber of the peace in the Mediterranean, a position he has perhaps earned by his course regarding Morocco, but also as a general supporter and instigator of the Sultan against Europe, a position which he earned long before Tangier or Algeciras. But candid and well-informed Englishmen on the spot declare that there is no good ground for this suspicion, and ascribe the Teutonomania which goes with Anglophobia in the Turkish official mind to the natural sympathy of one thoroughly militarized caste with another of the same kind.

BANKS AND CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

The bill which Senator FORAKER has reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, forbidding campaign contributions by National banks or any organization under an act of Congress, doubtless goes as far as the Constitution will permit in the direction of prohibition of such gifts. We imagine that, now it has taken definite form and been presented to the Senate, there will be no open opposition to it of any importance.

It does not follow that the bill will become a law at the present session, and it is quite likely that it may sleep on the calendar for more than one session. The House is more apt to pass such a bill, but even in the House the effective demand for it is not great. Congress is insensitive to the pressure of public opinion in this matter. Contributions by banks do not affect the popular imagination as vividly as those by other corporations, and the shareholders themselves are not deeply concerned about them. The banks are prosperous, dividends are regular and satisfactory, contributions have not been publicly known except in the two Bryan campaigns, and then they were not regarded generally as given to secure special privileges or favors or with any purpose to corrupt the National Legislature. In the present state of opinion it looks as if this measure were rather a "buffer" to stand in the way of more effective action.

The passage of the publicity bill would be effective action. That would not be confined to banks by any means. It would tend to expose, and therefore to check, contributions from corporations and individuals where direct or indirect advantage is sought in return for money. That is the real evil, and it is a grave one. It exists on a very large scale in connection with tariff legislation, and it is one of the scandals and outrages of our political history. Even publicity would not wholly do away with it, but it would go far in that direction. At any rate, it is the touchstone of the sincerity of the majority party. Let it be applied promptly.

DOMICILIARY VISITS.

The dispatches from Paris recounting the action of the Government in ordering "domiciliary visits" to the offices and residences of a number of prominent men in pursuit of evidence of a plot connected with the labor troubles in the north make strange reading for English-speaking people. In this case, according to the statement of M. CLEMENCEAU, the Minister of the Interior, under whose department this policy falls, there is no proof that the plot alleged had for its object the overthrow of the republic, but it was simply suspected that an effort was being made in common by the Clericals and the Socialist agitators to create disorder in the hope of influencing the elections which take place next week.

That is not unlike the efforts of Mr. JOHN MITCHELL to bring around the next dispute with the coal operators on the eve of a Presidential contest, with the expectation that the trouble thus caused, including disturbance of the peace, might advance the interests of the strikers. But no American would expect that Mr. MITCHELL's papers would be seized to secure evidence of such intention. Nor would the mere intention, not carried out in some overt act, bring the offender within the purview of the courts. They do these things differently in France. It does not seem to most of us that the French way is as good as ours. But it must be remembered that there exist in France at least three parties, more or less strongly organized, which openly seek a change in the form of Government, the Monarchists, the Imperialists, and the extreme Socialists. It must be remembered also, though the republic has stood for thirty-five years, there have been eight different forms of Government in France since the foundation of our own Union, and revolution necessarily is to the French mind a thing vastly different from what it is in our mind and much more threatening. A plot to influence elections by attacking public order may have very serious consequences, and is to be met in a grave, even if in an extreme, manner.

EARTHQUAKES AND THE CANAL.

> The delicate adjustments of the lock gates of a ship canal are liable to injuries from strong shocks, entailing delays in transit, while the more violent disturbances which have occurred in the last few years in other parts of Central America could hardly fail to close a canal for long periods.—Brig. Gen. HENRY L. ABBOT in "Problems of the Panama Canal."

To this expert opinion of a member of the President's American and Foreign Board of Advisory Engineers, who nevertheless gave his opinion against the majority view that a sea level canal should be constructed at Panama, we append the following information transmitted to the Senate last month in a letter from the Secretary of State concerning the earthquake at Panama in 1882:

> For Panama the records show twenty-eight earthquakes. Of these twelve occurred in the three years 1882, 1883, and 1884, which illustrates the incompleteness of the record as a whole. The only one that could be called destructive was that of 1621, which destroyed nearly all the houses in Panama. The next most severe was that of Sept. 7, 1882. During this earthquake a part of the front of the cathedral in Panama was thrown down and the headquarters building of the canal company was cracked; the railroad had its track and roadbed in places thrown out of line, and the masonry of three or four bridges and culverts was damaged; at Las Cruces the church was thrown down; at Colon some lives were lost and crevasses were opened, and the Jamaica telegraph cable was broken.

On Wednesday, April 18, the day of the San Francisco earthquake, Secretary TAFT appeared before the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals and declared that Congress ought to take immediate action in deciding the type of the canal; that if Congress decided not to act the President would proceed to the work of building a lock canal. He said:

> I am quite aware of the gravity of the question and of the serious character of a mistake, if a mistake it be, in the recommendation of a minority of the consulting board as to the Gatun Dam, and, while I do not share it, I sympathize with the anxiety which must affect any member of this committee if he has real doubt in regard to the stability of the structure, which is the distinguishing and indispensable feature of the plan.

There are other vital objections to this "distinguishing and indispensable feature of the plan" for a lock canal which decided the majority of the President's Advisory Board to reject it utterly. May not the opinion expressed in the book of Brig. Gen. ABBOT with respect to earthquakes and their effect upon the "delicate adjustments" of a lock canal have some pertinent bearing on the decision Mr. TAFT asks Congress to make without further delay?

ANOTHER JOB FOR FUNSTON.

Major Gen. GREELY has taken precedence of his junior, Brig. Gen. FUNSTON. Therefore, Gen. FUNSTON's attention might be directed to a little matter in this neighborhood which calls for just those qualities of blood and iron which he has demonstrated. We would like to see him sent here to restore order and decency among the Brooklyn Bridge and Subway mobs. It is almost certain that a couple of companies with fixed bayonets would enable passengers to board the cars without having their pockets picked, and without the subjection of the aged and women to indignities and danger.

After that was accomplished the General might send a file of men to the bridge offices and make them get to work, just as he made even the "dressiest" of San Franciscans work among the débris, admitting of no excuse. We are nearly sure that we have not seen in any picture or any account of the awful conditions at San Francisco anything much worse than the surroundings at the Manhattan end of the Williamsburg Bridge, where the elevated railway now for years has held up the stumps of its useless tracks in petition that they might be attached to something to start the circulation of traffic. Here is a bridge costing one-tenth of the loss at San Francisco, and only a pitiful part of its usefulness has been realized in the years which have elapsed since its "completion." The case clearly calls for drumhead court-martials, and the declaration of a state of siege, with Gen. FUNSTON as dictator. Then something worth while would be done.

DOOMSDAY DENIED.

Prof. RUTHERFORD's postponement of the Day of Judgment by uncounted millions of years, due to the theory that the sun is no ordinary cooling and contracting body, but a dynamic mass of radium, and that the earth by its radio-activity can for aeons renew its own wasted heat, has been followed by the negation and denial of any physical Doomsday whatsoever by C. W. SALEEBY, M. D., F. R. S., who proposes the question in Harper's Magazine for May: "Is the Human Race Mortal?" That Earth and the universe waxeth old like a garment has been the theme of prophets, poets, and philosophers of all ages. Lord KELVIN has lately elaborated the theory of the steady relapse of energy into unavailable forms until the world shall become chaos,

And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
And all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this unsubstantial pageant faded,

HERBERT SPENCER, DARWIN, and HUXLEY, among modern philosophers, have yielded to the prophecy, although SPENCER modified his latest views to conform with the vibratory, resurrectional theory of a cycle of phoenix-like deaths and rebirths of the world's systems. To this belief SALEEBY, a disciple of SPENCER, in part subscribes, with the added significant observation that in forecasting the future of the evolutionary process as we observe it in the external world, "the human intelligence has hitherto failed to reckon with itself." Scientists have estimated matter and energy:

> They have weighed stars and electrons; they have read the history of the atom and the organism, of solar and stellar systems; they have established the doctrine of the conservation of energy, and the laws of thermodynamics. But have they reckoned with mind?

Dr. SALEEBY refers disparagingly to MAETERLINCK's suggestion that in the centuries of life which the human race is still assured, men may discover the secret of gravitation and learn to steer our planet nearer the cooling sun. It would at best merely prolong the days of the race:

> The only conceivable way in which the human intelligence can ever succeed in averting the "procession of the great year" is not by postponing the issue, but by reversing the process. The question is this: Whilst energy is being dissipated in accordance with the natural law, can we so manipulate things as to accumulate energy, making the unavailable available—notwithstanding the fact that cosmic processes seem to be essentially irreversible?

But with respect to man and his welfare Nature's processes do not always appear to be "essentially irreversible." The life-giving nitrogen that dissipates into thin air again fertilizes the earth after the decomposing lightning flash. Man, accepting the hint, brandishes his artificial lightnings at Niagara Falls and he produces calcium cyanamide, a combination of nitrogen that will make earth's deserts bloom. Dr. SALEEBY points out that in chemical analysis man is grown expert; but now, reversing the process, he is able to gather the elements together into new compounds hitherto unknown in nature. Prof. RAMSAY has lately demonstrated the natural transmutation of the elements. "It is more than probable that we shall ere long learn to achieve the synthesis of the elements as well as their analysis," says SALEEBY. No energy is ever lost. And if one cosmic process may be reversed to render spent energy again available, why not other and more comprehensible processes, until the blind, wasting impulses of the universe finally come under the sway of an invincible intelligence?

No bids whatever were made for gas lighting in the proposals to the city which have just been opened. The law names a maximum, and in practice that is the minimum. There is no competition so strong that when a maximum is in sight co-operation will fail to make it a minimum. This has long been our contention of the effect of a railway rate-fixing law. Whatever the law or the Commission allows will be collected. No surer death for competition could be devised.

Senator ELKINS, when his attention was called to evidence before the Inter-State Commerce Commission that competitors of his collieries could not get transportation over a railway which he owns, declared that he knew nothing whatever of the cause of complaint testified to. Naturally we know less about it, but this, too, we know, that railway abuses which are testified to by one man and about which another man is merely ignorant will be taken as proved. An ounce of affirmative evidence will outweigh a ton of ignorant or negative evidence. But this case, like so many others, only illustrates that all the pother about the Hepburn bill is aside from the point. The abuses are regarding rebates and discriminations, and not regarding rates. The Hepburn bill relates to the fixing of rates, not to the prevention or punishment of rebates. For that there is existing law.

The New York City Board of Elections needs a Chief Inspector about as much as a giraffe needs a telescope for moon-gazing; but Mr. C. V. C. VAN DUSEN needs a steady job at good pay, and friends of his by subterranean and ignoble tactics are trying to get a bill through the Legislature declaring that the Board "shall" appoint such an officer. The Board repudiates the bill, though it was got out of committee by the false statement that the Board desires its passage. When Brooklyn was a separate city Mr. VAN DUSEN was a clerk in its Bureau of Elections. He lost that place in January, 1897. Senator PAGE's bill would provide him with another. It is a bad bill, for which not an honest word can be said, and no honest legislator ought to vote for it. The public interest requires that Mr. VAN DUSEN shall get his living in other ways.

SMALL TALK OF WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—It was within an hour and a half of the time fixed for the adjournment of the House to-day when Mr. Williams ended his tariff speech. Immediately Mr. Wadsworth, in charge of the time on the Republican side, gave an hour to Mr. Cushman, the Washington tariff champion who had been put forward to reply. At once Col. Lamb of Virginia, in charge of the Democratic time, protested. His side should have half of the remaining time, he said, and if Cushman got an hour, there would be but a few minutes left for him. At that Champ Clark proposed that the adjournment be postponed. Thereupon rose Gen. Grosvenor, "who looks like Santa Claus and talks like Satan."

"Let 'em talk till half past three," he said solemnly, "there'll be plenty of time left then to get to the ball game.

The part of reader that Mr. Towne had played in helping out Mr. Williams furnished Cushman a chance which he promptly employed. After referring to the time when Towne had been a Republican and the pleasure it had given him to listen to Mr. Towne's reading he said: "That rich, rotund, oratorical voice of his has often driven me to envy and the brink of despair. Many times I have wondered at its perfection, but at last I have reached the solution. It comes from the broad practice my friend has had in speaking for all parties, on all questions and from every side of each."

The panic years of '93-'95 were vividly portrayed by the Washington word artist. "I used to study astronomy when I was a boy," he said. "I liked to figure out eclipses. But in '93 there was one eclipse that was not down in the books. When I saw the ponderous and opaque form of Grover Cleveland and the mass of his Democratic followers slowly sweep across the heaven of prosperity in this country there followed instantly an eclipse three hundred and sixty-five times more black and hundreds of times more intense than any ever produced from the solar system."

"It was fortunate for me," continued Cushman, "that I lived then in Tacoma. For Tacoma is on the seacoast and on the seacoast there is always an abundance of clams. When the tide is out the table is set. I assure you that I ate clams and ate clams and ate clams until my stomach rose and fell in perfect harmony with the ebb and flow of the tide."

A postal card that was dated "Heaven" but postmarked in St. Louis was received by Speaker Cannon to-day. The writer, who signed himself "Ezra" and gave his address as "United States Heaven," had this to say:

"The disposition shown by the railroads to come to the aid of the destroyed city by offering their roads free has decided me to lay over the rate bill until the next session of Congress. You should adjourn by May 5 next." The card was addressed, very properly, to the "House of Representatives, care of Speaker Cannon."

Decadence of Madison Square.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In passing through Madison Square yesterday morning I was shocked at its slovenly appearance. The square was absolutely covered with newspapers. Rubbish, such as peanut shells, orange peel, &c., covered the space under many seats. I spoke to a Police Sergeant, also to a man apparently in charge of the square. I said to him: "Is there no Park Commissioner who has charge of this place, so that it need not be in such a disgraceful condition? How many men have you to clean up the square?" He replied: "One man. There is no appropriation for more."

It really seems as if some one could do something about this formerly pretty square. It is not now decent for nurses and children to frequent. Those large garbage cans for newspapers, orange skins, &c., it seems, could be placed about so that the men who occupy all the seats could be induced to put their newspapers in these receptacles.

ORIGIN OF EARTHQUAKES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I note that all scientists, except Christian Scientists, are agreed that the cause of earthquakes is a slipping or fracturing of rock strata. I beg to differ with them and submit the following, which I think more clearly explains all the characteristic movements of an earthquake.

1. The source of the shock (as determined by drawing lines perpendicular to the fractures in buildings, &c., caused by earthquakes) has been shown to be at a depth exceeding fifteen miles. A series of such lines plotted to scale and drawn to their intersection shows approximately the focus of the vibrations. At a depth of 15 miles, or, say, 80,000 feet, the temperature should be 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit, if we allow an increase of 1 degree for each 80 feet. At that temperature all rocks would be rendered plastic and not liable to fracture the same as cold material at the surface. If we assume an average specific gravity of 3 to that depth, then the pressure would be 52.8 tons per square inch, equal and in all directions.

It has been pretty well demonstrated that there is a large amount of water in all igneous rocks, and also that this water is a part of these rocks when they are erupted from volcanoes. The tremendous force of Vesuvius is only such waters seeking an outlet, and the amount of water blown out as steam during such an explosion amounts to hundreds of cubic miles, and is a distinct addition to surface waters.

The old theory that explosions were caused by a fracture in the ocean bottom which let in water to regions of great temperature, which converted it into steam and blew the tops off of volcanoes situated long distances inland, is absurd and no longer accepted. The waters, or, let us say, steam which is occluded in the igneous core of the earth has been there ever since the planet condensed from a nebula, and has been slowly coming away along lines of weakness, the vents of which are craters, hot springs, geysers, &c. Volcanic explosions such as we have recently witnessed at Vesuvius are always accompanied by earthquakes, but such earthquakes as that which damaged San Francisco are not accompanied by volcanic explosions. The difference between them is only of degree. They are both due to the expansive force of steam under high temperature and pressure seeking an outlet to the surface.

In the case of Vesuvius the steam in its travel from great depth toward the surface encounters lower temperatures than necessary to condense it at the pressure prevailing, and it suddenly collapses and causes a shock, which is proportionate to the size of the body of steam condensed and the suddenness of its condensation. This steam bubbles near the surface, or it may be at thousands of feet or several miles below the surface, with accompanying sudden condensation, causing the surface to vibrate and fracture the buildings on it. The beginning of a volcanic eruption is always announced by a series of earthquakes, and until the path of the steam and lava flow has become sufficiently hot they continue with great violence. After the pipe or crater leading to the surface has acquired a high temperature so that the steam is not condensed, the eruption may continue for considerable time without earthquakes until the accumulated steam is exhausted, after which the vent may close up, and a period of more or less quiet follow. The earthquake without accompanying volcanic explosions is simply a case where the first bubble of steam, or it may be several bubbles, traveling upward through the more or less plastic interior, encounters a region of low enough temperature to cause sudden condensation.

The rumblings and heaving of the ground immediately over such a rising body of steam will be greater than at other points, and the accompanying shock of condensation will also be sharper and shade off in all directions. Earthquakes are simply blind or incipient volcanoes. The above theory may be illustrated by watching the exhaust of a pump or engine into a tank or barrel of water. When the steam first starts into the water there is a series of shocks accompanied by a dancing of the surface of the water, and this will continue as long as the steam enters and until the water in the tank or barrel has been heated to boiling point, after which the steam will partly pass through the water and appear on the surface, and eventually the whole contents of the barrel or tank may be blown out. Great scientists are capable of making mistakes, and rock fractures are only symptoms and not the cause of earthquakes.

PLINY AND CRAWFORD.

From The Minneapolis Tribune.

It was a clever idea of THE NEW YORK TIMES to get so eminent a man of letters as Marion Crawford to make a report of the eruption of Vesuvius. This is distinctly high-class newspaper reporting.

One is reminded irresistibly by it of the only authentic report we have of the eruption that overwhelmed Herculaneum and Pompeii by a man of letters still more eminent. Besides some scrappy references in Roman letters and biography, we are indebted for knowledge of the great eruption of the year 79 to two letters of Pliny the younger to his friend Tacitus, the historian.

Notice the interesting parallel. Mr. Crawford is a novelist and historian who lives at Sorrento, on the Bay of Naples. Pliny the younger was an essayist, advocate, and man of the world, who lived in a villa on the opposite side of the bay in full view of Vesuvius. He described the eruption in his letters to Tacitus much as Crawford describes that now going on, though he was in greater personal peril than has as yet approached Sorrento.

He and his family had to flee by ship and then inland, and his uncle Pliny, the naturalist, who commanded the Roman fleet at Misenum, lost his life in trying to go to the rescue of imperiled citizens, just as the French fleet has been ordered to the Bay of Naples to save what life it can.

Though Pliny gives so vivid a story of the eruption, he knew nothing when he wrote of the fate of Pompeii and Herculaneum. Thanks to quicker communication, Crawford is able to tell the story of the devastated cities on the volcano's slope. Some of these, like Bosco Trecase, have been overwhelmed by lava overflow, like Herculaneum. Others are threatened with burial under ashes and cinders like Pompeii.

One notices the difference that a high wind spreads the shower of ashes and cinders thinly over a far wider area than 2,000 years ago. We may perhaps guess that there was less wind then and that an enormous discharge of ashes shot straight upward and fell in one mass on the nearest city.

It has always been assumed, without much real knowledge or authority, that there was enormous loss of life in Herculaneum and Pompeii. This belief is not confirmed by excavations in either place, though the few human remains are fairly well preserved. The destruction by lava flow and falling ashes is not rapid and able-bodied persons have time to escape.

The percentage of loss of life is not great in the cities that have been depopulated by this eruption. It may be that it was not enormous 2,000 years ago, though there were no railroads or automobiles then to hasten the flight of refugees.

EIGHT HOURS FOR ALL.

Bill Passes Legislature, Affecting All Except Farm and Domestic Laborers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Are you aware that a bill has been passed by the Legislature, and is now in the hands of the Governor awaiting his signature, to make it a law that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all classes of employes in this State except those engaged in farm and domestic service unless otherwise provided by law? This law was enacted at the behests of lobbyists employed by the labor unions who infest the Capitol at Albany during the session of the Legislature. If it receives the signature of the Governor and becomes a law, it will cause more trouble and annoyance to the merchants, especially the retail merchants, than any law ever enacted in this State.

It is a bad bill; it is a bill which should never have been enacted; it is a bill which the Governor should veto without hesitation; it is a bill on a line with the threats made by Gompers and others to the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives—that unless the bills for which they asked were passed the labor element would oppose the election of the members of Congress who voted against them. It was a direct challenge to the people of the country, as this bill is to the people of this State.

Californians Do Say "Frisco."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to state that "F. W. M." is greatly in error when he says that the word "Frisco" is rarely, if ever, used by the natives of California. I spent several months in that State, and it was there that I first heard the word used, and then by a "native son of the Golden West." I was for a time clerk in a hotel patronized by commercial travelers and others, many coming from San Francisco, who usually signed "S. F." and frequently "Frisco." In conversation it was the rule rather than the exception for them to use the condemned word, and that, too, with seeming relish.

I also toured the State on a bicycle, coming in contact with natives in different parts of the State. When occasion arose for mentioning the city, it was invariably eliminated to "Frisco."

If "F. W. M." traveled in that country, he possibly mingled with purists exclusively.

For Popular Election of Senators.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since my letter of the 17th inst. calling attention to the action of the Erie County Board of Supervisors and the Buffalo Common Council in favor of the election of United States Senators by popular vote, the Common Councils of Elmira and Gloversville unanimously, and the Common Council of Lockport by a vote of 9 to 1, have passed like resolutions. The County Boards of Greene, Hamilton, and Niagara Counties and the Common Councils of Newburg, Dunkirk, and the City of Hudson will also take similar action by a large majority at their next meetings, so I am informed by the respective clerks of those bodies. The fact that these boards when they consider the matter at all take favorable action with scarcely a dissenting voice, seems to me to be a very good index of the overwhelming public sentiment in favor of the principle of the Tompkins bill now in the Assembly Judiciary Committee at Albany.

Subway Finance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The operators of the Subway coolly attempt to charge as capital invested in building and operating the Subway $12,000,000 alleged to have been paid for the lease. The meaning of the contract for payment to the city seems clearly to be that, after 5 per cent. is earned on the actual and reasonable outlay for fitting up and equipment, this 1 per cent. becomes payable. It is an audacious robbery to add to cost the water injected by the lessees for their own purposes. Water will generally be swallowed by the speculative public in liberal amounts, but to charge it up as construction against the city, which built and gave the lessees the Subway, in a contract to pay it a small return after interest on the cost of equipment is earned, is a refinement of cruelty.

Bearing One Another's Burdens.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We ourselves have lost a fortune, as well as our neighbors. We are all poor together out here in San Francisco now. We have a beautiful home in the most aristocratic section of the city, but all our assets were across the bay. Everybody is poor this morning—but as poor as we all are we have something for this homeless multitude who crowd our city. M.

Opera Employes in Distress.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would it not be a proper thing to divert a few drops from the great stream of money flowing from the noble beneficence of New York toward relieving the distress and mitigating the losses of the members of the orchestra, chorus, ballet, and other employes of our opera company? I am told that many of them are in need of assistance. J. R. S.

ON THE CONGO.

It's full of verdant plains and mountains high—
And every one who lives there has a modicum of face
And just as many legs as you and I.

Now, one of them, a Hottentot, or something of that kind,
By a dusky maid was very much admired;
He had a fine appearance and a modicum of mind,
But otherwise left much to be desired.

He ambushed an explorer once and promptly tumbled dead,
Alas!—it was the maiden who descried him,
Reclining on a hillock with a modicum of lead
And a modicum of bowie-knife inside him.

When that maiden saw his body she belied the people's fears;
She gazed upon that Hottentot majestic,
Remarked, "That fellow's done for," shed a modicum of tears,
And married the explorer's black domestic.

So the region of the Congo, you'll observe, is rather bad
As a whereabouts of tragical romances,
For every one who lives there has a modicum of adaptability to circumstances.

HERESY TRIAL CLOSES; COURT NOW TO DECIDE

LAST ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL

BATAVIA, N. Y., April 28.—The fate of the Rev. Dr. Algernon S. Crapsey as a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church rests with his judges. The trial of the rector of St. Andrew's, Rochester, on charges of heresy and violation of ordination vows ended to-day with the final arguments of counsel for the accused and for the prosecution. The ecclesiastical court of five members took the evidence under consideration, and will render a verdict to Bishop Walker of the Diocese of Western New York on or before May 15.

When the trial was resumed to-day, Edward M. Shepard of New York opened the proceedings with an address to the court in favor of the defendant. He brought out the fact that Franklin D. Locke, who addressed the court yesterday for the prosecution, was not a member of the Church and that the canons provided that any counsel addressing the court should be a communicant, adding that he, Mr. Shepard, was a communicant.

"It is inconceivable," Mr. Shepard said, "that any court should be willing to convict of an offense upon the uncorroborated testimony of Mr. Alexander. In this Holy Catholic Church of ours, whatever the organization, there is some division, some variation, and in this trial we see two such variations: First, those who see and are convinced of the usefulness of organization and discipline, and second, those who believe the Church to be a great growth, and that it will go on growing, in beauty and sacred extent. This division may be called the liberal school. It is represented here by Dr. Worcester.

"Even in the time of the auto da fe in Spain there was one invariable rule, which was that the man accused of heresy should be labored with. In this presentment, which only says that in the past Dr. Crapsey has made certain errors, there is not a word to show that he was labored with in any way before this case was brought to trial."

Mr. Shepard expressed the belief that the Catholic Church, by which he said he meant the universal church, for the Continent of America was the Protestant Episcopal Church. "It is to be, I believe," he said, "the centre of life and good living in every community in our land." He cited precedents in which he said that several well-known English clergymen had expressed views which could assuredly have been declared more heretical than those uttered by Dr. Crapsey, and had either never been brought to trial for them or had been tried and acquitted. He made especial reference to the case of Archbishop Temple, who finally reached the most exalted position in the Church of England.

Ex-Chief Justice Stiness of Rhode Island followed Mr. Shepard and spoke for the prosecution. He said it seemed that the defense was trying the case before the public and not before the court.

"I have failed to see any connection between the speeches of the defense and the case before the court," he continued. "It is the duty of the court to pass judgment on this case, not to reconstitute the Protestant Episcopal Church. Every fact in the presentment stands before the court without contradiction. I notice in Dr. Crapsey's answer, read by Mr. Perkins yesterday, that he denies one portion of the presentment against him, and I call the attention of the court to the fact that the counsel for the defense has offered no defense whatever in support of this denial.

"There has been one remarkable thing in this proceeding which has led me seriously to doubt the good faith of the defense, namely, that it has not called upon Dr. Crapsey to testify. The defendant writes a statement which is introduced and put upon the record. This is not testimony before the court, and, furthermore, this statement of Dr. Crapsey's amounts to a violation of the doctrines of the Church.

"Mr. Shepard argued almost every question except that actually before the court, which is: Has Dr. Crapsey, under his ordination vows, the right to say Christ was not born of the Virgin Mary? The plea has been made that the court should acquit the defendant on the ground of liberality, but I say to you that the Church must guard inviolate its sacred doctrines. The Church has a solemn duty to teach certain truths, and she cannot permit a man holding contrary beliefs to serve her."

John L. O'Brian of Buffalo made the closing address for the prosecution.

"The statement of the virgin birth of Christ in the creed is equal in value to the statement of the crucifixion," declared Mr. O'Brian. "If Dr. Crapsey's utterances are allowed to pass unheeded by the Church, cannot one of her priests arise to-morrow and deny the crucifixion? Dr. Crapsey's statements regarding Christ are hopelessly untrue and his presence in the Church is a living lie. Truth cannot be two-faced. The Church cannot have a minister who will preach the doctrine of the annunciation in his Church in the morning and in the evening declare it to be nonsense."

BARBER WOULDN'T SHAVE HIM

Thought Cliffside Park's ex-Mayor Favored Consolidation.

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, April 28.—Samuel E. Renner, a well-known Republican politician and a real estate dealer of Weehawken, pleaded non-vult here to-day to an indictment charging him with having signed, without authority, the name of ex-Mayor Neumann of Cliffside Park to a public notice.

For some time the scheme of consolidating the Cliffside Park borough with the Borough of Fairview has been agitated, but the Cliffside Park people were opposed to it. Last February a notice appeared in one of the local papers announcing that application would be made to the Legislature for the passage of an act effecting the consolidation. It bore the names of ex-Mayor Neumann and George C. Dods.

Neumann says that in consequence of the appearance of the notice the townspeople snubbed him, and that his barber even refused to shave him.

Mr. Renner explains that he was acting for an association that favors the consolidation and that he had been made to understand that the ex-Mayor was willing to have his name appended to the notice.

Farmer a Suicide at 70.

EAST MORICHES, L. I., April 28.—Warren Hulse, aged 70, a farmer living in this village, killed himself at his home last night by swallowing arsenic. A few weeks ago his cousin, who was more than 90 years old, shot himself, and it is thought that grief may have unbalanced Mr. Hulse's mind. He leaves a widow and several grandchildren.

NEW YORK "FOSSILS" DINE.

They Joke Each Other and Tell a Few Stories at Republican Club.

Fossil—A person or thing that is behind the times; antiquated or out of date.—Standard Dictionary.

There's a band of men in New York who style themselves "The Fossils." Several New York fossils created lots of laughter last night when they held their third annual dinner at the Republican Club, 54 West Fortieth Street.

The Fossils are composed of men in various walks of life who pride themselves on having formerly been engaged in "amateur journalism." The President of the club is Charles C. Heuman. He talked to the club members at dinner last night.

"Once every year," he said, "is Fossil day, and our sluggish existence is cast off for a time. We rejoice in having no cliques and we have no jealousies. Therefore we differ from most of humankind. With one exception every member of the club is here or in jail. Am I right?"

"As far as we have heard up to date," responded a diner.

Charles H. Young also talked. "I have been unfortunate in my career," he said, "for, unlike my friend Mr. Beck, I have had no life insurance clients, and have had, therefore, but few people to keep out of jail. I had the President of the club over in Philadelphia for dinner the other day. We had a Philadelphian with us. I ordered the dinner, and included snails on the list.

"'We don't have 'em here,' said the waiter.

"'Why not?' I asked.

"'Well, you see, this is Philadelphia,' he replied, 'and they're too slow to catch 'em over here.'"

James M. Beck, a member of the club, was introduced:

"Your President has introduced me here with glowing words of praise," he said. "I liked them. I received them as the driver for the Bishop of Kentucky did when the 'toastmaster' at an English reception called for the Bishop's carriage. After calling for the carriages of "Lord Bishop" So and So and "Lord Bishop" This and That he finally yelled:

"'The carriage of the Lord Bishop of Kentucky.' There was no answer. He called again. There was no answer. A third time he yelled louder, and finally the Kentucky negro driver responded.

"'Rastus, you rascal,' admonished the Bishop after he had been driven home, 'why didn't you answer that call when you heard it the first time?'

"'Deed, Massa,' he answered, 'I was so tickled to heah you called 'de Lord Bishop' that I swo'h that I was a-goin' to heah it as many times as I could.'"

LIKES "THE OPTIMIST."

Author Glad to Consult His Own Taste Sometimes, He Says.

At the close of the third act of "The Optimist" at Daly's last night, Sidney Rosenfeld, the author of the piece, made a speech in which he poked mild fun at managers and newspapers.

"I suppose," he said, "the critics have been too kind to my former plays for me to rail at them because they don't like this one. Whatever may be the matter with the piece, I am satisfied with the company. I believe in writing a good many plays that are sure to make money in order to be able to produce one now and then according to my own taste with a company of my own choosing.

"When I took 'The Optimist' around to the managers, I am thankful to say, several refused it. One manager said the title was too professional. I asked him to explain. He gave a vague answer.

"'Why,' I said, 'I don't believe you know the difference between an optimist and a pessimist.'

"'Well, I do,' he said. 'An optimist takes care of the eyes and a pessimist looks after the feet.'

"When I was producing my earlier pieces," said Mr. Rosenfeld, "a certain critic here in New York spoke indulgently of the progress they showed, and wound up with the remarks that according to current indications he should be on the lookout for me about 1912. Well," said Mr. Rosenfeld emphatically, "1912 will soon be here."

"The Optimist" closed at Daly's last night after only a week's visit.

POEMS SET TO MUSIC.

Works of Two Authors Rendered by Mrs. Grant at Berkeley Lyceum.

Mrs. Amy Grant, at the Berkeley Lyceum Theatre, gave an interesting series of musical readings yesterday afternoon. Four short poems by Gustav Kobbé, with music selected by the author, were rendered, Mr. Kobbé accompanying Mrs. Grant on the piano. The poems were "Good Night," "Outward Bound," "To a Little Girl," and "'Tis Love That Makes the World Go Round." Four other poems, from Walt Whitman, were set to music by Franklin Harris, who also played the accompaniments. "The Wooing of Hiawatha" and "A Ballad of Hell" preceded the groups of songs.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN BACK.

Says He Had to Meet Underground Opposition Abroad.

Mr. Hammerstein went abroad eight weeks ago to get artists and perfect plans for his coming venture in grand opera. He declared that underground methods had been used to prevent his success, but that he had surmounted all obstacles. He ran over a list of the cities which he had visited, and it took in nearly every one in Europe of any importance.

He declared that he had spared no effort and had gone long distances if to see only one man. As to singers, he said he had many of them. He would not go into details, but said he would give out a statement to-day.

MAY DAY FETE AT BRYN MAWR.

Students Arrange a Festival for a New Building Fund.

The students of Bryn Mawr College will give an Elizabethan May Day fête on the College Campus on Tuesday, May 1. Five years ago the students held a May Day festival that has been remembered with great pleasure.

The programme for this year's fête has been arranged with great care, and the proceeds will go toward a student building for which $15,000 has already been raised. Tickets are on sale at Sherry's.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Louis James announces that next season he will present an elaborate production of "The Merry Wives of Windsor."

The jury appointed to pass upon the plans of the new theatre has selected those of Carrere & Hastings and Warren & Wetmore as the two being superior to all others in fulfilling the problem outlined. The final decision in reference to these two sets of plans has been deferred pending certain revisions.

ELMIRA COLLEGE WOMEN HEAR MAN DESCRIBED

His Attitude Toward the Other Sex Set Forth in Verse.

CLUB'S ANNUAL LUNCHEON

Fire in Hotel Where Meeting Was Held Didn't Distract Attention from the Speeches.

The Elmira College Club of this city sat through the little fire at the Hotel Manhattan yesterday, where the members were holding their annual luncheon. The women did not pause in their long programme, and only objected when the fire engines threatened to drown some particularly fine gem of speech.

It was a very small fire, and though the smoke penetrated the luncheon room, no one appeared to pay any attention to it except a man guest, and the waiters told him an untruth to explain the presence of the fire company.

The women had more important matters on hand. There are more professions than can be counted on the fingers of both hands represented in the club, and very few subjects escaped discussion.

The women talked about their individual occupations in life, and one of the homekeepers therefore was selected to consider man. Mrs. Henry Elliott Mott, to whom the subject was assigned, told the club members that she had interviewed all the men of her acquaintance to get points for her address. They talked chiefly about women, and here is the way Mrs. Mott interpreted their comments.

It was a perfectly happy man, with a wife who always allowed him the last word, that upon being asked to give suggestions for an address upon man, said:

But woman, bless her little heart, wants everything she sees.

A Wall Street man declared that:

Wives and daughters all remind us we must make our little pile,
And, departing, leave behind us cash for them to dress in style.

You will find the Christian soldier represented by his wife.

"You made my husband a suit of clothes ten years ago," Mrs. Mott said to her husband's tailor, "and I know that in your business you must know a man from A to Z. What can I tell a club of women about them?"

"Man," replied the tailor, gloomily, "is doomed by his clothes. As long as he dresses like his valet, his butler, and a waiter in a restaurant, his case is hopeless. When he wore knee breeches, diamond buckles, and fine feathered hats, the women could not resist him. When he goes back to the clothes of a gentleman, the world will be his; as long as he dresses as he does to-day, the woman will be supreme and rule."

"Can you let me have a book upon 'Man as the Ruler of the Universe'?" asked Mrs. Mott, dropping into a library in search of printed facts.

"You'll find it in the fiction department," said the Librarian.

Discouraged, the investigator turned to the only man whom she was certain, through feminine submission in the home, had become supreme—and she went to her husband:

"Dear," she said, "haven't I been a good wife to you all these years? Haven't I always listened to your sermons every Sunday and never answered back? Arn't we united, and—"

"My dear," interrupted the clergyman, "we are one, and you are the one."

Mrs. Emma Paddock Telford, in a talk on "Journalists," gave some of the actual correspondence experiences of the head of a "Housekeeper's Department."

One woman wanted to know how to keep "aunts" out of her kitchen, another how to make the kind of Johnnie cake the minister would like, and a man wrote:

"Please send me as many Chinese recipes as you can, for I am going to start a Chinese restaurant in the Bowery."

Mrs. William R. Bross told the college woman that a knowledge of cooking is a valuable asset in a woman's life. This is what came to her through making a good pie.

"I had a hard time learning to make it at Elmira," she said. "They gave me the materials and the directions and left me to turn out the pies alone. I rubbed in the shortening, I mixed the dough, I rolled it out. But the paste was queer; it kept drawing in at the edges and wouldn't cover the plate. Then I added more dough and rolled it, added more dough and rolled it again, and I was still rolling when the instructor came in and said, severely:

"'Don't you know that you must never roll piecrust a second time?'

"I had rolled that crust the twenty-second time, but I learned to make pies, and when one day I had occasion to make one for a luncheon on a yacht, it appealed to a man of highly discriminating tastes, and now he is my husband."

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

The Baroness Hengelmüller will preside at the "Exposition Culinaire" on Monday afternoon at Rauscher's, where she has organized an entertainment to aid the San Francisco sufferers.

Col. and Mrs. Charles S. Bromwell entertained at dinner this evening. Their guests were ex-Senator Henry G. Davis, Baron Bussche of the German Embassy, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Eno, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lee, Mrs. John Rodgers, Mrs. J. P. The latter, who is a granddaughter of Senator Frye, has passed several seasons in Washington, where her engagement to Mr. Hobart was announced last season. Mrs. Hobart has already presented her son with a handsome estate near Paterson, where he and his bride will take up their residence immediately after their marriage.

NEILSON-PARK WEDDING.

Midshipman Marries Daughter of Pittsburg Steel Manufacturer.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 28.—Miss Mary Park, daughter of William Gray Park, a Pittsburg steel manufacturer, was married to-day to Midshipman Raymond Perry Rodgers Neilson of New York and Annapolis, a cousin of Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt. The total value of the presents received by the bride is estimated at $250,000. Among those who sent gifts were August Belmont and Andrew Carnegie, the latter a former business associate of the father of the bride.

The decorations at Trinity Episcopal Church, where the ceremony was performed, were elaborate. The Rev. Dr. William H. Neilson of New York, uncle of the bridegroom, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Alfred W. Arundel, rector of Trinity, officiated.

The bride was given away by her father. The maid of honor was Miss Elsie Park, a sister of the bride. The bridesmaids were Miss Ellen Park, a cousin, from Philadelphia, and Miss Amory Hare, also of that city; Miss Mary C. Lefferts and Miss Blanche Emory, both of New York, and Miss Gertrude Childs of this city.

J. A. BAILEY'S $5,000,000 ALL FOR HIS WIDOW

Will Declares No One Else Has Claim on His Bounty.

NO CIRCUS MANAGER NAMED

Mrs. Bailey May Favor Her Brother, Joseph McCaddon, Whose Venture in France Failed.

The will of James A. Bailey, the "Circus King," was filed in the Westchester County Surrogate's office at White Plains yesterday. Mr. Bailey leaves his entire estate to his widow, Ruth Louise Bailey, and names her as sole executrix.

He further stipulates that no security of any kind shall be required of her for the administration of the estate. The estate is believed to amount to more than $5,000,000, but the value is not given in the tax affidavit. The original will was drawn April 21, 1886, and in a codicil dated May 27, 1904, the showman added these words:

"It has been and is now my wish that my beloved wife shall have and possess absolutely all of my estate upon my decease, she having by her counsel and devotion largely aided me in the acquisition of my property. I do not feel that any other person but she has any claim upon my bounty."

Mr. Bailey, besides his widow, left a brother and several nieces and nephews, and Surrogate Silkman has ordered service of citation upon them by publication, as all of them live out of the State. The names of the next of kin are given as follows: Edward McGinniss, a brother, residence unknown; Edward Gordon, nephew, supposed to reside in Detroit; Mary Gordon and Ann Robinson, nieces, Detroit; Kate Gordon Goodwin, niece, Lynn, Mass.

Much to the surprise of many of his friends, Mr. Bailey did not name his successor as head of the Barnum & Bailey Circus. But his widow, who inherits all of his stock, will have something to say when this selection is made. It is believed by some that she will favor the selection of her brother, Joseph McCaddon, who, since the death of his wife, has been living at the Bailey home in Mount Vernon.

Mr. McCaddon was formerly one of the managers of the Barnum show, but resigned and took a circus of his own to France. Owing to bad weather, this venture was a failure and the show became stranded. Mr. McCaddon could not pay the performers their salaries and many of them were obliged to appeal to the American Consul for their passage back to this country. There is another report that the selection of a head for the circus will be left largely to George Starr, who is one of the largest stockholders of the Barnum & Bailey shows.

THE ENTERPRISE A RELIC.

Massachusetts Hopes the Navy Will Allot a More Modern Schoolship.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 28.—The wooden, bark-ribbed sloop-of-war or corvette Enterprise, one of the few relics of the "obsolete" navy, is now in drydock at the navy yard here.

This vessel was loaned several years ago to Massachusetts for service as a school ship for young men who could not afford to pay tuition for training in seamanship, and she is now being overhauled and repaired, preparatory to the usual Summer practice cruise along the Atlantic Coast and across to Europe, with about 100 cadets aboard.

An examination of the main shafting and the boilers of the ship a year ago suggested that they were not in the best condition for steam cruising, hence a large percentage of the cruising was made under sail, steam being used only as an auxiliary. A recent examination by a special board showed that the conditions this year were not much improved, and that in another year the ship should have new boilers and extensive repairs to her engines and other machinery.

Although the hull and the masts and rigging of the ship are remarkably well preserved, it is a question whether or not the system of this branch of public school education does not demand a ship of more modern type and equipment, and it is believed that the cadets could be much better prepared in their practical knowledge with one of several other vessels of the navy that will not likely be needed for war purposes again.

The gunboat Detroit, now at the navy yard, which the Navy Department recently had surveyed, has been suggested as a successor for the Enterprise.

The State commission hopes that the Navy Department will consent to transfer the gunboat Marietta, a vessel of 1,030 tons displacement, built about ten years ago, to Massachusetts as a public marine school.

APRIL 1906

MERRY LARK CAPTURED THE $10,000 EXCELSIOR

Roseben, Favorite at Odds-On, Unplaced and Beaten Off.

ORMONDE'S RIGHT SECOND

All Placed Horses in the Race at Long Prices—Twenty Thousand Saw Contest at Jamaica Track.

The largest crowd of the Spring racing season gathered at the Metropolitan Jockey Club's Jamaica track yesterday to witness the running of the fourth Excelsior Handicap, and was surprised and disappointed in about equal proportions when the 10 to 1 chance, Merry Lark, won rather cleverly, with the odds-on popular favorite, Roseben, unplaced and beaten off. Ormonde's Right, second choice in the post betting, finished second, a length and a half behind the winner, with odds of 8 to 1 against his chances, while the extreme outsider, Eugenia Burch, against which 100 to 1 was laid, was third, a length behind Ormonde's Right.

As a spectacle, the race was equal to the splendid promise it made when the field for the $10,000 stakes was announced, but the result was so far from public expectation that the crowd had only a faint cheer for the victor, and then turned attention to wonder at the poor performance of Roseben, the champion sprinter of last season, which had been advanced to the place of first favorite for the Brooklyn Handicap.

The race was run under ideal conditions as to weather and track, with but a light breeze blowing, and the sun shining full on the club, grand, and field stands, which were packed close to the immense capacity of the Jamaica course, the attendance being estimated by the track officials at 20,000, a record patronage for the Metropolitan Jockey Club. The gathering was far away the most brilliant in the history of the club, and was suggestive of the best days of the Summer at the more fashionable race tracks. Women guests occupied a great part of the club balcony, while the grandstand boxes were filled through the length of the stand. Behind the clubhouse automobiles filled a parking space of several acres, and on the home-coming made a singularly interesting procession.

The Excelsior Handicap, run as the fourth race of the programme, was decided when the weather conditions of the afternoon had just reached their best. The first disappointment came when the numbers of the starters for the $10,000 prize were announced and it was discovered that the Excelsior had lost five of the fifteen horses named overnight as runners. This was only twenty minutes before the time for the call to the post for the race, the track officials, following the plan devised to prevent the transmission of news to the city poolrooms, having held back all information until ten minutes after the regulation time for the posting of the starters' numbers.

Delhi, from the James R. Keene stable, and the Western horse, Ram's Horn, one of the choices for the Brooklyn Handicap, were the most important of the horses withdrawn, as they were among the starters that would have invited support by the betting public. Phil Finch, stable mate of Ram's Horn, and the P. S. P. Randolph entry, Red Knight and Master of Craft, making up the list of scratches. With Delhi out, Roseben was left as top weight, and the somewhat moderate class of the field remaining to oppose him caused a rush for the opening odds against Roseben the moment the numbers went up.

The first price posted in the grand stand ring, where a hundred and fifty bookmakers were in line, was 7 to 10, but the flood of money that was offered at that figure caused a steady cut in the betting until at post time, Roseben was at 2 to 5, the layers complaining then that the crowd would have nothing but Roseben. Ormonde's Right held his place as second choice, though the odds went from 6 to 1 against the Carter Handicap winner of 1905, up to 8 to 1. The only other horses that were really backed were Merry Lark, by his stable following, from 15 to 1 down to 10 to 1, and Race King, because of Radtke riding him, from 15 to 1 down to 10 to 1. Eugenia Burch started as the last outsider at 60 to 1, after 100 to 1 had been laid against her.

The delay at the post was brief, the barrier lifting to a fair send-off, with the horses close to the rail having a shade the better of it. Hermitage led off, followed by Race King, Batts, and Roseben, the last named, however, seeming a trifle tangled in his stride as he moved away, and not breaking in the catlike style that is his custom. Passing the stand the first time, Hermitage, going over to the rail, led by a scant length, Roseben hot foot after him, and overhauling him at every jump, but because the horses reached the first turn in the next two or three jumps, Roseben had to run around the leader, and did not take first place until they were half way around the turn to the back stretch. Through the back stretch and to the far turn Roseben held his lead, but on the turn out of the back stretch Merry Lark closed on him, and Ormonde's Right, coming from the rear half of the field, took third place.

In the run around the last turn Merry Lark made a rush that took him to Roseben's side, and the horses hung head and head for just a stride or two, Merry Lark then showing in front and Roseben lagging in a style that left little room for doubt that his race had been run. On the bend to the head of the stretch Lyne went at Roseben with his heels, and in a stride or two further with his whip, but Roseben fell back steadily, and as the horses turned on the straight was joined by Ormonde's Right, while a new factor in the race appeared in Eugenia Burch, which had been last and seemingly hopelessly out of the contest in the run through the back stretch.

Merry Lark at the last furlong pole had what seemed to be a winning lead of two lengths, with Roseben surely beaten, but Ormonde's Right there challenged, and closed resolutely under the whip and Knapp's hard riding, while Eugenia Burch came on with a rush that brought her swiftly up to and past Roseben. Miller, on Merry Lark, still had a little in hand, however, and, though the final effort of Ormonde's Right drove him to riding, he kept his hands down, and Merry Lark swept past the winning post first in good style, with something left, a length and a half before Ormonde's Right, which in turn beat Eugenia Burch by a length, the mare finishing a length and a half in front of Colonial Girl, fourth, while Roseben, ridden out to the end, finished fifth.

D. C. Johnson, owner of Roseben, and one of the shrewdest and boldest bettors of the turf, refused to believe Roseben was beaten even after Merry Lark had passed him, and though he had wagered a large amount on his representative at odds on, he called loudly from the betting ring end of the grand stand an offer to bet $1,000 that Roseben would win just as the horses were making the turn into the stretch.

The time of the mile and a sixteenth was 1:47 1-5, a rather ordinary race from a time standpoint, on so fast a track as Jamaica presented yesterday, but Roseben to get to the front ran the first furlong, going to the outside and around a turn, in 0:11 4-5. The time of the mile was 1:40 1-5. This, deducted from the time of the full distance, made the sixteenth of a mile 0:07. According to the official time, then, the second sixteenth of a mile around the turn was run in 0:04 4-5, a wonderful rate of speed. The other fractions of the race were: Quarter, 0:23 3-5; three furlongs, 0:35 3-5; half mile, 0:48; five furlongs, 1:01; three quarters, 1:14 2-5, and first mile, 1:40 1-5.

The crowd met one other truly disheartening reverse, when the great sprinting mare Lady Amelia, at 2 to 1 on, was outrun in the early stage of a five and a half furlongs race by the new-comer from the Canadian circuit, Halifax, which took the track from her in three furlongs, running a first quarter in 0:22 2-5, and then beat her in a gallop. Escutcheon beat the odds-on favorite Aeronaut in much the same style. Blue Dale, Mary Morris, and Sewell were the winning favorites of the day. Summaries:

Automobile Notes of Interest.

The Directors of the Associated Automobile Clubs of New Jersey will dine at the Trenton Country Club on Thursday night. The new automobile law will be discussed and a number of other important matters connected with the automobile interests of New Jersey will be considered. Many prominent motorists have been invited to attend.

The members of the Automobile Club of Crescent Lodge, 402 F. and A. M., held a motor run last night from this city to Blossom Heath Inn, Larchmont, where the annual banquet was held. The officers and Directors who had charge of the outing, and who were present, are President, Carl H. Page; Vice President, Alden J. McMurtrie; Secretary, Roy G. Howell; Treasurer, Howard M. Davis; Marshal, James J. McKenna. Directors—Conrad M. Pitcher, Leon Rubay, J. Caster Williams, Ralph T. Olcutt, Richard L. Gibbs, and Harry Unwin.

The Directors and Contest Committee of the New York Motor Club have been discussing the plans for the coming economy run. A number of changes will be made in the conditions as used in the first run last year. The route and regulations will probably be announced this week.

Appearances favor the idea that the race for the Vanderbilt Cup, and not the Grand Prix of France, will be the premier international contest hereafter. There is every assurance that France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, and England will enter for the American event this year, while thus far the chief entries for the Grand Prix are those of French cars.

The Panhard & Levassor Company have never yet constructed a special model for racing, their contention having been that more value is to be obtained in constructional lessons by entering high-power touring cars in international competition than by building freak racing machines. A Panhard touring car won the first Vanderbilt Cup Race and finished second in the last Vanderbilt race. The drivers of the Panhard cars in the Grand Prix will be Heath, Teste, and Tarte, all of whom competed in the first Vanderbilt Cup race.

Manufacturers seem to realize that the general buying public are interested in motors as well as the appearance of a car. Consistency of a motor cannot be better demonstrated than by non-stop runs of several days. The Oldsmobile four-cylinder touring car has recently made a two-hundred-hour, non-stop run in Detroit with complete success.

Aside from the liberal use of chrome nickel steel, probably no one feature has played a more important part in the successful career of Pope-Toledo cars than the policy of thoroughly testing every car before shipping. After the cars have left the final assembling room, and before the bodies are placed, expert mechanics make all necessary adjustments.

The new Besnard projector is an invention with which the light of an automobile lamp can be thrown at a long range or short distance to suit the desire of the driver. When both lights are combined, a brilliant, dazzling light is produced. The long-distance range light has its disadvantages, the worst being that it blinds pedestrians and frightens horses, but for country driving it can be used to advantage and for city use the short-beam light is brought into play.

Some makers contend that a long overhanging spring is preferable, while others think that the full elliptical form is better. The weight of a car is an important consideration, and the preponderance of opinion now seems to be that the long overhang is the proper thing for a light weight car, while the full sized touring model of high power demands full elliptics at the rear and half elliptics forward. The 1906 Columbia cars and the forty-five horse power chain-driven model use the full elliptical at the rear and the semi-elliptic forward.

The finish of an automobile carriage body is a matter involving a multiplicity of details of which the average observer has small conception. The painting and trimming department of the Electric Vehicle Company at Hartford is one of the most complete in the country. The bodies come from the wood shop coated with a grayish substance known as priming, the object being to protect the wood from atmospheric conditions and changes while waiting for the painters. It requires about six weeks to complete the various processes of painting and varnishing, until the body is ready to be placed upon the automobile frame for use.

That automobile owners and drivers are superstitious has been shown a number of times. One of the instances was when the A. A. A. Racing Board heeded the request of Foxhall Keene in the last Vanderbilt cup race and replaced the No. 13, which he had drawn, by a large "X." The superstition was recognized by the E. R. Thomas Motor Company of Buffalo, N. Y., and as a consequence no No. 13 car has been sent out of the factory this year.

AMERICANS JUBILANT OVER OLYMPIC SUCCESS

Await the Final Contests with Evident Confidence.

KING PRAISES ROOSEVELT

Congratulates Representative Sullivan on the Fine Showing of Yankee Team—Robertson a Winner.

ATHENS, April 28.—King George, in opening the day's programme of events to-day in the Stadium, took occasion to felicitate Representative James E. Sullivan of the United States on the splendid showing of the American team in the games thus far, and to express to him his great admiration of President Roosevelt. He remained for ten minutes in conversation with Mr. Sullivan, discussing various topics of mutual interest. The Princes George and Nicholas were present with the King.

The day's events included the start of the penthalum, the all-around championship, decided by five special contests. The discus throwing was completed, with twenty-six competitors. Three of them were Americans—Martin J. Sheridan, Myer Prinstein, and Hugo Friend. Sheridan's accident of yesterday interfered with him seriously, and neither of the other two expected to figure especially in this one phase of the contest. Mudin of Hungary was credited with the best performance, with Lemwing of Sweden second, and Sostera of Bohemia third. When this was completed the standing long jump was begun. In this Lawson Robertson of the Irish-American Athletic Club of New York proved the winner, clearing 2 meters and 95.5 centimeters, equal to 9 feet 8 5-16 inches. Petit of France was second, and Martin Sheridan, the American, third, with 2 meters 85.5 centimeters, or 9 feet 4¼ inches.

The Americans are jubilant over the successes which they have thus far met with in the various events completed. Outside of those unusual contests in which they have not competed, they have been defeated in only two important contests. These were the five-mile race, which they really had no expectation of winning, and the pole vault. In the 400-meter, the 800-meter, and the 1,500-meter races, they have qualified enough men to insure them a very good chance of winning two of the three, and possibly all three, races. In the 400 they have Hillman, Moulton, Lightbody, and Pilgrim among the eight men remaining in the contest, while in the 1,500-meter they have Lightbody, Cohn, and Bacon. Lightbody's form has been such that many believe he can defeat the two Englishmen who have been looked upon as likely to take the race, though to defeat runners of the stripe of McGough and Crabbe he will probably have to run faster than he has ever run before in his life. In the 400-meter Lieut. Halswell of England and Nigel Barker of Australia are regarded as the most dangerous competitors. In the 800-meter race Eli B. Parsons and James Lightbody remain to uphold the Yankee honor, and are regarded as having a splendid chance to win.

The Americans have taken already the 100-metre race, the running long jump, two standing broad jumps, the shot put, and one discus-throwing event. Martin J. Sheridan has made the best showing, with a total of 16 points scored—for discus throwing, shot putting, standing broad jump, and stone throwing. He is counted on for places in the standing high jump and in the hurdles, but is suffering from an injured leg, which caused his withdrawal from the penthalum, or all-round series of events to-day. Myer Prinstein and Hugo Friend, however, continue in this event, though neither of them were one, two, three in the discus, the first contest decided.

The two high jumps and the hurdles are yet to be contested, and in each of these an American victory is regarded as assured. Then there is the Marathon race. In this, however, they are not very likely to figure, though Spring, Fowler, and Forshaw, who will run in this event, are all in excellent condition and expect to make the race of their lives. The triple jumps also remain to be decided. In this, however, their chances have been lessened by trouble developing with Prinstein's knee, which is bothering him considerably, and he is much concerned by it. He was regarded as a sure winner, and still hopes for success.

In the Phalerum the Americans contested in a team contest, with four men, using Bornamann to complete the team, although he is not a speed swimmer. They were fourth, the Hungarians winning, with the Germans second, and the English team third. No time was taken.

GOULD WILL MEET CRANE.

Americans in First Round of British Tennis Tournament.

LONDON, April 28.—In connection with the amateur court tennis championship commencing here April 30, Jay Gould of Lakewood, N. J., and Joshua Crane, Jr., of Boston, Mass., have arranged a series of single and double matches against two amateurs to be selected by the Queen's Club. The Englishmen probably will be the pair making the best showing in the championships. The dates for the international tennis series are May 9, 11, and 12.

In the amateur championship court tennis tournament Gould and Crane will play against each other April 30. The other matches will be between R. K. Cross and C. E. Tatham, V. W. York and W. A. Briscoe, H. J. Noel, H. W. Noel, E. B. Noel, J. F. Marshall, Major A. Cooper Key, and A. F. Dehuse drew a bye. Later Gould and Crane will meet the best English players in singles and doubles.

At the Queen's Club, London, to-morrow, Jay Gould of Lakewood, N. J., the seventeen-year-old son of George J. Gould, and Joshua Crane, Jr., of Boston will meet the best court tennis players in the world. The occasion marks the opening of the court tennis championship of Great Britain, which is really the world's championship. It is not the first time that American amateurs have striven for British laurels, as it is the height of the ambition of every court tennis player to win at Queen's Club, the home of the world's court tennis title. Charles E. Sands, the former American champion, and Joshua Crane, Jr., have tried unsuccessfully to bring back the title. Young Gould is the youngest National champion the game ever knew, and his work in London will be carefully watched by the followers of the game on this side.

Gould created a stir in the court tennis world when with George Standing as a partner he defeated Peter Latham, the world's champion, and Charles E. Sands, the American amateur champion. His work with the racquet in this contest caused Peter Latham to remark that six months in London courts and in the true tennis atmosphere would make Gould the equal of any tennis player in the world.

As an incentive to win the American championship Gould's father promised him a trip to England to compete in the British tournament. He defeated successively J. J. Cairns, Joshua Crane, Jr., and Charles E. Sands, and with a single exception did so with remarkable ease. He made a wonderful impression among amateurs and professionals, the latter agreeing that a little more experience among fine players and in courts where fine players are not the exception, with the strength that will come with age to impart more severity to his strokes, and Gould will be a world beater. Gould has a knowledge of every stroke and tactic of the game, he lacks only experience with a variety of amateur opponents, and match playing abroad should impart all this.

The court tennis championship of the United States, now held by Jay Gould, has been borne by but seven others since its start in 1892. Of them was Eustace H. Mills, who was at Tuxedo in 1900, and has been champion of England since 1899. This championship dates only to 1889, and the names of but five others are on the winning record. The gold prize of the Marylebone Club, which dates to 1867, had but two winners, J. M. Heathcote and Alfred Lylleton, until 1896, when Sir Edward Grey, E. H. Mills, and J. B. Gribble alternated as the leaders. The British amateur champion has the prestige of success and has been at the head of the court tennis family since 1889. In addition to other advantages the champion is not required to play through the tournament, but the winner, according to the custom that corresponds with the American National lawn tennis championship, earns the right to play the title holder. Pennell did this last year, then losing to Mills. Gould's victories over Pierre Lorillard, Jr., Joshua Crane, Jr., and Charles E. Sands have inspired him with confidence, and he should come nearer winning the British championship than any of the early aspirants from the United States have done.

AIRSHIP SHOPS BUSY.

Three New Dirigible Balloons Ready for Use This Week.

Three big dirigible balloons, one of which is the largest ever built in this country, will be delivered to their owners within a few days by Leo Stevens. The largest one is owned by Major C. J. S. Miller, and it will be ready for its first aerial flight, should Major Miller so desire, this week. The engine was fitted to the frame last week in Leo Stevens's balloon factory in this city. It is an eight horse power two-cylinder motor, with mechanical inlet and exhaust valves, and weighs eighty pounds. The wooden frame is 52 feet long, and to this will be attached the enormous balloon, 110 feet in length and holding 21,000 cubic feet of gas. The ship will carry two persons, each occupying a separate basket placed close together in the centre of the machine. Major Miller has been in New York for several days, and he may make one or two flights here with his powerful airship before having it sent to his home at Franklin, Penn.

The other two dirigible balloons will be used for exhibition purposes. One is for George L. Bumbaugh of Charleston, West Va., and the other for W. Cann of Indianapolis. Mr. Bumbaugh has been in New York for a number of days assisting in the work at Leo Stevens's shop. He will have the ship fitted with a 10 horse power motor weighing about 110 pounds. The engine is being made in Chicago, and is especially constructed for aerial purposes. It is expected to arrive this week and will be fitted at once to the frame. The balloon portion of Mr. Bumbaugh's airship is 72 feet long and somewhat wider in diameter than Major Miller's balloon, as the former is made for use in all kinds of weather and winds and not exclusively for speed, as is the case with the Miller airship. Mr. Cann's airship is almost a duplicate of the one built a short time ago by Stevens for Carl Fisher of Indianapolis. It will be 68 feet long and will be shipped this week. All of the balloons are finished and have been inflated with air for over a week in Mr. Stevens's shop in Scheutzen Park.

BIG ENTRY OF AUTOS FOR TWO-GALLON TEST

Four-Horse Power Runabout Will Meet Six-Cylinder Car.

WEIGHING PLANS COMPLETED

Noisy and Smoky Machines Will Be Rejected by Committee—Twenty Miles Per Gallon Looked For.

Entries for the two-gallon efficiency test to be conducted next Saturday by the Automobile Club of America were received in considerable numbers yesterday by Secretary S. M. Butler. They came from members of the club and manufacturers, and there is now no question that the event will bring together the largest variety of motor vehicles that has ever been seen in an automobile competition in this country. With the return yesterday from Atlantic City of the agents and manufacturing representatives who attended the recent race meet, renewed interest was taken into the coming test, and last night a number of additional entries were mailed which will be filed to-day.

President Dave Hennen Morris, it was announced, will drive his S. & M. Simplex, Col. A. B. Hilton has entered a locomobile, A. R. Shattuck, one of the club's ex-Presidents, will drive his new Packard. All the members of the Contest Committee, including Dr. Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, Chairman; George F. Chamberlin, and James G. Curtis, will drive cars. Winthrop E. Scarritt, another ex-President, intended to enter, but he is now in Mexico on business, and may not get back in time to compete.

F. E. Muscovics, who made the first manufacturer's entry on Friday of a Frayer-Miller car, entered two more yesterday. One of the three cars will be a thirty-six-horse power six-cylinder machine, to be driven by Mr. Muscovics. The others will be four-cylinder cars, twenty-four horse power each, and will be driven respectively by L. A. Frayer and W. Knepper. The showing of the six-cylinder car will be watched with peculiar interest, as it will be the first time that a car of this type has competed in a practical endurance test. C. H. Tangeman of the Hol-Tan Company has entered a twenty-horse power Fiat, which he will drive. As a sharp contrast to the big six-cylinder car, a four-horse power Waltham machine has been entered. This is of the runabout type, and ought to make a good showing with two gallons of gasoline. Word was also sent to the club that two or three Maxwell cars will be entered early in the week. The English-Daimler car, that made so good a record at Atlantic City, will be entered, and two or three Franklin cars.

Arrangements have been made to start the cars from the foot of East Fifty-seventh Street. The club has secured the use of the large scales owned by a brewing concern at that point. As it is expected there will be at least fifty entries Secretary Butler stated that the first car will be sent away promptly at 1 o'clock, and the others will follow as rapidly as possible. The cars will run through Fifty-seventh Street to Fifth Avenue, pass the clubhouse on the corner of Fifty-eighth Street, continuing to 110th Street, then to St. Nicholas Avenue, to 155th Street, crossing Central Bridge, up Jerome Avenue to Pelham Parkway, to the Shore Road, and then following the old Boston Post Road through New Rochelle, Larchmont, Mamaroneck, and as far beyond as the cars can go with their two gallons of fuel.

No freak cars will be admitted. Among the conditions it is stipulated that each car must be provided with a proper muffler, to be kept closed, and there must also be a differential gear or its equivalent. The committee reserves the right to reject any car making an excessive amount of noise or emitting too much smoke. The entry of $10 will be refunded in case any car has to be ruled out before the start. In Paris and other parts of Europe an automobile driver who allows excessive smoke, with its attendant foul odors, to be emitted from his vehicle is liable to arrest, and it has been proposed by many owners of machines that a similar regulation might be adopted here. This action of the Contest Committee puts a premium on good driving and the proper management of a motor car, for the expert mechanician knows how to handle his car so as not to leave a trail of smoke and the odor of burning oil behind him.

The entries will close on Wednesday at noon. Official observers will be appointed for each machine, and the big touring cars must carry their full quota of passengers. It is expected that the winning car will travel at least twenty miles an hour on one gallon of gasoline.

ROAD DRIVERS' PARADE.

Annual Event Will Be Held on Speedway Next Saturday.

The annual Speedway parade and horse show of the Road Drivers' Association of New York will be held next Saturday afternoon. For the past three months Dr. H. D. Gill and his associates have been devoting all their energies toward making the event the biggest in the history of the association. An appeal was made to all horsemen, and as a result the entry list for both the parade and horse show is far in excess of last year. The route of the parade will practically be the same as that of last year, and should the weather be fine fully five hundred single, and double teams will be in line.

In addition to the members of the Road Drivers' Association many prominent New York drivers will be in line, while the delegations from Newark, Paterson, Brooklyn, Trenton, Boston, and Philadelphia promise to be the strongest on record. The invitation to participate in the parade has been liberally responded to, and the strength of the leading amateur trotting association in the East will be fully demonstrated.

Eight years ago a few amateur drivers decided to form themselves into an organization to promote light harness sport. From this modest beginning the present association, with its four hundred members, has grown. The quality of the local trotting horses has been greatly improved, and many of the most famous horses on the Grand Circuit have performed on the Speedway.

The parade on Saturday will start promptly at 2 o'clock, at 110th Street and Seventh Avenue. The route will be up Seventh Avenue to 155th Street to the Speedway. The full length of the Speedway will be traversed, and the horses will return to the reviewing stand, where the parade will be dismissed. The invited guests will ride at the head of the parade, and will include Mayor George B. McClellan, President of the Park Commission Moses Herrmann, Fire Commissioner John H. O'Brien, Assistant Commissioner of Police Rhinelander Waldo, Secretary of the Park Board Willis J. Holly, and other city officials.

The horse show inclosure has been laid out on the lawn at the end of the Speedway, and the show will begin immediately after the parade. In addition to the classes for trotters and pacers special ribbons will be awarded for horses owned and driven by women.

Clark Boat Is Irolita II.

Commodore E. Walter Clark of the Corinthian Yacht Club announces that he will call his new sixty-footer building at Herreshoffs' Irolita II., after his fifty-seven-footer of the same name. Her appearance in the early June races on the Sound is doubtful, but he says definitely that he will race her throughout Larchmont race week against all comers, which will include the new Smith boat Effort, Neola, and Weetamoe, and Commodore Hoyt's Isolde. He will also participate in the New York Yacht Club cruise.

PRINCETON GOLFERS TIE MONTCLAIR CLUB TEAM

MEMBERS MEET IN HANDICAP

Garrison Leads Big Field—Opening Games Played on Other Metropolitan Club Links.

Princeton played the first college golf match of the season in the Metropolitan district yesterday, meeting the members of the Montclair Golf Club on the latter's links. The event marked the formal opening of the popular New Jersey course for the year, and this contest, in addition to the first club handicap, brought out an unusually large delegation of golfers. Princeton sent on a team of ten men, while the home team brought out its best talent, headed by John M. Ward. Whitlatch's defeat of the Princetonian, Dumont Clark, Jr., by 8 holes was an unlooked-for disappointment to the collegians, and it probably prevented the hoped-for victory. By good work, however, the collegians managed to tie the score, each side scoring rather freely, 21 holes being won by each team. W. C. Freeman and E. A. Freeman, who have recently been playing at Pinehurst, each won their matches by 5 holes. The players and results:

Dyker Meadow Golfers in Foursome.

H. C. Duval and Wyckoff Vanderhoff won the four-ball foursome yesterday played on the links of the Dyker Meadow Golf Club, near Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn. The prizes were silver cups given by J. G. Dettmer. The net score of the victors was 72, from 21 handicap. James L. Taylor and J. Foster, who came second, made the best gross score—80 strokes. The event brought out the largest competitive field of the season. The greens were in fine condition. The leaders were:

"BUILT IN AMERICA"

THE LOZIER RECORD IN THE manufacture of high-grade machinery products covers a period of nearly a quarter century, and long before the gas-engine principle was being practically applied in the Automobile, THE LOZIER MOTOR COMPANY had already earned a solid reputation for high-class construction in the Gas Engine field.

This experience in Gas-Engine building, covering a period of nine years to date, has made us thoroughly conversant with all its points, so that there is in this line to-day no better engineering and manufacturing equipment than ours.

THE LOZIER MOTOR CAR was in development for five years before we were satisfied to put it on the market as a representative LOZIER product, and that it was correct before it was launched, has been amply proven in the dependability shown in every car we have sold. These cars have gone to owners of large previous Motor Car experience, and they make up a list of satisfied owners to whom we are proud to refer any buyer.

The strong guarantee given with each LOZIER CAR testifies to our knowledge of its superior worth, and the prices, while comparatively high, represent value in every line. Every serious investigator pronounces THE LOZIER MOTOR CAR "legitimately high priced."

Squadron A to Hold Pony Races.

Announcement was made yesterday by the Athletic and Polo Committee of Squadron A of a series of pony races that will be held by the Squadron on Saturday, May 19, at Van Cortlandt Park. The races were so successful last year that special efforts have been made to increase their interest this season. A number of new trophies have been offered. Quartermaster Sergeant F. V. Froment has given a trophy to be known as the Van Cortlandt Cup, which will be run for by hunters over a course of two and one-half miles. It is an open event, and all members of hunt clubs and amateur racing associations are eligible to compete. It is stipulated that only amateurs can ride. J. O. Nichols and Leavitt H. Hunt have given a cup for a half-mile pony race on the flat. This also is an open event.

For the squadron members an attractive programme has been provided, including a hurdle race, one and one-half miles over eight hurdles; a jeu de barre contest; a pony race at three-fourths of a mile, and a watermelon race. The races will be held on the parade ground at Van Cortlandt Park. The three polo fields have been put in good condition, and active practice will begin this week. One or two polo exhibitions between picked teams may be given at the close of the pony races.

CHAMPIONS' BIG LEAD IS STILL MAINTAINED

Beat Quakers Again, Making Four Straight Victories.

AMERICANS WIN AT LAST

Take Last Game from Washington by 5 to 1—Cleveland Creeping Up on Leaders.

Six victories out of eight games played is the record of the champion New Yorks over the Philadelphia team since the championship season began, and, with the addition of five wins out of six from Brooklyn, gives the New Yorks a big advantage in the race. Before going West the champions are scheduled to play six straight games with Boston and three with Brooklyn. In the American League yesterday both of the leaders were beaten, the New Yorks winning their first game from Washington, while the champion Athletics succumbed to the Bostons by the close score of seven to six. Cleveland gave Detroit a bad beating and made a conspicuous advance in the race, being third and within one game of the leaders.

GIANTS IN LEAD AGAIN.

The Philadelphians wound up a disastrous series of games with the champion New Yorks at the Polo Grounds yesterday. For the fourth consecutive time they were beaten and beaten easily, the score being seven to two. The closeness of the previous contests caused a feeling of doubt to exist among the big crowd of "rooters" present, and it was a rather surprisingly large crowd, numbering probably 14,000 persons, as to whether the champions could make it four straight victories, but the latter accomplished the feat without the least question.

The main honors of the victory undoubtedly go to McGinnity. Seldom has the "Iron Man" been so effective. Three safe hits were all that the Quakers could make, and one of these was turned into a double after Strang had made a splendid attempt to catch the ball close to the ground, and another was a clean bunt. McGinnity gave four men bases on called balls, and it was while men were on bases that his best work was performed. On the other hand, the veteran Nichols was unsteady, and his delivery was batted freely. Still with sharp fielding the champions were prevented from scoring until the fifth inning, and then they made a runaway race.

With the exception of a dropped fly by Browne, which gave the Philadelphians their first run, and a dropped thrown ball by McGann, the fielding of the New Yorks was excellent, but the same cannot be said of the Quakers. Gleason's poor judgment and mistakes were costly, while Titus's miss of McGinnity's fly in the ninth inning was mainly responsible for a run. Doolin, Bransfield, and Dooin won the fielding honors for the visitors, Doolin's work around short stop, as in the previous games here, being of true championship calibre.

With the batting order changed, Ward taking Gleason's place as the second batsman, while the "Kid" was placed seventh, Thomas started off in the first inning by getting first on called balls. The next two men were retired, but Thomas still remained at first. Titus also got a base on balls, but both runners were left by Bransfield. Not another man reached first until the fourth inning, when McGee sent out a fly to Browne, who caused a big surprise by dropping the ball. McGee got second by the mistake. He went to third on McGann's failure to catch Bresnahan's throw to put out Titus, the latter reaching second. On Doolin's out from Devlin to McGann McGee scored. After two were out in the fifth, Thomas hit for a double and scored on Ward's single to right. The latter, in an effort to make second, was caught between the bases.

The champions' first run in the fifth inning was the result of Bresnahan being hit by pitcher, Browne's out, and Gleason's bad fumble of McGann's hit. A three-base hit by Devlin to left field, Gilbert's single, McGinnity's sacrifice, a base on balls, and Browne's good hit added two more runs in the sixth. Then Nichols became wilder than ever before, and, with three bases on balls charged to him in the next two innings and five strong hits, including a double, four more men crossed the plate. CLARKSON PITCHES WELL.

Washingtons at His Mercy and Greater New Yorks Win Easily.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—New York won the final game with Washington to-day, through the inability of the local players to hit Pitcher Clarkson, who has shown excellent form in his last two games. Only in the first inning was he touched more than once, and this would not have occurred but for an error by Williams, who, had he gathered in Cross's grounder and retired the batter, would have shut out the Washingtons. Clarkson gave only one base on balls, hit one batter, and struck out six men, making Stahl throw down his bat twice.

Washington's pitchers were rather easy, Wolfe lasting two innings and Smith was retired after he had performed four innings, Sudhoff finishing. He got along better than the other two, but could not save the game in the face of the light batting on his side.

With two out in the first inning Washington scored a run on Hickman's single, Williams's fumble of Cross's grounder, and Anderson's hit. New York got a lead of one run in the third. Chase doubled, Elberfeld singled, Conroy sacrificed, and Kleinow hit safe, these producing two runs. The visitors earned two more runs in the sixth. After Williams struck out La Porte singled and scored on Chase's triple, which got by Hickman and Jones. Chase scored after Anderson took Elberfeld's fly. Conroy hit safe, but was thrown out stealing.

Sudhoff entered the game in the seventh and sent Kleinow to base on balls. Clarkson bunted and was safe, and Hahn beat a roller to first, filling the bases. Kleinow scored while Nill was forcing Hahn out at second on Keeler's grounder. Williams got a pass, but was doubled up on La Porte's hit to Nill. Another double play, with one out, took the New Yorks off the bases quickly in the ninth. The score:

YALE, 15; COLUMBIA, 5.

In a game in which hits and errors were about evenly divided at the American League Park yesterday, Yale defeated Columbia in the annual baseball contest by the one-sided score of 15 to 5. Each team had a pitcher knocked out of the box, and up to the seventh inning the score was a tie. Yale, by a succession of hits, supplemented by errors on the part of Columbia, scored seven runs in the seventh inning, and placed the result beyond any question. It was one of the poorest played college games ever witnessed in this city. Many hits were made that, with fleet-footed fielders would have been put-outs, but the lack of judgment on the part of the members of both teams materially contributed in running up a big score. The game was scheduled to start at 3:30, but it was nearly an hour later when Umpire "Tim" Hurst took up his position behind the plate.

Columbia jumped into the lead in the third inning, when Collins took his base on balls, and scored on Tilt's long drive to left. Mittenberger tripled to left, sending in Tilt, and scored himself when Camp fumbled Kimble's easy grounder. Pitcher Jackson was taken out of the game and Pratt substituted. Columbia failed to get a man home after the change. With two men out in Yale's half of the fourth inning, Jackson and Madden went to first on called balls. Jackson scored on O'Brien's double, and Madden on Kinney's single.

Base hits by Williams, Madden, Kinney, and Huiskamp, a wild throw by Tilt, and several glaring misplays by the Columbia fielders netted Yale seven runs in the seventh inning, and resulted in Oxman being substituted for Pitcher Tilt. In the eighth inning Pratt reached first on called balls, went to third on Madden's long single, and scored with the latter on O'Brien's three-base hit. Yale tallied one run in the ninth inning, when Jones doubled and crossed the plate on a similar hit by Chapin. The score:

N. Y. U., 16; LEHIGH, 11.

Lehigh was defeated by New York University yesterday at Ohio Field by the score of 16 to 11. Both teams batted heavily, but played a loose fielding game. H. Mowen, 1908, of New York, collided with Lehigh's second baseman in trying to steal and sprained his ankle so badly that he was forced to retire from the game. The score:

ATLANTIC YACHT CLUB PLANS NOTABLE REGATTA

ONLY DOUBT IS ABOUT QUEEN

Maxwell Boat May Not Be Ready for Early Date—Sixties Promise Great Sport.

The Atlantic Yacht Club Committee is bending every effort to make its regatta, to be held on June 12, the biggest event of the year in the racing line in point of interest. It is the first big regatta of the season. Every one is eager to see the new boats perform against the old, and every inducement is to be offered to bring them all together. Special invitations were directed to the owners of all the best-known boats, and a goodly proportion have pledged their attendance.

Main interest will centre in the first appearance of J. Rogers Maxwell's new 90-foot schooner if she can be gotten ready by the early date. Mr. Maxwell has pledged his best endeavors to get her there. It has been determined not to put her in the water at Bristol until every rope and spar is ready on the wharf for her use, so that she can go overboard one day and be practically rigged the next. If there be no delay in delivery it is expected that this will enable her to go over about May 20, so that she will certainly be ready for delivery by June 1.

The presence of Corona and Elmina is already assured by Messrs. Luke and Brewster, but it is doubtful if Roy A. Rainey will care to take Invader down the bay. Besides these schooners, the new boat Eclipse, building at Gloucester for L. J. Callanan, which is expected to take the water next Tuesday, will make her début, probably against J. B. Ford's Katrina.

The presence of the "seventies" depends on Commodore Vanderbilt. If he will consent to take Rainbow to the Lower Bay there will be a race, as Harry Maxwell has entered Yankee. There is small chance of Mineola being in commission that early unless W. Ross Proctor's plans change unexpectedly.

F. M. Smith's Effort will appear for the first time at the Atlantic Regatta, and Commodore Clark's Herreshoff boat is expected. Effort will take the water this week, as all is in readiness for her launching, and she will be ready for her trials the middle of May. It is intended to tune her up on every fair day, to have her in the best of shape to meet the Herreshoff racer.

The old boats, which it was feared might be unwilling to test their speed against the new, are not going to shirk. The entry of Neola, which J. Beree King bought for his son, was the first received. Weetamoe has not yet been heard from, but is expected. A race between these four boats, all of which are sure to be very speedy, will be worth while.

In the smaller classes there will be Irondequoit and Gardenia and possibly Mira of the 40-footers, and possibly Mimosa III. and Vivian II. of the 33-footers. Gardenia is the new Gardner designed boat for A. H. Morris, and Vivian II. is practically new in a sense with her entirely remodelled rig. Both races will be good. The especial interest, however, will centre in the race of the new 27-footers and the old New York thirties, as far as the small boats are concerned, the greatest rivalry existing between the owners of the new Gielow designed boats and some of the owners of the old Herreshoff craft.

There will certainly be four or five of the old boats ready to try conclusions with the new. Of these, two will be sailed by new owners. Clifford D. Mallory will sail Banzai and E. S. Willard Maid of Meudon. The three news boats will be E. F. Luckenbach's Sue, F. J. Havens's Jig Step, and J. B. O'Donough's Crescent. Besides these there will be interesting races betwen the three new 22-footers and the three crack old boats of the class that furnished the best racing on the lower bay last year.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Break Again—Banks Report Trifling Cash Loss.

Increased Loans and Decreased Surplus Returned—Gold from Paris.

Another outburst of liquidation carried prices in yesterday's short session of the stock market in many cases to the lowest points reached since the San Francisco disaster, the selling coming again from speculative holders of stock, whose necessities become greater, of course, as the market declines. The bank statement, in which the loss of cash was trivial, compared with preliminary estimates, and an increase in loans far beyond expectations exerted not the least influence upon trading, nor did any of the other matters which came to light during the day of either favorable or unfavorable import, including Friday's engagement of $4,000,000 gold in Paris, the refusal of the anthracite operators to accede to the miners' propositions, or the several unpalatable railroad earnings statements made public. The severest losses were again in the high-priced stocks, including Great Northern, Northern Pacific, American Smelting, Anaconda Copper, and Delaware & Hudson, the declines here running to a maximum of 7 points. But with two exceptions the entire active list closed the day with severe losses. The exceptions were Consolidated Gas, which rose 1¼ points, and New York Central, which gained fractionally. The day's downward movement was simply a continuation of those of all other markets since the news of the destruction of San Francisco reached Wall Street, and the impulse, of course, was the same. The week closed after such extraordinary breaks in standard securities that expectations of a recovery of substantial proportions early in the present week were generally and not unnaturally entertained.

As a result of the increase of $21,781,000 in the loan account reported by the banks, an increase due, of course, to syndicate borrowing to meet the underwriting calls of the week, to loans made in connection with the shipment of funds to Pacific Coast points, and long-term borrowings by insurance companies preparatory to the payment of fire losses offset the small decrease in cash holdings and brought about a loss of practically $6,000,000 in surplus, that item standing now at $10,367,000, compared with $16,065,000 a year ago and $33,144,000 in 1904. By far the most important development in the money market situation was that contained in yesterday's announcement that gold had been secured in Paris for import, this willingness of French bankers to supply our needs arising, of course, from the relaxation in the money position abroad following the successful flotation of the Russian loan. The accumulations of capital at Paris have been large, and presumably the demands of our bankers upon this accumulation will be tolerably regarded. Of interest was the publication of the report of the Controller of the Currency, showing the condition of National banks under the call of April 6, the changes of chief importance in the various items lying in an increase of $70,000,000 in loans and a decrease of $48,000,000 in cash holdings. Accompanying these changes was a decrease of nearly $7,000,000 in the amount due State banks and bankers and of $10,200,000 in the amount due trust companies and savings banks, while a shrinkage of $110,000,000 occurred in individual deposits, the comparisons being made, of course, with the return of Jan. 29 last. These various movements of money throw very clear light upon the money markets of the past four months.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Surplus Reduced Nearly $6,000,000 Because of Increased Deposits.

Despite the enormous outflow of cash from New York last week the bank statement yesterday showed a loss in cash of only $694,600. The amount of specie held by the banks decreased by more than $2,900,000, but legal tenders increased by more than $2,200,000. The surplus reserve, however, was reduced by $5,999,325 owing to a heavy increase in loans and deposits. Loans were larger by $21,218,900 and deposits by $21,781,500. The apparent explanation of the increase in loans notwithstanding the week's liquidation in the stock market was the heavy borrowing by the fire insurance companies and probably by the Pacific Coast banks.

The surplus reserve now stands at $10,367,400, compared with $16,665,250 at this time a year ago.

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE

Financiers Watching New York with Increasing Anxiety.

FEAR BIG COLLAPSE OF PRICES

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, April 28.—If there had been no earthquake in San Francisco, and if financial conditions in Wall Street had been satisfactory, undoubtedly the story of this week's operations on the London Stock Exchange would tell of brisk business and advancing prices. The Russian loan is fairly out of the way, and there seems to be nothing on this side of the Atlantic likely to affect the stock markets unfavorably, and it may safely be said that it is only American operations and the American outlook that London worries about.

For a full fortnight London financiers have been watching New York with increasing anxiety, disturbed by its persistent withdrawals of gold from its market, apprehensive all the while of some tremendous slump in Wall Street. All this worry, naturally, has given the stock markets their tone this week, which has been one of decided timidity, accompanied by a considerable falling off in quotations in most departments.

Yesterday there came a bit of cheerfulness based on the belief that the American gold hunters had deserted London for Paris, but to-day everybody has been in the dumps again after reading in the morning papers the reports of Wall Street's collapse yesterday. Consols already have weakened slightly on account of the situation there. American rails have gone off heavily. Home rails have been freely offered at even lower prices than at the opening of the week, and mines have ceased to interest anybody. Foreign Governments haven't moved much, but their tendency has been downward.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, April 28.—Money was in good demand in the market to-day. The supplies were fairly large. The sum of $4,850,000 in Cape gold was landed at Southampton to-day and sent on to the Bank of England. Discounts were easy, though there was much uncertainty regarding America's future requirements of gold. But this caused less apprehension. It is not yet definitely known whether the amount of eagles withdrawn to-day will be followed by further engagements either of the gold available in the market Monday or of eagles from the Bank of England or from France.

Americans opened flat and rallied to a fraction above parity on New York support. But local dealers were indisposed to aid much with the prospect of more insurance liquidation. Prices closed steady.

Foreigners were firm.

Kaffirs were easy, being affected by the movements of Americans and the troubles in Natal.

Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101¼.

Bullion amounting to £19,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day, and £201,000 was withdrawn for shipment to the United States.

CAPITAL READJUSTMENT.

Colorado Southern Stockholders to Vote on $10,000,000 Reduction.

The Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific stockholders will vote on May 15 on the question of reducing the company's capital stock from $12,000,000 to $2,000,000. The reduction, it was said yesterday, is without special significance.

All of the company's stock is deposited as part collateral for the $7,500,000 St. Louis & San Francisco notes, which were recently issued to complete the construction of the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific Road. As none of the stock has been distributed, the reduction is largely a matter of form.

National Banks Extend Accounts Sharply in Two Months.

The report of the Controller of the Currency on the condition of the National banks as of April 6, made public yesterday, shows that in the interval between Jan. 29 and April 6 the National banks of the entire country increased their loans by more than $70,000,000, while their total cash holdings decreased during the same period by nearly $48,000,000.

The amount held for the account of State banks and bankers decreased from $364,000,000 in January to $357,000,000 in April, and the amount due to trust companies and savings banks showed a reduction of more than $17,000,000. United States deposits increased from $52,000,000 to $64,000,000. The figures for April 6 compare as follows with those for Jan. 29:

MORE GOLD TO FRISCO.

Yesterday's Shipment of Practically $3,200,000 Heaviest Yet.

The Sub-Treasury transferred to San Francisco yesterday $2,700,000 before the close of business and tentative arrangements were made to transfer an additional amount of $500,000. Counting this latter transfer as part of yesterday's business, the amount sent to the Pacific Coast through the Sub-Treasury yesterday, although the day was a half holiday, was larger than on any day since the disaster.

Dispatches from Paris published in Wall Street yesterday said that $4,000,000 in gold had been taken there for import to New York. This referred not to any new engagements, but to a portion of the $6,000,000 which Lazard Frères and the National City Bank had obtained in Paris on Friday.

In addition to the gold which has been engaged in Europe, arrangements have been made by some of the Californian banks to import gold from Australia. The Anglo-California Bank of San Francisco, it was reported yesterday, has obtained $500,000 in Australia, which will be shipped from there on April 30.

BANK MERGER COMPLETED.

The final stages in the merger of the Shoe and Leather Bank with the Metropolitan Bank were completed yesterday by agreements of the banks' respective Directors and afterward ratified by the stockholders.

The stockholders of the National Shoe and Leather Bank, which continues business at Broadway and Chambers Street as a branch of the Metropolitan Bank, received stock of the latter institution in payment for their shares. Each bank in the merger was capitalized at $1,000,000, which, in the case of the Metropolitan, was increased to $2,000,000, and out of the increased capitalization payment for the stock of the Shoe and Leather Bank was made, share for share. The officers of the Metropolitan Bank will retain their positions, and the manager of the Shoe and Leather branch will be Gilbert B. Sayres, now Vice President and cashier of the Metropolitan Bank.

The Shoe and Leather Bank was until a few months ago the National Shoe and Leather Bank. The change from a National to a State charter was one of the necessities of the merger.

BUFFALO CITY GAS PROJECT.

J. & W. Seligman & Co. are sending to boldholders of the Buffalo City Gas Company circulars requesting their address. The circulars explain that the firm may wish "to communicate with them in regard to certain matters of interest."

At the office of Seligman & Co. it was said yesterday that the project which may be taken up with the bondholders is not yet in sufficiently definite shape to be discussed. The circular was resorted to as the only effective method of getting in touch with the bondholders. It is being sent to the collection agents with the request that it be distributed to those who present coupons for payment.

The Home Trust Company of Brooklyn is contemplating an increase in capital and the addition of six members to the Directorate, bringing the number of Directors up to thirty. In connection with this expansion it is proposed to open an office in New York, in the projected Evening Post Building on Vesey Street, near Broadway. It will be at least a year before the building is finished.

EXTENDS VOTING [illegible]

Interborough-Metropolitan [illegible] Get Longer Lease of P[illegible]

An amendment of the Inter[illegible] Metropolitan Company's charter w[illegible] vided for at a special meeting o[illegible] stockholders held Friday, by which [illegible] Board of Directors will be divided [illegible] three classes holding office one, two, an[illegible] three years, respectively.

The stock of the new company is held in a voting trust which will extend over five years. At the end of that time, however, by the proposed amendment to the charter, the majority interests will in effect be confirmed in their control for two years longer, no matter into whose hands the stock may pass, for the two and three year Directors will constitute a majority of the board. The company has not yet elected the permanent Directorate.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 28.—There was a further fall in prices here this morning, Lehigh Valley being the weakest feature, selling as low as 66½, against 71 at the close yesterday. Orders to sell the stock came mainly from New York, and it is believed there was also liquidating orders from the same source in Cambria Steel, Electric Storage Battery, and Philadelphia Rapid Transit. No attempt at effective support was undertaken, but intimations after the close of the market are to the effect that any further decline will uncover supporting orders in all the active leaders. Electric Storage Battery opened with a loss of 3½ points, to 70, but did not go below that figure.

United States Steel was again actively dealt in, commission houses becoming good buyers of the stock around 40. Most of the time the price here was ¼ above New York's. Inquiry among Stock Exchange houses elicited a very general opinion that there will be no difficulty in their weathering the storm, as their weak accounts have been about liquidated or so strengthened that they will not have to be sold.

1906

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

It has every appearance of a liquidating stock market.

***

Conditions change, often in a very abrupt manner, and opinions must be modified to meet them. Those who will not recognize changed conditions are usually those who cannot afford to abandon their positions. In all the history of Wall Street a bull market has never culminated without leaving some of the foremost financial interests in shallow waters. A financier, now dead, who was noted among his friends and acquaintances for taking profits quickly out of any undertaking in which he had adventured his capital, once said to a group of intimates: "I have seen the ebb and flow of many markets in my time, but with all my facilities and in spite of all my experience, a receding tide has never failed to leave me stranded with something which I would have to carry over for two or three years, awaiting the next incoming tide." A fact which small speculators are apt to forget is that those who are called the big interests of Wall Street lose their market at times and have to wait two years, possibly three or four, for the next tide. The difference is that they can afford to wait. No combination of men in Wall Street is greater than conditions, and the so-called big men are only a little less fallible in their judgment than their followers. At least, they cannot anticipate earthquakes.

***

A few weeks ago plans were laid for a big bull campaign in the market during the late Spring and Summer. The movement was to have enlisted the co-operation of a number of the most prominent people in the Street. One very powerful group of capitalists had already taken hold of United States Steel common with the idea that it could be put to about 50 on prospect of a dividend before the end of the year. This was, perhaps, the largest undertaking of any. Other capitalists were to have taken similar initiative in other stocks, notably Amalgamated Copper, Atchison, Pennsylvania, and Union Pacific. Organized movements were to have been made in several of the more popular low-priced stocks. In pursuance of these intentions a great many stocks were acquired. Only two weeks ago the indications were very favorable to such a campaign. Its leaders were aiming at a level of prices 10 to 20 points higher on which to begin a selling campaign. Then came the dreadful San Francisco calamity, which, calling as it did for enormous liquidation of securities, especially investment securities, upset the bull campaign which had but fairly been launched. This harrowing incident precipitated matters. It started a selling movement which doubtless would otherwise have been deferred until August or September.

***

At the close of business a week ago yesterday the situation was extremely confused. Bankers themselves were unable to guess how far the liquidation would go; whether it would assume proportions immediately which would put a bull campaign altogether out of the question, or come so gradually as not necessarily to interfere with bullish operations in securities not directly affected. Those referred to as having formulated definite plans for a Summer campaign on the bull side themselves were undetermined. A continuation last week of bona fide, urgent liquidation on a progressive scale determined matters. Before the end of the week it was admitted that the bull campaign had been abandoned. Those who had been freshly accumulating stocks in preceding weeks as a part of that campaign began to sell out, and this contributed greatly to the demoralization of the market. This happened not in one stock, but in six or eight of the most active issues in the list. Several that had been stoutly supported, notably United States Steel common, were permitted to go with the rest. After having received rigid support between 41 and 42, Steel common broke more than 2 points on Friday because the big bull interests were unwilling to stand and take the capital stock above 41½. This was the last of the important stocks to break through the limits of previous support.

***

The decline has been sufficiently violent to warrant hope of a good recovery in prices at an early date, irrespective of what may be the ultimate trend of the market. The rallies which occur after a violent break are likely to be a good deal sharper than those which come at distant intervals in a slow-sinking market. Since this decline started on Wednesday, April 18, there has not been one full day of recovery. There have been several rallies, but not one has lasted through a whole session, and each has invited a fresh avalanche of selling. The following table of twenty-five stocks shows the declines that have taken place since the news of the San Francisco calamity. The closing prices yesterday were practically the lowest of the decline so far:

***

The liquidation continued in Saturday's short session, but to offset it there was some very strong scale buying. It was, however, a session calculated to alarm timid holders of speculative stocks, and some ventured to say after the close of business that the further declines would probably bring in fresh selling from outside sources on Monday morning. This outside selling, however, is likely to be lighter than would be the case if the public were selling heavily. This liquidation is very largely of a Wall Street origin. Commission houses have not been loaded up with stocks.

***

It is almost impossible to discuss the market in detail—that is, with reference to individual stocks, owing to the manner in which the whole market is dominated by one set of influences. Every stock which was supported last week in an arbitrary manner gave way at last. The most notable examples of this, perhaps, were Amalgamated Copper, Reading, and Steel common. It was more pronounced in Reading and Steel common than in Amalgamated Copper. The lower prices have already begun to attract investment buying, both on this side and abroad, but that is not the kind of buying that advances prices. Speculators attach greater importance to manipulative buying. Investors deal in values, whereas traders deal almost exclusively in fluctuations, and it is very discouraging, therefore, for them to hear that those powerful interests who had lined themselves up for a bull market have in many instances changed their positions and have abandoned their plans for a bull campaign this Summer.

***

A few weeks ago the possibilities of the bull side of the stock market were thought to be governed wholly by the limitations of the money market, whereas now it looks as if money would be easier than anybody had hoped for. Those who were expecting the bull market to culminate in the early Autumn on tight money have been caught with stocks.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, April 28.—Local securities continued to lose ground to-day under cover of heavy selling in United Railways free incomes. The slump in this special line affected the general tone of the market and almost the entire list suffered losses. United Railways free incomes opened off ½ point, at 69¼, and declined ¼. The Consolidated 4s lost ¼, and the stock trust certificates continued to decline and the pooled incomes lost 1½.

Atlantic Coast Line of Connecticut 5s certificates dropped 2 per cent. Atlantic Coast Line rights suffered a decline of ½. Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company common suffered a drop of 4 points, to 180. The weakness of United Railways securities has been due mainly to the withdrawal from the market of speculators who had bought these issues with the hope of seeing the stock bulled upon the expectation of important developments in the property.

The cotton market shows more conservatism than either its friends or opponents care to see. With powerful influences alternating for and against it prices refuse to rise above the accustomed level and the staple displays marked resistance to pressure and sudden attacks. Hardly has there been a week in which so many forces have been trained on the situation, yet the net result at the close of the week is a decline of only 8 to 19 points.

The steady spot demand, as indicated by the statistician's figures showing that the consumption is running 2,000 bales weekly ahead of last year, together with strong speculative support, fail to lift the market from a fixed basis. This it is thought demonstrates that the supply and demand as a factor is discounted in the present price, which is 4 cents higher than a year ago, when the crop was 13,600,000 bales, and 2 cents under the previous year's price, when the crop was about 10,000,000 bales. The crop now being consumed is 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 bales less than last year and nearly 1,000,000 bales larger than in 1904, with the consumption 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 above the average.

On the other hand, disasters that have a disquieting effect on the money markets of the world and lend color to all sorts of rumors tending to panicky conditions, exert an unusually moderate effect on the cotton market.

The market yesterday was very tame. The volume of business did not reach 100,000 bales. Liverpool closed barely steady at a decline of 4 to 5 points. The local market opened 1 to 3 points higher, fluctuated within a range of 2 to 6 points, and closed 1 to 3 points lower for the day. Liverpool and the Continent sold out a little cotton here and the South bought July.

Liverpool spot sales were 7,000 bales at a 3-point decline, to 6.04d., against 4.29d. last year. Futures closed barely steady. May-June, 5.85; July-August, 5.86; August-September, 5.82; October-November, 5.62; December-January, 5.61. It was reported that New Orleans was selling spot cotton 20 points under quotations. This was positively denied, however, and 1,200 bales were said to have been taken at full prices, 11 5-16 for middling. The local spot market was quiet at 5 points decline to 11.70 against 7.85 last year and 13.85 the year before.

COTTON OPINIONS.

A. NORDEN & CO.—With a supply of American for the season of something like 14,000,000 bales, we hardly see much to worry about as to insufficient supplies this year.

SANGER & ETTELSON.—We do not see anything at all in the bear side at present, and would advise our friends to keep long of cotton until it is amply demonstrated that the supply has overtaken the demand.

Following are the opening, highest, lowest, and closing prices:

	Opening.	Highest and Lowest.	Closing.	Prev. Close.

Market closed quiet and steady. Estimated sales, 90,000 bales. New Orleans closed steady at 1 to 2 points decline. May at 10.99, July 11.13, Oct. 10.31, and December 10.32.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—The principal item of interest in wheat yesterday was a sharp advance after the regular close. All through the forenoon late months seemed to be well supported notwithstanding talk of rain west of the Mississippi and the weakness in stocks. There was considerable liquidation in May, under which the prices declined sharply at times, but on the subsequent upturn that option advanced a full cent per bushel. At 1 o'clock May was quoted 87⅝c, or a full cent above the regular close, July 85⅝c, and September 84½c. The cables, except for a partial advance of 10 points at Paris, all responded to Friday's weakness on this side. There were declines of ⅛@¼d at Liverpool, ¼ mark at Berlin, and 8 points at Budapest. The cash market in New York closed steady, as follows: No. 2 red, 90⅝c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 88⅝c, and No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, 87½c, opening navigation.

CORN.—Very little activity was noted in the local corn market and prices were without important change, being the same at 1 o'clock as they were at the regular close. In Chicago some steadiness was promoted by rumors that the lake strike would not amount to much and by the advance of ⅛d at Liverpool. Primary receipts footed up 536,000 bushels, compared with 177,000 bushels last year. Seaboard clearances were 227,000 bushels. No. 2 corn in New York closed 57c, nominal, elevator, and 55½c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 57c, and No. 2 yellow, 57c, free on board, afloat. Exporters bought two loads of wheat and two loads of corn.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

BOSTON, April 28.—The money market is firm.

Call loans, 5@6 per cent.; time loans, collateral 5@6 per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper 5¼@6 per cent.; Clearing House loans 6 per cent. New York funds 12½c. discount. Clearings, $28,270,102; balances, $1,621,861; Sub-Treasury debit, $36,965.

There was a good deal of selling of stocks to-day. The coppers were affected by the weakness of Amalgamated, and most of them went off, but the desire of holders of these stocks to realize was not great, and consequently Boston was saved from anything which approached a panic, but the list as a whole was weak and under some pressure.

Old Spaniards Wasted Millions of Gold
THROUGH IGNORANCE AND GREED

The Spaniards Worked Four Hundred Years to Make Americans Rich.

The greatest gold hunters the world has ever known were the Spaniards. Their success in this vocation aroused the greed of the pirate, the freebooter, the highwayman, and of Kings, Emperors, and chieftains throughout the hundreds of years of Spanish rule. The explorations of this remarkably active class of prospectors led them over the West Indies and Mexico, and so thoroughly did they do their work that the modern miner has been able to discover but little that is new in the territory through which they traveled. Mexico furnished by far the greatest part of the West's contribution of gold to the Spanish coffers, and the history of that enterprising Republic is replete with interesting and stirring incidents which depict the greed of King and peon, priest and sinner. Among the greatest mines that were developed by these old Spanish prospectors was the San Domingo group, located in the State of Jalisco, about sixty-five miles northwest of the City of Guadalajara.

This famous group of mines was discovered in 1523 by Governor Cristobal Onate, the first Governor of Jalisco, and was by him given to Jose Hernandez, one of his soldiers, who had helped to conquer the country, on condition that he would pay 10 per cent. of the total output of the mines as tribute to the King. In eight years he paid to the King $800,000, which proves a net production of at least $8,000,000, or $1,000,000 a year. Baron Humboldt visited this country (then "New Spain") in the year 1801, and in volume 3, chapter xi., page 21, of his essays, mentions these mines as being among the three greatest in the country. At that ancient day the methods of extracting gold from ores were very crude. The old Spanish ore mill (Arrastres) was the only known means of getting out the values. Owing to the small percentage that could be saved in this way, only the richest ores were milled, the miners following the veins and, after carrying the ore to the surface, selecting the richer specimens, leaving thousands of tons of ore which modern miners could handle in a very profitable manner lying on the dump.

In the year 1814, shortly after the establishment of the Republic of Mexico, the mines composing the San Domingo group were abandoned because of water coming into the workings, which were down about 350 feet.

At this time the only means they had to dispose of the water was to carry it up ladders in leather buckets; pumps and machinery were then unknown. When work was discontinued the ore left in the bottom of the shaft was estimated to have a value of over $2,000 per ton; in fact, the records in the old monastery located near these mines show that for a period of six years preceding 1814 the average value per ton was greater than $2,000.

These mines are located in what is recognized to-day as the richest section of Mexican mining territory. The holdings of the company comprise 200 acres, and in addition to this the company owns an exclusive mineral concession to sixteen square miles of territory. One famous producer, the Sinco Minas, situated to the southeast about three miles from the San Domingo group, has been worked for the last 100 years, and has made three generations rich. The production of the Sinco Minas since 1824 is $22,000,000, notwithstanding it has been worked all the time in the most crude way. The Malola Tamara mines are located six miles to the northwest. These are the old Spanish mines that in the old days were so rich that other Spaniards became envious of the owner, Thomas Tremino, and brought charges against him before the Holy Inquisition in the City of Mexico, as a result of which he was tried and burned at the stake. His partner, meanwhile, wrecked the mines and escaped from the district. The Malola has been reopened during the last three years by Carlos Romero, of Etzatlan, and is now producing over $1,000,000 a year. The Mena Grande is situated to the north of the San Domingo group and, according to history now in the convent at Hostotipaquillo, has produced over $41,000,000. The San Pedro Analco mines lie directly across the Santiago River, to the north. They are being operated by their owners with great profit.

The facts above stated are all historical and can be verified by the records by any one who takes the time to investigate. The country is rich in mineral wealth. Mexico is developing her vast resources more rapidly than any other country in the world. American capital is being literally poured into the Republic and American fortunes are being made every day. Eighteen months ago the Two Stars Mining Company of Mexico offered and sold its stock at $10 per share. To-day it is selling in the open market at $10,000 per share.

There are dozens of such instances in Mexico, and had we the space and you the time to read we could give you the names of over fifty properties in the Republic whose stocks were placed in the market in the last three years at prices ranging from $1 to $10 per share, that are to-day selling at from $200 to $18,000 per share. The great mineral storehouse of the world is being opened and developed by American capital, energy and industry, and the time for you to take advantage is the present. Don't be the waiting man.

Recently W. H. Matthews, one of the most prominent mining engineers in the Republic of Mexico, organized an American company which bought this famous old group of mines, and called the company the San Domingo Mining Company, with headquarters in the Frisco Building, St. Louis, Mo. Work was immediately begun, preparatory to the installation of machinery necessary to extract the values from the thousands of tons of ore now lying on the dump. After a most careful examination of the ores, it was found that machinery which would extract 95 per cent. of the values could be installed for $200,000, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers that the expense of reduction would not exceed $5 per ton. The value of the ore on the dumps has been fixed by careful, conservative men as ranging from $18 to $35 per ton. At least 200,000 tons of ore is now on the dumps.

Now, in order to raise this large sum of money with the least possible expense, and at the same time secure to the stockholders of the company absolute protection against loss of any character, the company presents to the public what financiers look upon as the most unusual financial proposition ever placed before the American public.

We do not use a dollar of the money you invest. Every dollar you pay for stock is placed on deposit with one of the greatest banks on the Continent, and a certificate of deposit is issued to you, payable to your order.

The way the company secures the money for the building of its stamp mills and reduction works is as follows: Your money, every dollar of it, is deposited, with a bank having $11,000,000 of assets; the bank issues a certificate of deposit payable to you. Interest rates are high in Mexico, the banks there being able to loan their money at 12 per cent. per annum. The banks, therefore, are able to allow a very good rate of interest on deposits, and the bank above mentioned has agreed to allow this company 5 per cent. a year on all moneys so deposited. All sums realized from the sale of this stock are deposited with the bank; the company is allowed an interest of 5 per cent. a year, and it is the interest payable in advance on the money received from the sale of the stock that develops the property and builds our reduction works. Your money is not in use for a moment; not a dollar of the amount you invest is used by the company until after you are actually paid dividends of $1 per share, the price you pay for your stock. Then, and not until then, do you return to the company the certificate of deposit.

This is the safest proposition ever placed before you. Send for full particulars, and the conditions under which stock is sold. San Domingo Mining Company, 687 Frisco Building, St. Louis, Mo.

We guarantee you A SAVING OF FROM 33 PER CENT. TO 50 PER CENT. in this great offer, besides the best piano investment you can make.

Buying a piano with the name of Walters on it is as safe an investment as buying United States gold bonds. Walters Pianos are guaranteed for a term of 10 to 15 years.

THINK OF IT! One can buy the finest, highest grade pianos in the world by paying $5 Down & $1 Per Week.

We charge no interest for time taken in making payments; no charge whatever for insurance; no extras of any kind to pay. The piano will be delivered to your home on payment of $5.00.

Walters Pianos Are Masterpieces of Piano Construction.
In fact, They Are Pianos Built to Last a Lifetime.

Their tone is rich, beautiful and resonant; their touch is one of the main features—elastic and responsive. The cases are double veneered, cross-banded all the way through, beautiful and original in design. Walters Pianos will hold the tone, which is rich and mellow and resonant, longer than any other piano in the world.

Caution to Prospective Piano Purchasers!!

Under no consideration do we advise you to buy a so-called "slightly used" or second hand piano at any price.

They are like worn out machinery, absolutely useless; otherwise people would not wish to part with them. You are simply throwing your money away when you buy them.

Do not buy a piano unless it bears the maker's name, for when a manufacturer is ashamed to put his name on a piano you may be sure there is something wrong with it.

ON CASH SALES we will box and ship pianos free of charge to any part of the United States.

EXCHANGE your old piano for one of these beautiful new Walters Pianos. We will take your old piano in part payment and give you the privilege of paying any balance at $1.00 per week. UPON REQUEST A REPRESENTATIVE WILL CALL.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Thirty-fourth Street is only one block long nowadays in real estate parlance, so that to say that that thoroughfare has had another of its periodic flurries during the last few days is not likely to create any serious misapprehension. Including parcels at the rear on Thirty-fifth Street, fully $2,500,000 worth of property in this block has changed hands within a week, and according to trustworthy report, other deals are just about at the closing point.

The actual beginning of building operations on the old Tabernacle site at the Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street corner has had a wonderfully stimulating effect upon the entire block, which was heightened by the purchase of a site by another large retail concern only a few doors away. Whatever doubt may have existed as to the availability of all the property on this block for high-grade retail trade has been definitely removed and the prediction that a lot here will command a higher figure than an inside lot on Fifth Avenue itself bids fair to be realized. The erection of new buildings and the visible growth of the street in business importance have combined to divest the "Thirty-fourth Street movement" of many of its speculative qualities, and it is a noteworthy fact that the advance in its lot prices above $300,000 has been regarded more as a matter of course and has occasioned less comment than did the first sale on this block at over $150,000 a lot.

The deal for the Bathgate estate tract of 186 acres in the Wakefield section, said to be the largest parcel in single ownership in the Bronx, emphasized the confidence of operators in low-priced lots in that territory. Despite the fact that several auction sales during the last year have been directed toward supplying the demand of small buyers and homeseekers, this demand seems to be yet far from exhausted—and this, also, in spite of the fact that Long Island is furnishing very vigorous competition for business of this sort.

The week's reports in general have been such as to indicate that the market is about at the height of the Spring season's activity. That no bargain is likely to suffer from lack of attention, even in a region of no particular speculative interest, was shown in the quick resale of the northwest corner of Broadway and Walker Street. From present indications the buying of private dwellings east of Central Park may continue regardless of the approach of Summer. That one firm of brokers has sold within the last few months $8,250,000 worth of this class of property will afford some idea of the recent volume of this business.

City's Growth Graphically Shown.

The Manhattan Co-operative Real Estate Company has issued an attractive booklet, with many finely executed illustrations of prominent structures and places, intended to show the vastness of the city's real estate growth. Among these illustrations is one of the Times Building, as well as a panoramic view looking northward from the Times tower taken in the auction room.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

The market for low-priced vacant lots in the Bronx is apparently as strong as ever. Auctioneers Wells and Day both conducted successful sales of vacant property in the northerly borough last week. Mr. Wells obtained good prices for forty-two lots in the Bedford Park section, on Decatur and Parkside Avenues, and Reservoir Oval, while Mr. Day's offering involved thirty-three lots on Valentine and Ryer Avenues, near 187th Street.

Washington Heights lots on Broadway and Bennett Avenue, near 188th Street, also found buyers, the prices averaging about $5,000 a lot on Broadway and about $2,500 a lot on the proposed Bennett Avenue. Voluntary sales of improved properties met with indifferent success, several of the more valuable parcels put up being bid in for the account of the owners.

This week's schedule is one of the least inviting that has been put forward for auction buyers in a long time. Ten offerings make up the entire list, and there will be sales on only Wednesday and Thursday.

The lot at 29 West Seventy-second Street, formerly the site of the wonderful habitation of Lewis G. Tewksbury of New York, Mexico, London, and other places, will be put up on Thursday by L. J. Phillips & Co. Hugh D. Smyth will sell on the same day, in foreclosure, 47 Walker Street, near Broadway, 38.7 by 109.

Wednesday's offerings include a partition sale of 130 West Forty-seventh Street, at the stand of Joseph P. Day, and a foreclosure affecting 217 to 221 West Sixty-ninth Street.

Long Island City property also appears in the list in the shape of a plot, 100 by 100, at the northwest corner of Hamilton Street and Freeman Avenue, to be sold by Bryan L. Kennelly.

Announcement will be made in the near future concerning offerings of vacant property in the Bronx. One of the most important of these will involve the property on the Eastern Boulevard, formerly owned by the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, and held by them for over thirty years. Streets are now being laid out through the property to conform to the maps prepared by the city engineers. The tract, which comprises about 400 lots, is directly opposite the Westchester Country Club's holdings, and is intersected by the proposed Westchester Avenue extension. Values throughout this entire region have been materially strengthened by the recently announced plan of the Rapid Transit Commission to extend the Subway up Westchester Avenue, through Westchester Village to the Eastern Boulevard and Pelham Road.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR WEEK.

There were recorded last week 558 mortgages, for $10,292,970; of which 289, for $3,790,735, were at 6 per cent.; 102, for $1,622,010, at 5½ per cent.; 79, for $2,899,915, at 5 per cent., and 12, for $514,500, at 4½ per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 713 mortgages, for $10,799,537; of which 257, for $2,349,392, were at 6 per cent.; 1, for $5,000, at 5¼ per cent.; 272, for $3,986,906, at 5 per cent.; 52, for $1,289,000, at 4½ per cent., and 15, for $241,700, at 4 per cent.

TO OPERATE ON STATEN ISLAND.

New Company Has Already Bought Properties Near Mariner's Harbor.

The Staten Island Realty Company has been organized by clients of the law firm of Stern, Christiancy & Riegelman to operate in Staten Island real estate. George A. C. Christiancy has been elected President of the company, and Harold F. Davis, of the office of M. Morgenthau, Jr., & Co., Treasurer and General Manager. The company has already made several purchases in the neighborhood of Mariner's Harbor, S. I., near the new structural iron plant of Milliken Brothers, and the site of the new Procter & Gamble soap factory.

FRAUD ON THE CUSTOMS.

Dutiable Cotton Yarn Entered Free as Cotton Waste—Employe Suspected.

The Treasury authorities have detained at the Appraiser's Warehouse 100 bales of merchandise consigned to a Nassau Street importing firm, and invoiced and entered as "cotton waste."

As a matter of fact, according to the special agents, the merchandise actually is cotton yarn, dutiable under the Dingley tariff at a high rate. While the Government representatives have not concluded their inquiry, enough has developed to warrant the belief that the Treasury Department has been systematically defrauded of accruing duties for several years. It was reported yesterday that a customs employe will be called upon to explain how he came to allow the merchandise to pass through the Custom House free of duty as "waste."

An interesting feature of the case is that the discovery of the alleged fraud was purely accidental, and was brought about by the curiosity of one of the members of the special agents' force, who opened a bale just to see how cotton waste is packed. If it is determined that the revenues have been defrauded both criminal and civil proceedings will be instituted.

PREDICT HEAVY GEM IMPORTS.

Jewelry Buyers Sail for London, Antwerp, and Paris.

Many diamond buyers of this and other cities sailed for Europe yesterday, where they will make their annual purchases. Between now and the 1st of June many other buyers of precious stones will go to London, Amsterdam, Antwerp, and Paris, the leading markets of the world for gems. One of the dealers who left on the Deutschland had this to say regarding the outlook:

"In 1905 diamonds, pearls, and other precious stones to the appraised value of $37,000,000 entered the Port of New York, and I anticipate that this year's imports will considerably exceed that amount. In fact, regardless of the high prices, persons in this country still buy stones. This, of course, is an indication of prosperity. The offerings of stones in the foreign markets are not as satisfactory as formerly, and it is becoming difficult to procure stones of large size."

WEEK OF ACTIVITY ON LONG ISLAND

Pennsylvania's Great Influence with Outside Investors.

HOW LONG WILL BOOM LAST?

One Operator's Views on This Point—Buying in Many Sections—Reports of Recent Deals.

"To appreciate the feeling of those who are most sanguine concerning the future of Long Island," says an operator who has bought heavily in that territory, "you must visit Pennsylvania, anywhere between Pittsburg and Philadelphia, where people have become accustomed to the gigantic projects put through by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. They have the utmost faith in anything that the railroad undertakes to do. Watch the Long Island realty transfers and you will see how these believers have followed the movement of the road. You will find individuals and syndicates from Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Scranton, and towns of lesser importance making deal after deal, when many New Yorkers are only beginning to realize that these vast and wonderful improvements are fast bringing the healthy little villages to the very door of the New York business man, who will be enabled by these enterprises to house his family healthfully and comfortably Winter and Summer on Long Island, when the Pennsylvania tunnels and third rail electric roads are completed.

"A change from a very poor railroad service to the world's best—is this not sufficient to cause a change from a low level of value to a strong and healthy one?"

As to the relative effects of improved transit upon the north and south shores, an officer of the Taylor-Storm Realty Company expressed the following views:

"We believe in Long Island as a whole, but in the North Shore in particular. We have confined ourselves to the region between Bayside and Port Washington, because we do not believe there is a much more beautiful country anywhere, and we know there is none so near to Manhattan. What better evidence is needed than that some of the most beautiful estates in America are located in or near the villages of Bayside, Great Neck, Manhasset, and Port Washington. Not only are the shores of the beautiful bays and the Sound itself lined with them, but likewise the hills miles from the shore. There is a strong demand for both these types of property. The North Shore has a picturesque ruggedness about it, which appeals to the average person, with here and there a bit of water scene that adds to its beauty and charm."

W. H. Moffitt, who has been identified with various large development projects both in New York and in other cities, said yesterday:

"Long Island is in the midst of a great real estate revival. It began the latter part of last year, and has brought to its fields thousands of investors from all parts of the United States. Never in the history of real estate has so much acreage changed hands in any territory and within a given period as on Long Island, and the question now debatable in the minds of the investors is: How long will this boom last?

"History simply repeats itself, and men who have been educated in the real estate world and are familiar with the progress and development of real estate in various other communities in the United States during the past twenty-five years will say that Indianapolis, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Omaha, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Nashville, Birmingham, and Atlanta all had the same real estate activity, and that the shrewd and farseeing investor got out safely with a large profit, but the last investor invariably was the loser. The real estate boom in these cities covered a period of about one year. Does it mean that the advance in values on Long Island will last for no longer a period?

"We certainly cannot compare the stability and great growth of New York with any of these smaller cities. Behind Long Island's great expanse of land is the City of New York, with its four millions of people, to which it is adding each year about 200,000, a city in itself, and for this reason we cannot compare the activity of its real estate with previous booms in other cities. Land on Long Island has in no measure attained its normal price, and, while improvements which involve $300,000,000 are in process of construction, Long Island land for fifty miles out will be in demand."

August Belmont and Edward Morgan, Jr., as executors of the estate of Hamilton Morgan, have sold Arrandale farm, at Great Neck, L. I., to a syndicate of Manhattan capitalists. The property, which contains 110 acres, fronts on Long Island Sound. The purchase price was about $2,000 an acre.

Last week was a busy one at Douglas Manor, where the Rickert-Finlay Realty Company sold a large number of lots. The sales in this sub-division have now exceeded $1,550,000 in the brief period since the property was placed on the market, on April 10. Two hundred men are at work on improvements. More than half of the streets are paved, and the sidewalks are laid in the principal streets.

The week's sales at Douglas Manor included the following: To F. M. Prindle, four lots for $2,500; to Mary S. Miner, four lots for $2,900; to J. W. Rumsey, five lots for $5,100; to John G. Logan, four lots for $2,600; to J. M. Walcutt, five lots for $2,600; to Arthur M. Werner, four lots for $2,500; to D. E. Woodruff, five lots for $3,200; to Mrs. John T. Woodruff, eleven lots for $7,700; to Charles J. Ahlborn, seven lots for $4,200; to L. F. Gottschalk, five lots for $5,100; to Dr. A. C. Spilsbury, three lots for $1,125; to Edwin E. Pierce, four lots for $1,700; to Bessie Clayton Mitchell, seven lots for $6,800; to T. S. Young, fifteen lots for $9,100; to J. F. O'Gorman, six lots for $3,000; to Charles M. Lawless, nine lots for $4,400, and to J. C. Baker, five lots for $4,100.

John M. Reid & Co. have sold for Francis B. Marsh to Charles T. Kopp, a dwelling on Fourteenth Street, near the corner of State Street, Bowne Park, Flushing, on plot 50 by 100. Mr. Reid of this firm has bought the property 80 Delaware Street, Ingleside, Flushing, consisting of a ten-room cottage, with three lots.

The Widbern Realty Company has bought, in Long Island City, six lots on the west side of Academy Street, 150 feet north of Pierce Avenue; also, six lots on the east side of Raddle Street, 150 feet north of Pierce Avenue; also, five lots on the east side of Williams Street, 175 feet south of Beebe Avenue; also, four lots on the west side of Crescent Street, 25 feet south of Freeman Avenue; also, four lots on the northeast corner of Harris and Van Alst Avenues. All of these properties are a short distance from the proposed plaza in Long Island City for the new Blackwell's Island Bridge, and will be near the Pennsylvania Railroad terminal and the Belmont tunnel.

Harry P. Williams, as broker, has sold for William H. Thatcher to John A. Hennessy, forty lots in the Steinway section of Long Island City, for about $45,000. Another parcel of about the same size has been sold to the same buyer for about $50,000.

The Federal Land and Improvement Company sold last week fourteen lots at Amityville, L. I., for $7,710.

During the last few days 110 lots have been sold at Queens Court. Many parcels will be immediately improved with handsome dwellings. The Vincent & Brennan Concrete Company will erect a sample concrete house finished in hardwood trim, on Ostend Avenue, overlooking Belmont Park.

E. E. Little of New York has bought ten lots on Madison Avenue and will build three dwellings costing $24,000. Stewart S. Wallace of Flatbush has purchased a plot, 200 by 200 on which he intends to build.

One of the more attractive of the rapidly developed colonies in the Flushing section is Queensboro Hill. Considerable money has already been spent there on improvements and present indications point to a rapid growth along desirable lines.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Imitation Pearls Dutiable at 20 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision by T. S. Sharretts the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday a protest filed by Benedict & Warner of New York regarding the rate of duty applicable to imitation pearls. Collector Stranahan deemed the gems dutiable at 45 per cent., whereas the importers said 20 per cent. was the proper rate.

Gen. Sharretts also wrote a decision sustaining a claim filed by Veit, Son & Co. of New York. The Collector had classified jet buckles, metal buckles, and similar goods at the rate of 60 per cent. as colored glass and jewelry. This return the board finds to be erroneous, the proper rating being 45 per cent. as manufactures of glass or metal.

Other importers' claims sustained were filed by A. Bader & Co., J. Marsching & Co., New York; the Chanute Mantle Company, Kansas City, Mo.; E. A. Bliss & Co., New Haven, Conn.; the Athenaeum Library, Bangor, Me., and F. H. Shallus, Baltimore.

The board denied claims submitted by J. & H. Rosenberg, M. J. Corbett & Co., J. Zimmermann & Co., A. & H. Veith & Co., Batjer & Co., P. K. Wilson & Son, the Bamberfer, Stern Company, and H. Richter's Sons, New York; Thayer & Chandler, Chicago; Chow Ying Lung & Co., and others, San Francisco; B. E. Lippincott, Portland, Oregon, and Charles H. Wyman & Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DUCK EGGS ARE DUTIABLE.

Fowl That Lays Them Not a Bird, Appraisers Hold.

The Southern Pacific Company met with a customs defeat yesterday when it attempted to bring into this country duck eggs free of duty. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals recently decided that Chinese ducks are "fowls," and not "birds," and as a result Sun Kwong On of Pell Street was under the necessity of paying duty at the rate of 5 cents per dozen.

The ruling of the court was not convincing to Mr. Harriman's company, and an appeal was taken to the Board of United States General Appraisers in the hope that that tribunal would render a decision opposed to that of the court. Counsel for the railroad insisted that the Collector of Customs at San Francisco had erred in not considering the ducks to be "birds" rather than "fowl."

The Board of Appraisers, however, follows the court in holding that under the terms of the Dingley tariff, a duck is not a "bird," and that ducks' eggs are not eggs of "birds." As the Southern Pacific Company is better able to fight the Government's assessment than the Pell Street merchant a long litigation in the Federal courts may result. Just how the railroad came to be an importer of the eggs was not explained.

Among the creditors are Joseph N. Patterson, $27,941, and the Transcendent Lamp Company, $4,869.

Williams, members of the firm of Williams Brothers & Co., owners of a department store at Decatur, Ill., against whom New York and Chicago creditors recently filed a petition in bankruptcy. Their liabilities aggregate $100,000.

The Court of Appeals has just decided the Rapid Transit Franchise case; the Board of Estimate will grant the franchises for Rapid Transit extensions immediately, and the Bronx, WHICH IS TO GET THE FIRST EXTENSIONS, will undergo an unheard of rise in value—the better sections will quadruple in value. Tremont Terrace is THE BEST section of the Bronx, 50 feet above sea level, fronting Pelham Bay Park with its salt water bathing, fishing and boating, surrounded by the finest boulevard system in the entire city.

Beware of Long Island and its dangerously inflated boom—too many thousands of vacant acres there. "Manhattan and the Bronx" are always linked as one territory, and prices will increase accordingly.

SHORE PRIVILEGES

IN DOUGLAS MANOR

do not mean the right to use one hundred or two hundred feet of the shore front; it means the right to use the entire shore front, over a mile in extent, which is the property of the Douglas Manor Association, a membership corporation. Every lot owner in Douglas Manor becomes a member of this Association by virtue of his purchase, thereby becoming a part owner of the entire shore front.

This applies to the $250 lots as well as the most expensive. The smallest lot owner has the same privileges as the largest. Every lot in Douglas Manor is within five minutes of the shore.

Send for map, beautiful colored views and free tickets, or if you will, take Long Island Railroad from East 34th Street Ferry, our representative will meet you at the station at Douglaston. Convenient Sunday Trains leave at 9.20, 10.20 and 11.50 A.M., and 1, 2, 3 and 4 P.M.

IMPROVEMENT FOLLOWS THE NATURAL OUTLET.

Blackwell's Island Bridge is nearing completion. It will be in operation next year. As soon as the bridge is opened there will be a rapid flow of population into that section of Queens Borough adjoining Long Island City. Thompson and Jackson Avenues will be the main arteries of travel over which trolleys and elevated roads will connect with Manhattan.

There is no guesswork or question mark as to the effects this will have on immediately converging property. Fulton Street, Brooklyn, the terminal of the Brooklyn Bridge, is a typical example as affecting Brooklyn values. Fulton Street is naturally the principal business thoroughfare. If no other improvement was planned Blackwell's Island Bridge would insure the success of

TERMINAL HEIGHTS

on the direct line of Blackwell's Island Bridge, situate on Thompson and Jackson Aves., the two main thoroughfares of Queens Borough. It will also command the Union Station of the Pennsylvania-L. I. R. R.-Belmont tunnel and N.Y., N. H. & H. R. R.

With completion of the East River Tunnels this property will be as accessible as the territory east and west of Central Park. Six minutes to Herald Square. No property so far opened in Queens Borough offers such advantages to make large profits as Terminal Heights.

Applications for allotment will now be received. Figure out how many you will take and mail promptly. Maps, views and particulars on application.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO WAIT

THERE is no doubt that a majority of the suburban properties, now being advertised, will prove good investments IN TIME, only most of them are so far away from civilization, that you will have TO WAIT a long, long while until the necessary conveniences are acquired—one by one.

HEMPSTEAD PLAZA

presents an entirely different proposition to the prospective investor or home builder, because every comfort and convenience of a civilized community is already at hand.

HEMPSTEAD PLAZA is situated in the very heart of Hempstead, one of New York's most select suburban communities, and is surrounded on every side by handsome residences and may truly be called the garden spot of Long Island.

THE property is only three blocks from the Long Island R. R. station, and the P. R. R. is at present spending $28,000,000 for improvements and electrifying the roads so as to reduce the running time to 22 minutes from Hempstead to Herald Square. The present train service consists of 40 tranis daily.

IN addition, there is a regularly organized city government, including a municipal water plant, fire and police protection, as well as high grade schools and free mail deliveries. New York Trolley Cars run directly in front of the property, churches and stores of all kinds are a few blocks away. Gas and electric lighting are at your command.

THE owners of Hempstead Plaza are spending $20,000 for improvements, such as macadamized roads, concrete sidewalks and shade trees, on all streets. The property is fully restricted, assuring its future.

DOESN'T IT SOUND GOOD?

Can you conceive of a more ideal spot for a home—or a safer place for investment—where could you live more happily? Where would your money be safer?

COME AND SEE FOR YOURSELF

We pay your fare, and you need not feel under any obligation to buy. Lots sold $10 down, $5 per month—10 per cent. discount for cash.

NOW IS THE TIME TO PURCHASE. The location and surroundings, together with the improvements now being made on this property, warrant the assertion that it will be the prettiest and most desirable property along the Jersey coast. The property for subdividing in this section is rapidly falling into the hands of investors and becoming exhausted, while the demand for same is getting greater each year. It is only a question of time until all desirable property in this section will more than double in value, so the demand, together with the restrictions and the improvements that are being made at Interlaken, will more than double the value of this property, thus affording a safe and profitable investment, as well as a Summer home site, which is destined to become one of the most beautiful places along the coast. We are taking parties to the property from our office every day at 10:45 A. M. sharp. For further information or transportation call, address or phone

CHILDREN IN A RUSH FOR TINY PARK FARMS

EACH "FARM" IS 4 BY 8 FEET

Ground Hard, but Boys and Girls Dig Enthusiastically—Two Crops This Year.

The books of the Children's Farm in De Witt Clinton Park were opened for registration yesterday. There was a rush to register, Mrs. Henry Parsons, who is in charge of the work, taking about 500 names during the day. Each child registered will be entitled to a plot in the farm to raise vegetables.

No allotments were made, however. The day was given over to preparing the three-quarter-acre plot of ground for planting. About 100 boys and 50 girls dug away at the hard ground, while the side lines were crowded with envious young farmers clamoring for a share in the distribution of the work.

The work of preparing the ground was in charge of Henry Griscom Parsons, Assistant Director of the School Farm. The plot was laid off by the children into 500 small garden beds about four feet by eight in dimensions. In spite of the hard ground and the limited number of heavy spades, about 300 beds were prepared.

Wire bed springs, tin cans, and many other evidences of the old dumping ground at De Witt Clinton Park were exhumed. It is a stony soil, too, and the youngsters had not delved long before the paths between the beds were filled with large piles of rocks, which the larger boys will haul away after school hours next week.

Family Bibles suffered considerable violence at the hands of children who wanted to be registered. Nine years is the youngest age at which a farmer may make his début, and as a consequence every child on the west side that applied for a plot was 9 years old, at least for the day. Mrs. Parsons was besieged all day by children who wanted "to get their names tooken."

At one side of the garden plot, growing up through the forbidding soil, are some tulips, putting forth beautiful red and white blossoms. To Mrs. Parsons these plants are an emblem. "They are a type of the work we are doing here," she said. "Each of these children will be a beautiful flower, though the soil seem inhospitable."

Only once or twice did some boy forget himself on the grounds, in the heat and enthusiasm of the work.

"Don't forget what kind of language we are used to here," Mrs. Parsons would say. "Bad words kind of frighten the flowers, you know."

Heretofore, on account of work going on in the park, planting has not been done until June or July. The result was but a single crop in a season of three months. This year, however, seeds will be in the ground before the 1st of May. So the farm will raise two crops of vegetables, and two sets of children will get plots.

Some of those who worked yesterday were farmers dowered with the wisdom of four years' experience on this farm. That they were attached to it was evident from the zest and understanding with which they plunged into the business of the day. To shove a spade into the ground seemed to liberate every energy in their bodies and spirits.

Early this week the beds will be alloted and the seeding done. For three months, then, the child will be absolute proprietor of his space. No one will be allowed to touch it but himself, and no relative, parent, or guardian may pluck even a lettuce leaf without the child's consent. The fruit of his toil will be his own to dispose of as he pleases.

At the end of three months a new allotment will be made for rotation of proprietorship.

A FATHER AT EIGHTY-FOUR.

Nine years ago he married Miss Margaret O'Connor. Mrs. Thiry is now thirty years old and has two other children, Henrietta, 4 years of age, and Francis, 2 years old.

HORSES FALL ON WET STREET.

Six Go Down on Fifth Avenue in 20 Minutes—Obstinate Sprinkler Man.

An overzealous man on a street sprinkler made a lot of trouble for the coachmen and mounted policemen on Fifth Avenue yesterday afternoon. Despite protests of the members of the traffic squad, he insisted on watering the asphalt pavement until it was so slippery that horses only with great difficulty kept their feet. On the block between Forty-sixth and Fifty-first Streets six horses fell in twenty minutes, and, as the avenue was crowded with vehicles, much confusion resulted.

The mounted policeman stationed at that section of the avenue where most of the trouble was experienced said that the obstinacy of the street-sprinkling contractor in insisting on watering the pavement, whether it needed it or not, constituted a positive menace to the persons driving on the avenue.

The horses that fell yesterday afternoon were almost without exception high-spirited animals that instead of lying quietly as truck horses do until they were released struggled violently to regain their feet, threatening not only serious injury to themselves but also to the persons who went to their assistance. The crowded condition of Fifth Avenue in the afternoon added greatly to the danger of the situation.

ADVERTISING SHOW COMING.

An advertising show opens at Madison Square Garden for six days on Thursday of this week. This is the first concerted effort made by producers of advertising ideas in the East to exhibit their products and to show how they are made.

The manufacture of novelties will be made a prominent feature. Letter press printing, color printing, engraving, barometers, calendars, celluloid novelties, commercial phonographs, electric signs, glass signs, profitable methods of making announcements in publications, kite-flying, the use of the airship for advertising, illuminated post cards, show cards, and the machinery used in their manufacture and in operation are but a few of the thousands of exhibits.

Chase, portrait painter, landscapist, and master of still life painting, whose atelier is at 303 Fifth Avenue. Mr. Chase was a student in Munich in 1870. A picture of him in his studio will be found in to-day's Pictorial Supplement.

H. W. A. PAGE ACCUSED OF PLOT AGAINST WIFE

SWORE SHE WAS A DRUNKARD

Ex-Judge W. M. K. Olcott applied to Justice Newburger in the Supreme Court yeterday for a writ of habeas corpus to produce in court Mrs. Jeanie France Page, who was committee to St. Saviour's Sanitarium a week ago by Justice Leventritt as an habitual drunkard. The request was granted, and Mrs. Page will be in court to-morrow.

Mr. Olcott offered upward of a dozen affidavits tending to show that there was no ground for Mrs. Page's commitment and that her husband, Henry W. A. Page, a cotton merchant, simply wanted to get rid of her.

The certificates offered by Page when he asked Justice Leventritt to commit his wife to some institution were signed by Drs. Edward L. Hunt and Frederick Peterson. They set forth that Mrs. Page was an habitual drunkard and addicted to the use of drugs. It was represented to the court that Mrs. Page was incompetent, and Justice Leventritt inserted a clause in the commitment waiving the service of papers upon her.

Mr. Olcott submitted his own affidavit with the others. He declared in it that he knew Mrs. Page personally and that he is sure that she is not addicted to the use of liquor or drugs, and that her husband seeks to get rid of her "by deceitful and false representations."

W. H. Bennet, Page's nephew, declares in an affidavit that he was in his uncle's employ, but that he was obliged to leave because of his violent temper. He had never observed any signs of intoxication in his aunt, but he had seen her in a hysterical condition on account of her husband's conduct.

The principal affidavit was that signed by Mrs. William R. Leonard of 255 West Ninety-seventh Street. The affidavit says that she met Mrs. Page at the Montclair golf links, and that they became intimate friends. She never knew Mrs. Page to indulge in intoxicants or to use drugs, and when Page told her that such was the case she replied that she did not believe him.

Mrs. Leonard and Mrs. Page spent last Summer at Belmar, N. J., until September, when Page sent his wife and three little children to England to stay with relatives. Mrs. Leonard says that Page told her his wife was insane and that he intended to get rid of her.

Mrs. Page, Mrs. Leonard's affidavit says, returned from England two weeks ago and went to the Buckingham, where her husband was stopping. Page, she declares, made a scene, and was told to go by the management. Mrs. Page was also requested to leave, and she went out, leading two of the children and carrying the third, a baby. She had no money, and followed her husband as long as she could keep him in sight. Then she went to Mrs. Leonard. Mrs. Page told Mrs. Leonard, says the latter, that she had had a row with her husband, and that he had threatened to have her committed as insane.

Mrs. Leonard goes on to say that she visited Mrs. Page at St. Saviour's at Inwood-on-the-Hudson, and that the latter told her that Page had lured her there on the pretext that he was going to take her to a new home, where they would begin all over again. Mrs. Page said she didn't realize the deception until her children were taken from her at the gate of the institution. Mrs. Page, says Mrs. Leonard, does not know the present whereabouts of her children.

Attie G. Naanes, a nurse, says that she occupied a room next to Mrs. Page's, at 342 West Twenty-third Street, after the latter's return from Europe. She says she heard Mr. and Mrs. Page quarreling there on April 18. Page asked his wife why she had returned to disgrace him. She replied that she couldn't live in England without money, and that she had no other home than his. The nurse said she never observed any signs of intoxication about Mrs. Page.

Corroborative affidavits were signed by Corrinne L. Merrill, Mary Kidde of Montclair, N. J., and Mr. and Mrs. William A. Deering of 293 Central Park West.

Page, in his affidavit asking for his wife's commitment, declared that she was addicted to whisky and morphine, and that she had threatened to kill herself and her children. He said that at Montclair Drs. John S. Brown and Irving A. Meeker had examined Mrs. Page and treated her for alcoholism.

Mr. Olcutt said he had communicated with all the physicians named in the case, with the exception of Dr. Brown, whom he had been unable to find. Drs. Hunt and Peterson, he declared, had told him they had seen Mrs. Page but once before signing the certificates.

Dr. Meeker, the lawyer said, informed him over the telephone that he had never treated Mrs. Page for alcoholism, but that he had treated her after she had accidentally taken an overdose of cocaine. The physician said he had never seen her under the influence of liquor.

According to Mr. Olcott, Dr. Meeker told him that Page had spoken to him about "getting rid of" his wife, whereupon Dr. Meeker says he told Page he had better consult a lawyer instead of a physician.

Mrs. Page is 30 years old.

OPPOSES TELEPHONE GRANT.

Controller Metz Says Two Companies Here Would Be a Nuisance.

Cntroller Metz said yesterday that he is opposed, both as Controller and as a member of the Board of Estimate, to the granting of a franchise to the Atlantic Telephone Company or to any other independent telephone company as long as the city gets proper rates from the New York Telephone Company.

"I have read the report of Mr. Nichols to the board on the Atlantic grant," said Mr. Metz, "and I have been especially interested in what he says about the advantages of doing business with a single company. The telephone business is an essential monopoly, and two companies in a city means an infernal nuisance, with no saving. I have had experience in Philadelphia and in St. Louis, where in each city there are independent companies. My private business has offices in both cities. You have to bother with two books, with two exchanges, and have to keep a force of clerks busy hunting up telephone numbers, only to find that the man you want subscribes to some other system than the one whose book you have."

Controller Metz and other members of the Board of Estimate object strongly to one clause in the proposed contract for the Atlantic Company, as submitted by the head of the Bureau of Franchises. This is the clause permitting the company, if it gets the grant, to make its initial payment of $250,000 thirty days after the signing of the contract. Demand will be made when the franchise is considered that the $250,000 payment be made in cash on the signing of the contract.

President Reynolds of the Great Eastern Telephone Company, in discussing the situation, said:

"We have not appeared before the Board of Apportionment for a franchise, nor do we expect to make any such application. What the citizens of this city want is genuine competition, and no company can give that competition handicapped with any such hurdles as Mr. Nichols proposed. In this opposition on the part of the Commissioner we are meeting the same conditions found in the adjudication of the franchise granted to the New York and Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company, now controlled by the Great Eastern, where the Commissioner refused to grant a permit until commanded to do so by the courts.

"In the present case, we are prepared to meet similar conditions, and only await the final adjudication of our rights to begin construction of an independent telephone system under conditions that will make competition possible."

COWBOY CAN CARRY HIS GUN.

Magistrate Pool Gives Him a Permit After Denouncing the Police.

The "lemon" game was a new thing to Frank N. Cronholm, a Wyoming cowboy who came to town several days ago with half a year's savings in his pockets, to see the sights. When a cheerful fellow approached Cronholm a night or so ago with a proposal to enter an innocent game of pool he went into it just to be as chummy as his new-found friend seemed to be. After it was all over he had lost $220.

But he didn't come to the conclusion that he had been swindled until after he had thought over his case. Then he went to look for the man who did it. He found him the next night, he says, but the fellow got away from him before he could find a policeman. If he had had his gun with him, which he had dutifully left in his trunk, the man wouldn't have escaped, he told Magistrate Pool yesterday, in Jefferson Market Court.

Magistrate Pool discharged Louis Weil, the alleged proprietor of the place where the game was worked, as no evidence was produced to show that he had had anything to do with it. He was arrested by Detectives Rayens and Farley of the Tenderloin Station when Cronholm told his story there after his man had escaped him.

"As for you, Mr. Cronholm," said Magistrate Pool, "you go out looking for your man again, and if you see him, lay hands on him, cover him with your gun, and arrest him yourself. There's no use depending on the police to do anything. Of course, there wasn't any policeman near to help you with your prisoner. Here, I'll give you a permit to carry a revolver."

BIG SATURDAY AT CONEY.

Warm Weather Brings Out a Throng—Queen's Own Rifles There.

The first really warm Saturday of the season drew a crowd to Coney Island yesterday. The elevated trains and surface cars which brought them down were taxed to their capacity, and numerous carriages and automobiles helped swell the crowds.

It was really the first children's day of the season, and Seaside Park and the beach front were thronged with the youngsters, who played in the sand for the first time this year.

A large delegation of the Queen's Own Rifles, who have been exhibited at the Madison Square Garden, were among the visitors, and were well taken care of by the Ballyhoo men. The Canadians seemed impressed by the sights.

To-day the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company will inaugurate the Sunday Summer schedule on both surface and elevated lines. This will continue for three or four weeks and then will be put into daily service. A new line to the Island will run from Delancey Street, Manhattan, over the Williamsburg Bridge, through Lee, Nostrand, and Church Avenues to the Culver terminal.

May 15 a new boat service will be inaugurated. A steamer will leave the Steeplechase Pier for Rockaway Beach, making four round trips daily. Thirty policemen have been detailed from the various precincts to the Island to handle the crowds which are expected to-day.

Brighton Beach is rapidly assuming its Summer appearance. Much of the old Boer War grounds has been transformed, and a street carnival will be the opening attraction on May 26. A shuttle car service will be operated from the Beach to Newkirk Avenue, which will connect with the surface cars, which will not run to this resort owing to the improvements being made along the line of the Brighton Beach Railway.

DELANY'S SUBWAY OPINION.

Metz Will Sift Dispute with Belmont When He Gets It.

As soon as Corporation Counsel Delany has rendered his opinion to Controller Metz on the conflict between the Finance Department and the Interborough Rapid Transit Company concerning its initial 1 per cent. payment on the sinking fund for the redemption of Subway bonds, which opinion is expected to be ready by Tuesday, the Controller will put a force of expert accountants on the books of the Interborough, to verify the statements which have been filed with him.

"The Corporation Counsel assures me that he will rush the opinion ahead of everything else," said the Controller yesterday. "When I get it I shall get at the bottom of this difficulty. I also shall look into the charge that has been made concerning the company's power house expenses.

"It looks to me as if all these expenses had been charged against Contract 1, to keep its earnings down, while the power created is used to run on Contract 2, and possibly for the elevated road as well. I also shall look into the strike expenses of the company, and see what part of them, if any, were properly charged against operating expenses to the detriment of the city."

PLEAS FOR BETTER PAY FOR THE CITY TEACHERS

Sex Discrimination Wrong, McGowan Tells Principals' Club.

VAN DYKE AGREES WITH HIM

Women Principals Disappointed by the Selection of Two Men for Board of Superintendents' Vacancies.

Addressing the Principals' Club on the occasion of its third annual luncheon at Delmonico's yesterday afternoon, President McGowan of the Board of Aldermen and Dr Henry Van Dyke declared that in teaching there should be no discrimination aginst the women in the matter of salary, and that they should receive as much pay as the men, provided they did as much work.

This opinion is in sympathy with the agitation for "equal pay for equal work," which the women in the schools of the city have started.

"There is a movement afoot at the present time to raise the salaries of the Associate Superintendents," Mr. McGowan said. "It is a worthy movement. I know some Superintendents who are worth more than the city can pay them. While this movement is afoot it is time for the Principals to become active. The Principals of the city are not paid as they should be. I say to you, see your Superintendents and tell them to begin at this end. Tell them the Principals should receive $500 more per year. I don't believe there will be any difficulty when the matter of such an increase comes before the Board of Estimate."

"There is no discrimination of sex in this club, so that of course means $500 all around," said Edward A. Jenkins, Principal of Public School No. 171, who presided.

"I will agree to that sentiment when the women receive as much as the men," replied Mr. McGowan.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, discussed the "Art of Teaching." In his address he referred to the salary question as follows:

"Teaching is the worst paid and the best rewarded profession in the world. There is no sex in teaching and there should be no sex in pay. The work done by a woman is as good as that done by a man and is worth as much money. We will never solve our industrial problems in this country until we recognize this principle. All work should be paid for according to its quality no matter who does it. Teachers ought to have good pay and there should be fair play all around."

Dr. Van Dyke declared that teaching is not a science but an art. Success in teaching he said depends upon three things: Faith, hope and love—faith in human nature, hope for the future and in love, a personal desire to do good for somebody else. He said he was glad to know that the school system of New York is free from entangling political influences.

Edwin Markham read a poem on his boy Virgil, whom he called "a small two-legged whirlwind that exists in my home." Other speakers were John Huston Finley, President of the City College of New York, and the Rev. Dr. D. Parker Morgan, pastor of the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

Because their request that the next two District Superintendents appointed should be women has been rejected by the Board of Superintendents, which has nominated two men for the positions, the women Principals of the city are deeply disappointed. They hoped to have the positions filled from among their number, but the Board of Superintendents has nominated Albert Shiels to fill the vacancy created by the recent election of Gustave Straubenmuller as Associate Superintendent of Schools and John W. Davis to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Dr. Arthur McMullin, to take effect in September.

The women Principals hold that there are 13,777 teachers in the city schools, of whom 12,245 are women, yet of the thirty-five District Superintendents but three are women, an entirely disproportionate number. Almost half of the pupils in the schools are girls, and need a woman's controlling influence, they say. Boys in their earlier years, they assert, also need the guidance and refining influence of women in the higher positions. They condemn discrimination against women merely on the ground of sex as unworthy of the officers of the educational system. They advocated the candidacy of Katherine Blake, Principal of the girls' department of Public School No. 6, Madison Avenue and Eighty-fifth Street.

SMUGGLED WATCHES JINGLED.

Passenger Had 43 Suspended Under Clothes When Inspector Bumped Him.

Special Customs Inspector Timothy Donohue was walking about the American Line pier yesterday after the passengers came ashore from the St. Louis, when he bumped into a cabin passenger. There was a faint jingle, and as Donohue drew back, he skillfully ran his hands up the man's back. There was another jingle as his hand came into contact with a suspicious lump near the waist line.

"You must carry an alarm clock," said Donohue to the man. Then he explained who he was and told the human jingle box that he would have to submit to a search.

About the man's body and strung down the legs of his trousers were found forty-three valuable watches. As the watches were disclosed some of them began to chime the time, and the man remarked he thought time was up. The man of watches gave his name as S. A. Jemiel of this city. The watches were seized and along with them went a very costly diamond brooch.

DRINKS DEATH TOAST AFTER TAKING POISON

Lewereny Raised Glass with Others, Who Knew He Was Dying.

"HERE'S TO PEACEFUL DEATH"

Widow Whom He Courted Ordered Him to Go to Work, and He Decided to Die, and Did.

Henry Lewereny, a bricklayer of forty-five years, who had a room in the flat of Mrs. Gretchen Stoessel at 430 West Fortieth Street, had something on his mind Friday night. He was not happy. Maybe it was because he hadn't done much work of late; maybe it was because he had a falling out with Mrs. Sophia Von Blum, the housekeeper at 428, who was his friend.

Anyway, on Friday night he sought his friends in the little saloon of Philip Giegerich, down the street, at 414. Often had they met together there and talked over their joys and sorrows and drank the beer of Philip Giegerich at the tables in the back room. It is a quiet, small German place. And Giegerich himself always waited on them, or his wife did, and they could sit and talk as long as they pleased.

Henry Lewereny seemed to stumble when he sat down at a big table with his friends just before midnight Friday. They didn't notice it. Beer was ordered, and Henry, familiarly known as Lawrence for some reason, drank his share. Then he bowed over the table, whereupon his companions, surprised, asked him anxiously if he were sick.

"No, boys, it's morphine that I have taken," he said in a matter of fact tone. "Gee, it takes a mighty long time to work. I took it an hour ago. A mighty long time, a mighty long time—bier for alles, Herr Giegerich."

They drank another round, and then Henry Lewereny, according to his drinking companions, told this story:

"Boys, you know I marry Mrs. Von Blum what is next door to me down the street a week ago. She is a good woman, though she is ten years older as I. I liked her. She say to me, 'Git out an' work.' Boys, I can't find any bricklaying work, an' I got a mad on an' took all the morphine I could swallow. I guess it's just as well, hey?"

The boys didn't think it was just as well, but, as "Lawrence" had already taken the morphine, they decided to make the best of it. So Gustave Hagen of 217 West Thirty-third Street ordered once more "bier for alles." They all raised their glasses, drinking this toast to their departing friend in good German, which Gustave translated as follows:

"Here's to your death, Lawrence; may it be as peaceful as your life has been."

As the dying man got worse Philip Giegerich went for a policeman. Policeman McDonough sent Lewereny to Roosevelt Hospital, where he died early yesterday morning.

Neighbors of Mrs. Von Blum in her house declare that Henry Lewereny did not marry her a week ago. He was "makin' up to every girl in the block," one woman said, "an' that's the reason he never worked. He wanted to marry everybody."

His drinking companions, who were sorrowfully and silently at their beer yesterday afternoon, swore, though, that he was married to Mrs. Von Blum, to their certain knowledge.

JEWISH ANNIVERSARY MEDAL.

Presented to Roosevelt, Cleveland, and Various Museums.

Under the auspices of the Executive Committee in charge of the recent celebration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in the United States, a commemorative medal has been designed by Isidor Konti, the sculptor. The design on the obverse side of the medal represents the triumph of liberty and justice over intolerance.

The reverse of the medal portrays history recording the date commemorated. Around the design there is a Hebrew inscription, which, freely translated, reads, "Freedom is heaven born; justice and righteousness are the foundations of her throne." This medal has been reproduced in silver and bronze, and has been placed in various museums. One has been struck off in gold for President Roosevelt. The presentation was made on behalf of the Executive Committee by Dr. Cyrus Adler, at the White House. The medal was incased in a blue and white box, and again in a leather embossed case bearing on the inside the inscription, "To the President, in recognition of his humane endeavors on behalf of the Jews oppressed in other lands."

A similar medal will be presented to ex-President Cleveland.

FIRE ON HOTEL MANHATTAN.

Fire starting through defective insulation about the big exhaust fan at the top of the ventilation shaft on the roof of the Hotel Manhattan yesterday afternoon caused considerable excitement in the crowds that gathered to watch the engines.

There was little excitement among the guests of the hotel, who believed the fire was in the Grand Central Station.

The fire was discovered by a citizen who saw the smoke. He turned in an alarm, but the fire had been burning fully fifteen minutes when the firemen arrived. They told the manager, and that was the first news he had of the fire. The firemen took the elevators to the top floor, and on the roof found that the dynamo which operates the big ventilating fan had burst into flames. The blaze was extinguished with hand grenades.

The Last Days of Bosco Tre Case.

Mrs. Schuyler Crowninshield Vividly Describes the Vesuvian Eruption and the Devastation It Wrought.

The following letter by Mrs. Schuyler Crowninshield, relating to the Vesuvius eruption, is a graphic supplement to the vividly picturesque account by Arthur Stanley Riggs, published in THE TIMES last Sunday.

CASTELLAMARE DI STABIA, Italy, April 7.—Last night we were treated to a spectacle which all the fireworks in the world combined could not rival. The great crater's column of fire was pouring scarlet stones and red-hot ashes down on this side of the mountain, which has never happened before in the recollection of those we have seen, and the lava, having burst out on this side in three places, is flowing down the slope toward the towns at its base.

We watched it from the windows for a long time, when Lorenzo, our man, came in, and advised our going down to the water front, two short blocks away, where we could see more than we could from this house. So we put on our things and went. Many persons were coming home, for it was then 10 o'clock, and the Castellamareci are early folk, but some were still there. We saw what appeared to be a long lake of fire filling what Lorenzo says is the road or public highway. It seemed to glitter and shimmer like the burning lake that it was, and still is, I suppose, though to-day we see only tremendous clouds of steam and smoke. Lorenzo said that the lava had reached Bosco Tre Case, and that three houses had already been destroyed. I saw that it had surrounded the white house of the guides long ago, at least that the steam and noxious vapors had enveloped it, and of course no one could remain there after that. The observatory is on the other side of the mountain—you see it as you come from Naples by train.

We are up early this morning and expect to drive to Bosco Tre Case. It is such an easy way of seeing the flowing lava instead of going all the way to the Funicular, and ascending from the other side, where the streams have always been flowing. Now these seem to have burst out for our especial benefit. The house shook somewhat after we were in bed last night, but no one seems to notice it much, except the strangers, though it really is remarkable to witness such a manifestation on this side of the mountain. The repeated shocks and explosions seem to me rather alarming, but we are told that the reports which shake the windows are only explosions which occur at the mountain, and not earthquake shocks, as I had supposed.

April 8.—I wrote you yesterday that we intended going over to Bosco Tre Case, and it was well that we started early, as we should never have got there at all had we waited even a half hour longer. As it was we had a hard time getting through. We took the carriage and horses, with Tatoni driving, and started a little before 10 o'clock. We took some wine and bread and cheese, for we had no idea how long we should be on the way. Behind Tatoni's Sardinians we went like the wind across the Stabian plain, through Torre Annunziata and its dependencies. We saw that the streets were crowded with people of all classes, but as they all carried palms in their hands we thought it was because to-day would be Palm Sunday. Our horses could scarcely push through the throng. I saw carrettas piled high with household goods, but it was not until we returned, when we saw many more carts filled with old people and children, that I realized they were escaping from the threatening danger, and this morning that very spot is in ruins, the houses demolished or buried in the resistless tide of lava flowing over all.

After driving through some lovely country roads we reached Bosco Tre Case, and there in a small and crowded square the gens d'armes, who were all about, said we could not go on with the carriage, but that if we would walk "twenty minutes further" we would reach the place where the lava was flowing. This naturally meant half or three-quarters of an hour, and we were considering what to do when a ragged fellow came to the side of the carozella and said: "Do you want a guide? I take all three for two francs." Receiving an affirmative answer, he jumped up beside Tatoni, and said, "Ten minutes more," and away we went. How or why, I could not make out. I expected we would be arrested by the next policeman for disobeying orders, but nothing happened, and we drove on.

We met many cabs and carts, and there were any number of them going on ahead of us. What they meant by stopping us I could not conjecture, unless they had orders to stop every one, and, having said so much, considered their duty done. It was just where we were stopped that the houses were all demolished at 2 o'clock this morning.

Our guide spoke a little English and quite good French. After driving for a short time we halted in front of an open gate leading into a vineyard, and all got out. We walked through forests of grapevines and green growth beside the path, and then I began to see a great concourse of people standing upon a sort of small embankment. There was another opposite to this, also crowded with people, and between ran the river of lava. All my preconceived ideas of flowing lava were upset then and there. I had imagined it like a mass of gray dough or gray paint, pushing and flowing forward—dull in the day and glowing at night. Instead of this I saw what seemed like a gigantic black snake moving slowly, pieces falling away here and there, disclosing brilliant coals beneath, and emitting clouds of steam in various places. It appeared like the slag from an iron furnace, or like hot clinkers.

I said: "What are they afraid of? This is not moving."

"Watch it for a moment," replied C., and then I saw that it was moving slowly forward as it was pushed on by the mass behind. Our guide said that the lava was 15 inches deep and 150 feet wide. A handsome young carbiniere who kept close to us said that this gully had been dug in anticipation of just such an emergency, but I did not believe it. It would have taken a thousand years to dig it. I believe it is an old water course, or an old lava course, from which the lava has been taken by the farmers for the land. It is very fertilizing when ground small. The lava stream where we saw it was moving along almost on a level, impelled only by that behind, but although it was then about seven miles from the place where it had burst from the mountain, it was still all glowing and red underneath, the surface only having grown black and partially cool in its descent.

All about us were women crying and praying. I suppose they looked forward to the destruction of their homes that night, though I could not dream that the river could make such progress when I saw it moving so slowly. A few feet in advance of the encroaching stream I saw a boy half-seated, half-kneeling upon the ground. He held an immense cross painted green directly in front of the flood of lava. It must have been terribly hot where he knelt. Behind him rose a colossal statue of the Virgin dressed in green clothes, with a crown of gold upon her head. Crowds surrounded them, and there the boy knelt and watched the approach of that silent, dreadful danger, and moved back as it came on. It was a sight I shall never forget.

Our ragged guide asked S. for one or two sous, and then ran down the slope, (about twenty feet,) took off his hat to the statue of the Virgin, then turned, and with his stick tried to pry out and break off some of the melted lava. His stick was on fire at once, but he persisted, and finally succeeded, and we have two sous half buried in lava as the result. Then he again saluted the Virgin, and came back to us with the still hot lava lying on a cool stone. All this time the crater was pouring out huge volumes of smoke. It looks like corrugated iron, and rises thousands of feet in the air. Our guide wished us to go nearer to the mountain, where we might see the stream running faster, but it would have been a long and tiresome walk, so we returned to the carriage, "and so home."

Last night the excitement increased. As we stood watching the mountain from our house I suddenly saw an enormous red eye, as large as the sun appears to us, open in the side near the top. Out of this a stream of fire began to pour, and all night long it was streaming down further and further, causing Vesuvius and the plain to glow in a brilliant, rosy light. The crater was sending out great flames and explosions of red-hot stones, which poured out and down and on all sides. It looked like a gigantic firework called a "flowerpot." An old resident who has seen every eruption here in the past fifty years says that there has never in that time been anything like it. He thinks the flames shot up 1,500 feet. One can judge of this, because the mountain is nearly 5,000 feet, and the eye at once measures the height of the mountain and the fire above it. I should think 3,000 feet a truer estimate. We watched this magnificent display until the flames and sulphurous fumes from the new stream of lava covered and shut it from sight. Then the roar of the fire, which seemed to fill all the world, sounded all night long, and the whole Stabian plain was apparently one sea of rose-colored flame.

This morning every one who can get away from Torre Annunziata has gone. Many of them have come here. The square in front of our house was filled with people this morning—well-dressed men and women, who had been walking about all night. A little while ago Nanine called me to see the sick arriving from the hospitals under the care of Sisters of Charity. Carrettas filled with mattresses are discharging them at different doorways where there are empty rooms. All the churches have been opened and all the schools, (the scholars having been sent home,) to shelter the homeless people.

I went into a lovely and peaceful garden yesterday. To-day it is filled with lava. The cemetery is overflowed, the church demolished. Trees were standing in the midst of this devastating stream, still green at the top, though dead at the root. A lovely pale-pink almond tree in full flower grew on the bank just in the path of the approaching horror. I wondered how long it would be before it, too, would be engulfed. This morning I saw some boats near the shore of the bay, that shore where Pliny died in the eruption of the year 79. They were filled with women and children and household belongings. A man on shore was towing them with a rope. These, too, were outcasts looking for a resting place.

Later—The column of rolling smoke from Vesuvius now rises 20,000 feet or more, certainly more than four times the height of the mountain. The railway station, opposite which I live, pours forth its thousands of fugitives, with clothing, bedding, bags, &c. Where can they be harbored in a city already full to overflowing? Prisoners are now coming out, in twos and threes, tied together and guarded by many carbinieres; a blessed change from prison to sunlight, from certain death to blessed safety.

THIS WOMAN WILL TRY TO MAKE INDIANS USEFUL TO THEMSELVES

Pueblo woman, carrying water jar of native workmanship.

Miss Josephine Foord

AN interesting woman who left New York for Laguna, New Mexico, one day last week, to take up an interesting work, is Miss Josephine Foord. Miss Foord has been appointed by Francis E. Leupp, Indian Commissioner, to go to New Mexico and organize the work of pottery making among the Pueblo Indians, to preserve their work in its native excellence and to make it a self-supporting industry.

This is not a new work for Miss Foord, and in going back to the Pueblos she feels that she is going among friends. She will find a kiln that she had built some years ago ready for work, and her own little adobe house waiting to be swept and garnished and hung with Indian blankets for her occupancy.

The present appointment is a new one, dated April 14. It gives Miss Foord her position, and authorizes her to engage an Indian man to assist her in her work. The Government will pay the salaries; friends Miss Foord has made for the Indians during the last two years must furnish the capital for the rest.

It was some six years ago that this work was first begun as a private enterprise. Miss Foord, who is a practical potter, having taken up the study of the art for her own pleasure, was then asked by a number of philanthropic people interested in the Indian pottery and its makers, if she would not go down to New Mexico and see what help could be given the native potters to make the best of their work. Having first studied the practical part of making kilns and everything it would be necessary to know in a country with no experienced builders, she went. With her own money and that of the people who had interested her in the work she built a large kiln and started in to make the pottery marketable.

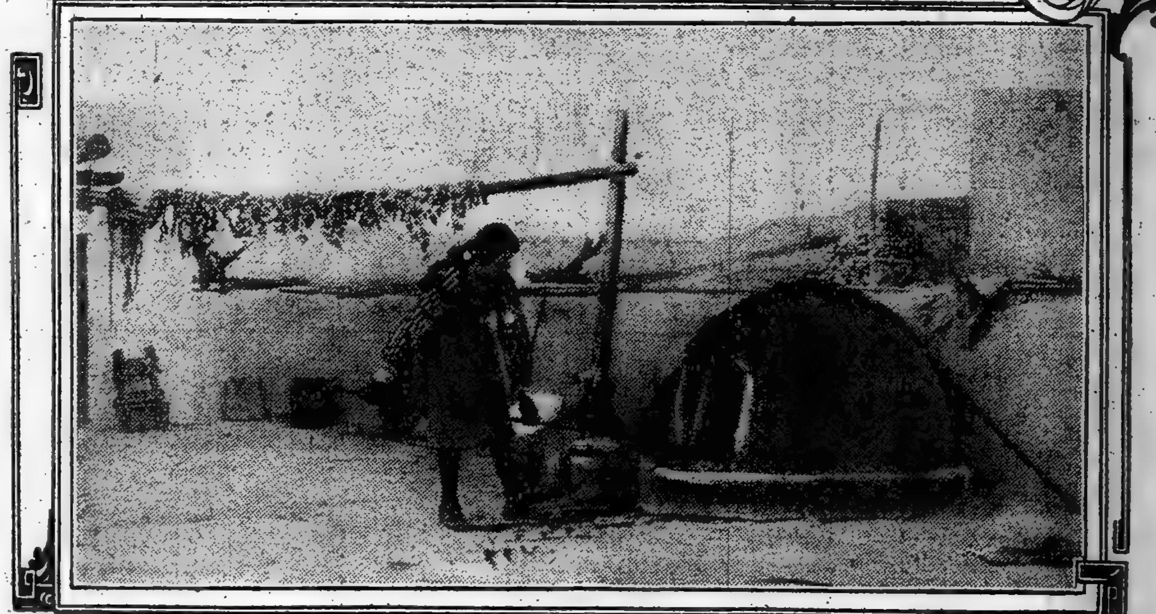
As made by the native workers it was seldom sufficiently baked—it lacked strength, and it was unglazed. From experiments with the paints and clays and glazes Miss Foord found that the pottery would take an inside glaze where it was not painted, and that the clay with the paints would stand a thorough firing. This made the pottery more serviceable for use, strong enough to admit of transportation, and at the same time the native effectiveness was retained. But life in New Mexico is hard for Eastern people outside the large towns; it is difficult to obtain nourishing foods, and after a year Miss Foord was obliged to come away to regain her health.

But she believed in the work sufficiently to be willing to undertake it again, when she was sent for by Commissioner Jones, after a long rest. Again she went down, organized the work, and remained until it was found that nothing more could be done at that end of the line. The Indians were doing their work, the kiln was firing it properly, but there was not a sufficient market. Again the potter missionary returned, bringing with her as much of the pottery as possible, and for the past two years she has been traveling at her own expense, telling of the work and finding places where the pottery may be put on sale.

The work is fascinating and the Pueblos are an interesting people, Miss Foord says, clean as a rule, intelligent and industrious. The women are the potters, and their paints they find in the shape of small stones on the hills—black and red, yellow and white. Not every woman is a potter, for a certain talent is required for the work. Occasionally a man will take it up, and a few men assist their wives with the designs, but this is rare. The pottery is baked by the women in the open, a fire being built up around it with chips, but often, as stated, it is not sufficiently baked to give it strength. That is where the Laguna kiln comes in; and one of the projects which Miss Foord has in view for her coming work is to have small individual kilns made, building them like the Indian woman's bread oven in the illustration, but without a top.



Pueblo bread-oven to be utilized as a pottery kiln.

The Indian man assistant is to be chosen on the ground. He must be a man of intelligence, a graduate of one of the Government schools, able to speak English, keep accounts, and learn the practical points of pottery making and baking, that he may carry on the work alone if necessary. Among the potters the Acomas are the best.

"Acoma is an Indian pueblo or village," says Miss Foord, "built on a solid cream-colored sandstone rock from three to four hundred feet above the surrounding table land. It is accessible only by a narrow trail, which horses or burros can climb, but impossible for vehicles. Going by foot is almost impossible, as one sinks deep in the sand. There is not a spray of natural vegetation here, and no water except what the rain deposits in natural openings or cisterns in the rocks. The women carry water from the valley on their heads.

"For their pottery, the Indians have no tools of any kind and no kilns, but they do fire their pottery, as it is not possible to bake anything in the sun, as some people seem to think. The Acomas, with the Lagunas and Isletas, will be the first tribes with which we will work, but eventually we expect to bring in all the twenty-four tribes of the Pueblos when we have a well-established market for the work.

"It is said that much of the so-called Indian pottery sold in the Eastern cities is made in imitation of it in Germany. It is a shame that our own Indians should be so cheated, and we must push forward their work.

"Adobe houses are used by the Indians, made of loamy clay and straw. The men do the building, all but the plastering and whitewashing, which they never seem able to do as well as the women. They do the farming and outside work, with all the weaving that is done, and the women the indoor work and the pottery making.

"They make excellent bread, which they cook in their out-door ovens, and a peculiar paper bread, 'matzena,' a gray, made of the flour of their black corn, a pink made of the red corn, and which they further tint with chili, and a yellow made of the yellow corn. A little sand is used to hold it together. This is made in a thin batter. The Indian woman dips the flat of her hand in it and draws it quickly along a hot stone, and it is cooked as soon as it is on, and thin as paper. This is the bread used for gala occasions. The women grind all the corn, and wash the wheat before it is ground.

"Besides the corn, the Indians raise beets and lettuce. Some of them now have cows. They have beautiful goats, and one may always have goat's milk. I interested many of them in hens, and eggs can now be had the year through for 20 cents a dozen. Meat may be brought from the towns, if that killed by the Indians is not satisfactory, and kept a long time in Winter, but it is difficult to get it in warm weather.

"Most of the Indians use stoves in their houses for keeping warm, though they also have little corner fireplaces, which are very pretty. I was sorry that I did not have one in my house, but I utilized the corners for closets. I have furnished my house with the Indian blankets to make it look as much as possible like those of the Indians.

"They are very cordial, kindly, and grateful for everything that is done for them. I have a letter from one of them, a girl who had been to the Government schools and writes English, and had been my housemaid. In closing she says:

"'I am your sweeper and your duster, your washer and your ironer, your coal carrier and your water carrier, and Your friend,

ZAWETA.'"

Miss Foord makes her home in Laguna, where the kiln is. She expects to find a large quantity of pottery ready for her when she reaches her destination, not all of it to be accepted, however, for she keeps the Indians to a certain standard of excellence, and only takes their best work.

Talbot House Wonderful Art Collection

IT is not perhaps generally known that the Talbot house, the country home of Talbot J. Taylor, at Cedarhurst, L. I., is not only unique as an artistic dwelling, but also contains a collection of old furniture, rare carvings, and other art objects which is most unusual in a rural residence. Mr. Taylor is having a beautifully illustrated volume made, descriptive of the house and its contents. From the collection of photographs taken for this purpose, a few are reproduced in to-day's Pictorial Supplement. The volume is being prepared by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

The house itself, although built in a style generally known in this country as Elizabethan, was originally pure Norman—the wings which have been added from time to time emphasizing the Elizabethan delusion. It is entered through a long vestibule lighted with casement windows after the fashion of Marie Antoinette's Laiterie and the Moulin in the gardens of Little Trianon. In the art objects, which are grouped beyond, France above all other nations, particularly in the glory of her Renaissance, is most lavishly represented. The great square hall of the house, paneled in oak and hung with carvings, pilasters, caryatides, and brackets, is lined on one side with stalls from a devastated monastery. Some fine Flemish chairs and an extension table of the period of Louis XIV., together with a number of ancient tapestries, are also to be found in this room. One important feature of the collection, specimens of which are to be found in every room, is the objects of ecclesiastical art, many of them priceless, which the recent Separation Law caused the French Church to sequester before the Government agents appeared to make their inventories. Of course, many of these objects have subsequently been secured by the museums of France, but Mr. Taylor, happening to be in that country just before the passage of the new law, managed to secure a fine collection of carved figures. There is a most interesting specimen of sixteenth century work in the figure of a Queen, which stands four feet high and is mounted on a pedestal. There is also a Spanish polychrome carving of Charity carrying the Divine Child and protecting another child. Another colored carving is of the seventeenth century, and represents a Cardinal and a Bishop, the latter holding a miniature model of the church he built. These, too, are also of Spanish workmanship.

The conservatory in Talbot House, approached by a balcony and steps leading down, is suggestive of the French Winter gardens of the eighteenth century, when a passion for color and for growing things caused the millionaires of the Court literally to establish landscapes in miniature. The dining room reveals the same love of color, for the floor is paved with white and green marble, and even the heavy beams of the ceiling and hung with carved or molded fruit and flowers, and the walls with heavy violet damask. Beyond the dining room is the library, with its high mullioned windows and an occasional door leading out on the terraces breaking the monotony of the bookcases and their 2,000 volumes, many of which are rare and precious for their imprint, binding, or historical associations. Before the great fireplace in this room stands a beautifully carved altar rail of the seventeenth century, with an angel at either end.

Even the bedrooms may be regarded as museums which will delight the heart of a connoisseur. In one these is a four-poster of Louis XIV., much carved, and with designs of birds and flowers on the head board. The curtains are hung with old toile de Jouy. Successive bedroom suites are identified with Louis XIV., XV., and XVI. and Marie Antoinette. Even the linen on the beds is of historical value.

It has been Mr. Taylor's aim in thus furnishing the Talbot House to create an ideal country home where every room should have a historical and artistic meaning, suggestive of the most refined French periods, and fashioned and arranged with a consummate harmony in which there should be no discordant note in line, form, color, and historical association.

Prince Victor's "Napoleon"

BRUSSELS, Belgium, April 20.—Prince Victor Napoleon, head of the Bonapartes and Pretender to the French throne, is about to reveal himself in the light of an author. The Prince recently finished his book on Napoleon at Elba and St. Helena, which he has been preparing for some years.

The material for this latest account of the last phase in the great Corsican's career has been derived to a great extent from the family papers in the Prince's archives. Among these documents are autograph letters from Napoleon to various members of his family relative to his first and second abdication, letters to the Countess Walewska on the same subject, and letters to Murat written in 1814 and dealing with momentous questions of the day.

The most interesting chapter, undoubtedly, of Prince Victor's book is the one devoted to Mme. Walewska. In this first chapter, which was the Prince's initial literary effort, recently printed for private circulation, is reconstructed one of the most romantic sidelights of Napoleon's career. Prince Victor shows convincingly, with the help of autograph letters, that Mme. Walewska exercised her influence over Napoleon in matters of state from 1807, the date of their first meeting, down to 1815.

In an autograph letter to Mme. Walewska, now published for the first time by Prince Victor, Napoleon proclaims his intention of resuscitating the kingdom of Poland. The letter, written in the most affectionate terms, is dated September, 1809, during the campaign which preceded the peace of Vienna. "Dear Marie," writes Napoleon, "I am only waiting to finally crush Austria to carry out my promise concerning Poland; your beloved country shall be free!"

Prince Victor shows by other letters of a similar nature from the Emperor to Mme. Walewska that Napoleon did at one time intend to liberate Poland. His vacillating attitude concerning Poland, at the time of the treaty with Austria, was entirely due to the thought of his formal promise to her.

In May, 1810, Mme. Walewska gave birth to a son, Alexander Colonna Walewski, destined to play a leading part under the Second Empire. The birth of this natural son—who, by the way, bore a most striking likeness to his father—still further strengthened the bonds between Napoleon and Mme. Walewska.

Mme. Walewska remained faithful to Napoleon, as is well known, to the very last. Among the most interesting of the letters reproduced by Prince Victor is one written by Mme. Walewska to a friend just after her interview with the fallen Caesar at Elba, in August, 1814. In this epistle an account is given of her visit to the Emperor in company with her son, her sister, and Col. Laczinski, her brother.

Bulgaria to Become a Kingdom in July

A CABLE dispatch last Thursday morning announced that Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria had sent his Premier Gen. Petroff to those European chancelleries personally interested in the status of the Balkan Principality to gain their consent to the proclamation of Bulgarian independence and the elevation of the country to a kingdom. This has long been the subject of private correspondence from Sofia, where it is believed that the Premier's mission will be successful. Preparations are even making there for the coronation of Prince Ferdinand as King of Bulgaria on July 7 next, just nineteen years since he was elected Reigning Prince by the National Assembly.

The position of Prince Ferdinand and his Government is an anomaly in the Balkans. Their present status is utterly incommensurate with the importance of the political tumult of which they are periodically the centre. That there seems to be just now a dearth of cable news reporting revolutionary outbreaks on the Macedonia frontier does not mean that Macedonia is quiet. Private letters from the Balkans reveal that the revolutionary spirit against Turkey is as active as ever, but also that the treasury of the Publicity Bureau of the Macedonian Revolutionary Committee is empty—hence there are no dispatches.

When, in the Autumn of 1903, the cable was hot with news from Macedonia, Prince Ferdinand again and again importuned the Powers interested to relieve him of his vassalage to Turkey. The Porte, however, proved from more or less authentic data that the whole Macedonian insurrection was due to Bulgaria; that filibustering expeditions were fitted out in the Principality and created havoc among the Turkish troops sent to bring "tranquillity and security" to Macedonia; and that these expeditions were directed by Bulgarian officers "on sick leave." The Powers finally got together, administered a rebuke to Ferdinand, and devised a reform scheme which Turkey has been more or less successfully applying to the country southwest of Bulgaria. At that time, Gen. Petroff pledged, on behalf of his sovereign, Bulgaria's neutrality—a pledge which even the Porte admits has been kept:

"We want peace—above all things peace. I give you my word of honor that neither I nor the Government nor any political party has ever dreamed of incorporating Macedonia. Personally, I am not in favor of Macedonian autonomy. We wish only to see our kindred across the border enjoying the security of their lives and property. Bulgaria herself desires peace more than any State in Europe. Peace is the only salvation for the Principality."

Russia, which at present is ready to seize any opportunity to divert attention from her own internal strifes, is known to be in favor of Bulgarian independence. England also believes that the Balkan question will be greatly simplified if the interested Powers can treat directly with Ferdinand as King instead of being obliged to approach him through his over-lord, at the Yildiz Kiosk. Austria-Hungary, which three years ago was strongly opposed to Bulgarian independence, will now do as directed by the German Kaiser, and there are signs in Wilhelmstrasse that Germany is not opposed to Ferdinand's aspirations. France and Italy, for different reasons, will throw in their vote with England—Italy because Bulgarian independence would diminish the power of Austria on the northeastern shores of the Adriatic, and France because of her proclaimed readiness to accept English dictation in anything concerning Turkey.

Ferdinand, unlike the King of Servia and Prince Nicholas of Montenegro, is not to the manor born. He is the youngest son of the late Prince Augustus of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha and Princess Clementine, daughter of King Louis Philippe of France. On the abdication of Prince Alexander, the Powers practically placed him in Sofia as a "safe man." His wife was Marie Louise, eldest daughter of Duke Robert of Parma. She died on giving birth to their youngest daughter, Princess Nadejda. The confirmation of Ferdinand's selection by the Powers and of his election by the local National Assembly was only secured from the Porte after the most humiliating restrictions had been placed upon him. He must remain permanently in the Principality and the state of his country—religion, education, finance, defense, idustry, and commerce—must be periodically scrutinised by the Ministry at the Yildiz Kiosk.

Crete Again Agitated

SIMULTANEOUSLY with Bulgaria's bid for independence and a royal throne, Prince George of Greece, as the High Commissioner of Crete, is petitioning the powers for the union of his island with Greece.

His petition is more elaborate than usual. He reviews the whole history of Crete, explains the conditions which called forth the late Graeco-Turkish war, and openly declares that a union with the kingdom ruled by his father is the only solution, if Crete is not to be given over to riot, bloodshed, poverty, and the usual attributes of a Turkish vassal State. Annexation, he asserts, would permit the Cretans to develop their resources, impossible at present. As the High Commissioner of the powers, he can do nothing more, and he intimates in no uncertain terms that, should his petition be shelved as his former petitions have been, his post may shortly be in search of another incumbent.

Of course, the powers will shelve this petition, for they have every reason to believe in the adage, "Let well enough alone." Moreover, if Greece were to receive Crete, the Bulgarians would scarcely be content with what is in store for them next July, and would endeavor to secure Macedonia. And when once the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire begins, no Chancellor has sufficient gift of prophecy to foresee where it will end. Prince George will receive the usual thanks from the powers and be encouraged to hold on to his job.

Anarchists in the French Navy

L'ECHO DE PARIS prints an interview with a flag officer of the French Mediterranean Squadron, in which the officer declared that the maritime authorities were constantly receiving threatening letters from sailors of anti-militarist views. They had also been warned, the officer added, that the Anarchists at Toulon were boasting that they had selected six men from among the seamen, stokers, and gunners on board each battleship and cruiser of the squadron who had taken an oath to render the ships useless at a given signal by tampering with some vital part. These men had also been directed to steal ammunition when possible, and cause explosions.

Continuing, the officer said that special measures had been taken to frustrate these plans. The torpedo Lieutenant of every ship had been ordered to keep all detonators and cartridge caps under lock and key in his own cabin.

Peter's Tottering Throne in Regicidal Servia

THE British Government, speaking through its Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Sir Edward Grey, has come out flat-footed in its declination to have anything to do with the Belgrade Government under the present regicidal régime in Servia. When the assassination of King Alexander and Queen Draga took place at Belgrade, in June, 1903, and the regicides, instead of receiving punishment for their crime, were installed in high offices around the person of the new King, the British Government ordered Sir George Bonham, then Minister at Belgrade, to leave his post on indefinite leave of absence as a mark of the horror and indignation felt in the country. At the same time the Servian Minister in London was given to understand that his presence was no longer welcome, and he left.

Since then diplomatic relations between Great Britain and Servia have been at a standstill, and the late Government always firmly refused to entertain the idea of a renewal so long as the regicides were maintained in their positions of honor. That the present Government adopts the same attitude as its predecessor is shown by the answer given by Sir Edward Grey to a question put to him by Sir Gilbert Parker in the House of Commons.

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs said that the question of the renewal of diplomatic relations with Servia could not be discussed between the Governments of Great Britain and Servia so long as the regicide officers held official positions and influence in the Servian Government. In the event of these officers being withdrawn from their places and the British Government agreeing to send a representative to Belgrade, it would be understood that the officers in question would not be reinstated. The reply was received with cheers.

Word comes from Belgrade that, at the next meeting of Parliament, which is called for the first week in May, the Cabinet will be obliged either to throw in its lot with the regicides or resign, leaving the issue to be decided by the country. Should the country be adverse to follow British dictation on the subject of removing regicides from office, it is asserted that King Peter will abdicate, in which case the non-regicide press will boom Prince Waldemar of Denmark as a suitable occupant of the throne. King Peter's abdication will also include the surrender of all hereditary rights of the Crown Prince.

Woman Takes Russian Degree

PARADOXICAL as it may seem, the educated women of Russia are not waiting on the revolution to better their lot. They have taken their interests in their own hands and have furthered them irrespective of the wishes of male revolutionists. When times were tranquil in the Empire of the Czar, the Government persistently forbade them to frequent universities. But the Government did not foresee that women at home relieved of domestic cares by innumerable servants might read many books printed in French and German and come to an understanding with each other. But this is what happened, and now the Government, harassed by political revolution, has thrown a sop to intellectual Russian women and the portals of the universities have been thrown open to them. The Government, however, trusts that female egotism will prevent those to whom concessions have been made from spreading education among the lower classes. It is better, thought the Minister of Education, Glazoff, to make the path easy for our ladies to medicine, astronomy, etc., than to have them conspiring with revolutionary students. So he raised his hands in resignation and said: "Ce que femme veut, Dieu veut" (What woman wills, God wills).

Thus, recently at the Moscow University for the first time in Russian history, the degree of Doctor of Letters was conferred upon a Russian woman in her own country. Her name is Mme. Zapolsky. She publicly defended an abstruse dissertation on one of the most difficult branches of the higher mathematics against the usual official opponents. Crowds gathered to hear and see, but probably nobody but three or four professors understood a word of what was said. Having shown that she had mastered the subject, and was versed in all the knowledge of the cognate disciplines which it presupposes, the learned Russian lady was solemnly admitted to the degree of Doctor by all the professors of the faculty who were present.

Now that the ice is broken, the Pierian Spring will be accessible to all Russian women. Mme. Zapolsky had a herculean labor to perform before she succeeded. Having studied for several years at Göttingen, under celebrated professors, she passed all the examinations and obtained her doctor's degree, which was not recognized in Russia.

Land Boom in Egypt and the Law of Pre-emption

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Cairo that Egypt is being visited by the greatest land boom known to her existence. During the past few months a feverish exchange of ownership in land has taken place, which has resulted in increased litigation, owing to the fact that the land agencies which have been moct active were unacquainted with the Moslem law of pre-emption. An effort is now making to have the law abrogated.

The law in question was originally enacted for the protection of harems. It laid down that the proprietor of an estate which adjoined another on two sides had the first refusal of the latter land in case its owner wanted to sell it. For some years, however, the moral effect designed by the law has been somewhat blunted by the increase of civilization, and Moslem women in the harems have been subjected to the insolent gaze of new-comers who have purchased the adoining property without first yielding the right to the lords and masters of the harems to acquire it. For a time this was ignored with characteristic Moslem indifference. But it is no longer so. No sooner is an important site or an estate sold than some obscure neighbor arises and claims, by his right of pre-emption, that the contract should be annulled and the land handed over to him at the contract price. Recently it has been discovered that these claimants were frequently inspired by rival land agencies.

Not long ago the Mena House Hotel was purchased by a Cairo syndicate. A native doctor, whose house and garden adjoined the property, put in a claim for pre-emption. The syndicate accused him of being merely the creature of a rival agency, and as he could not prove that it was his intention to run the hotel himself after he had acquired it, he was non-suited.

Cairo and Alexandria papers are filled with advertisements of real estate sales, and it is reported on good authority that one of the new foreign agencies recently netted 100 per cent. in a deal which went into five figures of Egyptian pounds.

Influence of Socialism in Italian Politics

AMILCARE LAURIA, the well known Italian publicist and novelist, has contributed an article to the Italian press describing the growth of Socialism in Italy from various mutually warring groups to a homogeneous organization which surprised the world and even itself in September, 1904, by its power to interrupt business throughout the Peninsula. He admits, however, that on matters of practical policy Political Socialism proper is still split up in little groups—revolutionaries, reformers, syndacalisti—wrangling together without effecting any result.

Signor Lauria looks upon the spread of Christian Socialism in Italy as the work of the Church in attempting to curb the extension of political Socialism. Christian Socialists, he declares, are in reality the allies of capitalists and it is from them that employers draw strike breakers to replace the strikers called out by political Socialism for one reason or another. He concludes that at present the whole intellectual activity of each socialistic camp is drained by the effort to produce propagandist literature and that only now and then do we hear of some compilation of real economic value or some critical work on the enormities and deficiencies in the law on labor contracts.

If, however, he pursues, the direct practical influence of Italian Socialism is dispersed, or tantamount to nothing, it cannot be denied that it exercises a perceptible indirect influence on politics. The implacable denunciations with which Socialists have scourged the shame and the ineptitude of the administration could not fail, sooner or later, to arouse those who govern from secular torpor, and drive them to carry out some beneficial reforms. It was thus that the vehement criticisms of Socialist prophets on the recent murder of Granmichele in Sicily drew the attention of the Government to the tragic acuteness assumed by the conflict of classes in the south, and to the necessity for placing a curb on the exactions and oppressions due to the ruthless greed and avarice of the bourgeoisie. The revelations of comfortless poverty afflicting the Calabrians, which stood out in all its distressing barrenness during the recent earthquakes, and the cry of horror that went up from the Socialists at the clumsiness of the Government over the work of relief, have made very sensibly felt how necessary it is that the administration of home affairs should make large provisions for the miserable condition of those districts.

Morocco's Future and Little Prince Hassan

AT the time the Algeciras Conference terminated, nothing was said about the adhesion by the Shereefian Government to the agreement, for it had early transpired in the Conference that the Moorish delegates had not been sufficiently empowered by the Sultan of Morocco, Moulai Abd-el Aziz XIV., to affix their signatures. It devolved upon the King of Spain to communicate the result of the Conference to his Shereefian Majesty.

Although the communication has long since been made, there are reports from Fez and Tangier that the Sultan with the euphonious name is not disposed to accept the findings of the International Conference at Algeciras; but whether his reluctance is due to his own independent spirit or to dictation from Wilhelmstrasse is not stated. Should he persist in his refusal to sign, it is not unlikely that activity on the part of the Moorish Pretender and his Berber tribesmen may presently manifest itself.

In THE NEW YORK TIMES of Feb. 25 last, some account was given of the personality of Moulai Abd-el Aziz XIV. and his hobbies, such as bicycling, photography, cinematography, automobiling, billiard-playing, and ballooning. Yet he has another, the cultivation of which promises some day to have a prominent effect upon Moorish politics. This is the care he is displaying in educating his eldest son, Si Ahmed-el ben Aziz, familiarly known as Prince Hassan. The Prince will be seven years old next July. He already speaks French and English, and, in spite of the fact that several attempts have been made on the part of the Berbers to kidnap him, he is allowed a wonderful amount of liberty for a Crown Prince, especially one so young.

At Mogador, the other day, a group of tourists was assembled on the outskirts of the Custom House Square to see the recruits which had been gathered in the week before receive their first military instruction. Presently there appeared at the head of the tatterdemalion column a young lad mounted on a donkey followed by an ancient Arab in flowing white robes. The lad drew a miniature sword and began to give commands in English! These commands were interpreted by the officer in charge of the squad—"By your right!" "Left wheel!" "Quick march!" piped the infant's voice. So the squad went on manoeuvring to the hilarity of the tourists. This reached a perfect explosion when the order came "Stand at ease!" and every man promptly dropped to the ground, crossed his legs, and lighted up the slender keef pipe. Later, the tourists learned that the lad was Prince Hassan giving his first lesson in tactics to the army which he will one day command.

At the hotel in Mogador the tourists found the Prince ready and eager to invite familiarity, which took the shape of numerous gifts of London and Paris toys. Aside from the ancient Arab attendant, he seemed to be absolutely without a Court. One morning, the pair were missing and it was said that they had gone back to Fez.

After Morocco—Tripoli

IN spite of the assurances of the Italian Government that the decision at Algeciras, followed by the German Kaiser's letter of reproof to his southern ally, made no difference to the constitution of the Triple Alliance, Italy is shortly to put forth her claims in a direction which can pass unnoticed neither in Berlin nor Vienna. The fact that she is preparing to establish a new naval base in the Adriatic was announced in these columns a week ago, and now it may be just as authoritatively declared that the question of Tripoli will be raised in the very near future.

It is announced from Rome that Signor Tittoni, who succeeds Signor Pansa as Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, is, on his arrival in London, at once to enter into negotiations with Sir Edward Grey, the new British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the subject of Italy's claims to the North African State in question. It is further understood that these claims in general terms were laid before the British, French, German, and Austro-Hungarian Governments by Signor Tittoni himself before resigning the post of Foreign Minister in the late Italian Government, and that Germany and Austria did not give favorable answers, which possibly may be one reason why Italy dissociated herself from them at Algeciras. Signor Tittoni's subsequent appointment as Ambassador to England is regarded in Rome as being of great significance and as evidence of the importance which Italy attaches to the necessity of having her position in Tripoli definitely settled as soon as possible.

England to Have a Criminal Court of Appeal

FOR many years an anomaly has existed in English jurisprudence. There has been no Court of Criminal Appeal. If a condemned and sentenced man is ultimately proved innocent—although there is no machinery of law which enables him to produce this fact legally—he must be satisfied with a "free pardon" from the Home Secretary, which is literally an act of grace administered in the sovereign's name, and with no attendant rehabilitation or restoration of individual civil rights. Such a "free pardon" was granted Adolf Beck eighteen months ago, after he had been thrice convicted and twice imprisoned for a crime he did not commit.

Appeal may be made in England from every judgment—civil, military, and admiralty—except criminal. Suppose a man is prosecuted both criminally and civilly. He is tried and convicted on the civil charge first. With the evidence accumulated, he is convicted on the criminal charge and sentenced. He appeals from the judgment of the civil court, is granted a new trial, and wins. But there is no appeal from the criminal condemnation which was brought about by the very evidence which caused him to win in the second civil trial.

From time to time there have been attempts on the part of the English bar and bench to remedy this anomaly of justice. Sir Fitzroy Kelly in 1834 introduced a bill for this purpose in the House of Commons; in 1890, Sir Henry James introduced a similar bill. In each case British conservatism won—"Why have a Criminal Court of Appeal when we have a beneficent sovereign and a sympathetic Home Secretary?" The Lord Chancellor has now introduced a third bill which, it is believed, after taking due account of conservative restrictions and limitations, may ultimately become a law. He said on introducing the measure: "A man may now be tried for his life and have no appeal, while for a question of £100, on interlocutory proceedings alone, the case might be carried to the House of Lords. Surely such a state of things is an absurdity."

The bill has quietly reached the committee stage, and now suddenly its debatable provisions are being vehemently discussed by English Judges and lawyers—Ought there to be an unrestricted right of appeal upon questions of fact? Ought the Criminal Court of Appeal to have a discretionary power to order a new trial if the accused asks for it? Is the power of revising sentences proposed to be conferred on the new court calculated to give public satisfaction? &c.

Lengthy judicial criminal statistics are cited pro and con, in answering these questions. A majority are in favor of some restriction as to the right of appeal, and that such restriction may be found either in the fact that the Judge who presides at the trial is dissatisfied with the verdict, or that the Secretary of State considers that an appeal should be allowed. The proposed bill does not grant a new trial to the accused for the mere asking. Nor, so far as drafted, does it designate the auspices under which the accused may bring his case before the Court of Appeal. And, as to public satisfaction, how, it is asked, can a court sitting in London know anything about the remote local conditions which may have played an important part in the conviction?

As the bill in question now stands, it constitutes a court which, if it can be reached by the accused, may review his case and grant him a new trial. Moreover, only the convicted prisoner may appeal. The Crown cannot. In this respect, therefore, the defendant in a criminal case would have an advantage over the defendant in a civil case, where the plaintiff, whether represented by the Crown or not, may appeal and thus pile up liability against the defendant. Still, conservatives, including even the legal editor of The London Times, caution British lawmakers to proceed slowly with the matter lest the establishment of a strong Criminal Court of Appeal weaken the responsibilities of juries. "It would be unfortunate," remarks The Times writer, "if the sense of responsibility on the part of juries were weakened, as it might be if counsel for the prosecution could always in doubtful cases say to them with some force: "It matters not much if you make a mistake. In the court above it will be set right.' ".

This sentiment is re-echoed in various shades—that the establishment of a Criminal Court of Appeal would mean such an increase of appeals as would "choke the channels of justice;" that the right of appeal "would destroy the finality of verdicts," and that finally an innocent man should really be debarred from proving his innocence simply because his action would incite a "sinful disturbance of the administration of law."

Foreign lawyers will regret the lack of publicity the measure has hitherto received. In keeping the bill practically a secret, until the committee stage, its advocates have, of course, managed to avoid much futile discussion and to elude the pessimistic intolerance that the British middle class has for all innovations. At the same time, this procedure has prevented broad-minded English lawyers from convincing their old-fashioned colleagues that a Criminal Court of Appeal was something to be desired. As it is now, they join swords over the bill in committee, drawing their inspiration from the history of English jurisprudence rather than from the present crying demands of a broad and liberal civilization.

Where Is the Grand Lama?

THEY say in the Sacred City of Lhassa that the Grand Lama is missing. This intelligence has disturbed Downing Street as well as diplomatic circles in Peking. About two months ago he set out from the Tibetan capital to visit his liege lady, the Dowager Empress of China. He took with him a large amount of treasure and other means "for swaying public opinion," as it was his intention to induce the Chinese Government to aid him in restoring one-man power in Tibet.

About the time that he left the Sacred City, his rival and proclaimed successor, the Tashi Lama, started on a journey to Calcutta, equally well equipped for political contingencies. The Tashi Lama, however, has reached his destination and is now waiting to hear the decision of the Indian Government whether it is to support him or the Grand Lama. Dark stories are being circulated on the outskirts of the Calcutta Court that somewhere in the passes of the Himalayas the two excursionists met, and that the failure of the Grand Lama to arrive in Peking is due to this fact. At Lhassa, however, the Avatars of Buddha, composing the Sacred Court, say that the wanderer will return, reinstate his authority with the aid of China, and make short work of the Tashi Lama.

Who Planned the Steunenberg Murder?

Most Sensational Case of Its Kind Since the Trial of Guiteau, the Murderer of Garfield---Will the Extraordinary Confession of Orchard, Who Turned State's Evidence, Be Corroborated?

DENVER, April 24.—With the date for the commencement of the Steunenberg murder trial a little over two weeks distant, the little town of Caldwell, Canyon County, Idaho, is already crowded with those interested in either the defense or the prosecution of the men charged with having assassinated the late Governor of Idaho on the night of Dec. 30 last. The brilliant array of counsel secured by both sides and the unlimited funds at hand presage one of the most bitterly fought criminal cases in the history of the West. The crime ranks with the assassination of Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley. The detectives claim they will prove beyond the shadow of a doubt the guilt of the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners and of Harry Orchard and Steven Adams, who have confessed. The miners, on the other hand, declare the prosecution is only an attempt to break their organization, and that the detectives have manufactured the evidence against their men. They say they will spend a million dollars if necessary, and will carry the case to the Supreme Court of the United States in order to prove their innocence.

A tense feeling of suspicion and bitterness is plainly in evidence in Caldwell. Strangers arriving in the town are "shadowed," called upon to explain themselves, and account for their presence. The prosecution fears there will be an attempt to rescue the prisoners, and the miners fear the prosecution will fake such an attempt in order to create prejudice against the accused men. The result is that both sides have a score of detectives at work, and those interested are sleeping with one eye open. Gov. Gooding fears a riot may occur before the trial is over, and two companies of militia are at hand and ready to be called out at a moment's notice in order to quell any disturbance.

High-handed steps were taken by the authorities of both Colorado and Idaho in the arrest and extradition of the accused men. If the men are proved guilty there will be abundant vindication for the drastic action taken, but if they prove their innocence a wrong has been done them for which neither time nor money can atone.

No ordinary prisoners are these five men who are to be tried for their lives. All have gained prominence in the labor world and have wielded a mighty influence in the wealth-producing sections of the Rocky Mountain country from the British Columbia line to Mexico. On the outcome of the trial depends the death or the existence of the great Western Federation of Miners, the richest, strongest, and most perfectly organized body of its kind in the world.

The men who are charged directly with the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg are President Charles H. Moyer and Secretary William D. Haywood of the federation, G. A. Pettibone, a former active member of that body and now a prominent business man of Denver, and Harry Orchard and Steven Adams, alleged members of the inner circle of the federation, who have made confessions. L. J. Simpkins, a member of the Executive Board of the federation, has also been indicted for the Steunenberg murder, but though there is a reward of $2,000 standing for his arrest he has not been captured. He is said to have helped Harry Orchard plant the bomb and to have been near by when Gov. Steunenberg was blown to atoms.

James McParland, head of the Pinkerton Detective Agency in the West, who gained renown for breaking up the Molly Maguire gang in the Pennsylvania coal regions in the seventies, has worked up the case against the federation leaders, and claims to have gathered overwhelming evidence of their guilt. McParland declares that the story of crime, intrigue, and conspiracy that will come out at the trial will overshadow the sensation created by the Molly Maguire exposé, and that the red Anarchists of Russia will be made to look like a lot of mischievous schoolboys. He says he can prove by the confessions of Orchard and Adams and by letters he has intercepted that the federation had plotted the death of scores of prominent men who had opposed it.

Chief Justices of the Supreme Court, former Governors, Sheriffs, and mine managers and owners who had gained the enmity of the miners were marked men. After Orchard's confession a bomb was found under the gate of the home in Denver of Judge Goddard of the Supreme Court of Colorado. Several attempts have been made to kill ex-Gov. Peabody and to poison his family; but these are only minor incidents, the detective says, in a long list that will show the reign of terror and bloodshed that had been planned.

The trial of the Steunenberg murder case is expected to clear up not only that crime, but scores of killings during the miners' troubles in the Coeur d'Alenes and in Colorado and a number of other assassinations and disappearances which have been shrouded so far in complete mystery.

The federation has employed the ablest counsel to be secured, and has subscribed hundreds of thousands of dollars for the defense fund. It is declared that there will be no trouble in proving the innocence of Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone, and that if Orchard, Simpkins, and Adams killed Steunenberg they did so without the knowledge of the federation's officers.

The killings that occurred during the strikes in the Coeur d'Alenes and the wholesale murders in the Telluride and Cripple Creek districts startled the world at the time. They were followed by isolated cases of assassinations and disappearances which reached their climax on the night of Dec. 30 last, when ex-Gov. Steunenberg was blown into a thousand bits by a bomb which had been placed under the sidewalk at the entrance of his home.

Frank Steunenberg was elected Governor of Idaho by the Democrats in 1896. He was a simple, broad-minded, but young and rather inexperienced farmer and sheepman. He was extremely popular in his community and had no enemies. During his administration the troubles between the mine owners and the miners in the Coeur d'Alene district became extremely bitter, and finally culminated in a trainload of miners going to Wardner, where they dynamited the big mill of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mine. The immense structure, which had been built at a cost of $300,000, and which contained thousands of dollars' worth of the finest machinery, was reduced to kindling wood.

Serious rioting followed this example of the miners' desperation. Non-union men were terrorized, kidnapped, and driven from the camps. A number were killed or mysteriously disappeared. Conditions were soon bordering on open anarchy.

At last the mine owners and property holders called on the Governor to send the militia to the district to preserve order. The situation was represented to him as unbearable, and he was told that the soldiers were necessary for the protection of life and property. The Governor sent as his representative to the district Bartlett Sinclair. Sinclair reported that in his opinion the presence of the soldiers was imperative.

Then the Governor sent the militia into the Coeur d'Alenes, and martial law was declared in the district where the miners had for years been supreme. Serious skirmishing occurred between the soldiers and the strikers. Finally the famous "bull pen" was established, into which the more dangerous disturbers were herded like cattle. At one time there were 800 men confined in this pen. The soldiers were negroes and delighted in tormenting their white prisoners, and this made the bitterness all the more acute.

The drastic measures employed resulted in a victory for the mine owners, and the miners were forced to admit defeat. Non-union men were shipped into the country from the lead mines in Missouri and put at work. The climax came when the hated permit system was installed, under which any miner who had ever been objectionable to the owners could not secure work.

Gov. Steunenberg was blamed by the miners for this galling condition. Anathemas and threats were hurled at him at all the miners' meetings, and he was frequently warned by his friends that his life was in danger. But the Governor, who was of an absolutely fearless nature and who felt that his actions had been for the best, only laughed at the suspicions of his advisers. He finally retired after finishing his second term with credit, and again took up his peaceful life at Caldwell. The years went by and the troubles in the Coeur d'Alenes were apparently forgotten. The district prospered and the miners seemed content. Then came the shocking news that Gov. Steunenberg had been assassinated—blown to atoms by dynamite.

Immediate steps were taken to catch the assassin or assassins. Rewards, public and private, aggregating thousands of dollars were offered. The best detectives in the country were put at work. Suspicion pointed to a man who had been in the town for some weeks and who was known as Harry Orchard. He was arrested and incriminating evidence against him was found in his room. Orchard, it was ascertained, belonged to the Western Federation of Miners, and had been implicated in several disturbances and in a train wreck in Colorado.

The evidence found in Orchard's room, consisting of powder, wires, fuses, and other materials for making bombs, was strong; but the officers felt that a confession was necessary. They believed Orchard guilty, but were of the opinion that he was the tool and hired assassin of others. They wanted the whole truth, and believed the time was at hand to clear up the series of murders and wholesale killings that had marked the miners' troubles.

Orchard was sent to the penitentiary at Boisé. All efforts to secure admissions from him failed. His nerve seemed of iron. Finally McParland was called in. He ordered Orchard confined to a single and isolated cell, where he could neither see nor talk to any one. Good meals and cigars were sent to him, but he was not allowed to read a line and never a word was addressed to him.

For the first three days Orchard stood this treatment well. He ate and slept and appeared to enjoy himself immensely. Then he began to grow nervous and irritable at the continued silence and could not sleep. McParland, once a day, would some to his cell door and address him pleasantly. The detective's was the only human voice he heard. Gradually he began to look forward to McParland's brief visit, the only break in the deadly monotony of his existence.

Finally one day the detective said: "This is a nice fix you've got yourself into, Orchard. What do you suppose that old mother of yours back in Pennsylvania will think when she reads about it?"

The words seemed to shock Orchard like a jolt from a galvanic battery. He fairly staggered as he said: "What do you know about my old mother?"

"Oh, I know all about you and your mother and your brothers and sisters and your boyhood back on the farm," the detective replied, and left the suspected and tortured man alone with his thoughts.

Next day Orchard's eagerness for the detective's visit was manifest. When he finally came Orchard begged him to come in and talk for a few minutes. McParland complied and led Orchard to tell of his boyhood and his better days. Then his daily visits became longer. Under his kindly, sympathetic manner Orchard finally thawed out; his better instincts were appealed to as only this master detective knows how; his misdeeds grew horrible to him, and at last he broke down and confessed.

It took McParland three days to write the verbatim story of the Steunenberg killing and of different crimes in Colorado. In his confession Orchard directly charged President Moyer, Secretary Haywood, and G. A. Pettibone of the Western Federation with having plotted Steunenberg's murder and with having furnished the money needed.

L. J. Simpkins, a member of the Executive Board, he said, had helped him in the actual murder.

Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone were arrested late Saturday night, Feb. 18, in Denver, and were virtually kidnapped and whisked away early Sunday morning on a special train and under heavy guard to Idaho. They had absolutely no chance to communicate with their families or to take legal steps to prevent extradition.

Orchard's confession is a truly remarkable document. If its revelations are confirmed at the trial it will make a unique addition to the world's literature of crime. With startling minuteness the attempts made on the lives of ex-Gov. Peabody of Colorado, Chief Justice Gabbert of the Colorado Supreme Court, Judge Goddard, D. H. Moffat, and other prominent men are detailed. Facts concerning the dynamating of the Independence (Col.) station, in which nineteen men were killed; the infernal machine in the shaft of the Vindicator Mine at Cripple Creek, killing two men; the assassination of Arthur Collins, manager of the Smuggler Union Mine at Telluride, and half a dozen others, whose bodies were cremated in a limekiln, are told with a careful attention to details.

The account of the efforts of years to kill ex-Gov. Steunenberg and the final accomplishment of that purpose reads like fiction. Orchard says repeated attempts were made to "get" the Governor by others whom he names in his confession. Steunenberg's steps were dogged by would-be assassins every day of his life. All unknowingly he was constantly in the shadow of death. Something always occurred to block the murderous plans until Orchard took a hand.

Orchard, who was well known for his reckless daring and seeming lack of feeling, was finally assigned to the task. It is understood that he was to receive $3,800 for the "job." Orchard, who is an expert in the use of explosives and the manufacture of bombs, went to Caldwell and took up his residence there. He engaged a room at the Saratoga Hotel, from which he could watch the First National Bank, of which Steunenberg was President. For weeks he studied his prospective victim's movements until he came to know his habits perfectly. The Governor was accustomed to go to his home each evening about 6 o'clock. The other members of the family were in the house at that hour waiting for him to come to dinner. Darkness settled down early on those December evenings and furnished splendid opportunity for concealment.

Orchard debated whether he would use a bomb or a shotgun with which to make way with the Governor. He finally selected the latter weapon as the better. Christmas Eve he decided, with a fiendish desire to make the crime as horrible as possible, Steunenberg should be killed. He tells how he and Simpkins lay in wait for the Governor with sawed-off shotguns. Finally he came, but as luck would have it he was accompanied by his brother and his son. The assassins would not risk killing others, and abandoned their plans for the night.

Orchard then changed his mind and decided that he would use a bomb. He constructed the infernal machine, which was to be worked by a wire pulling a cork from a bottle of sulphuric acid, spilling the liquid onto some sugar, which would ignite and set off a dynamite cap and thus explode the whole charge of dynamite. Orchard planted this bomb late one night under the sidewalk at the gate through which Gov. Steunenberg always passed in going to his house. He decided the killing should occur the night of Dec. 30.

The bomb was in position and the wires, under a fine covering of earth, were placed ready for attachment. A few minutes before the Governor was due to arrive at his home Orchard passed by the house and was seen by the neighbors to apparently drop some papers. He stooped down to pick them up and hurriedly attached the wires from the bomb to the gate, and then walked rapidly off down the street.

The infernal machine was ready, and the slightest opening of the gate would explode it. Had any one gone to the Steunenberg home at that time he would have met the fate that had been intended for the Governor. But Orchard had studied the movements of the Steunenberg family and their friends most carefully, and had laid his plans well. No one interfered with the execution of the plot, and, all unconscious of danger, the Governor walked to his doom.

When he opened the gate the bomb exploded with all the force of a thirteen-inch gun. The whole fence, sidewalk, and front of the house were reduced to kindling wood. The Governor was, of course, instantly killed and his body horribly mangled.

Orchard had finished the "job."

When the confession was received in Denver the detectives learned for the first time of the attempts that had been made on the lives of Chief Justice Gabbert and Judge Goddard. Orchard told how he had planted a bomb just outside the gate before Judge Goddard's home, having buried it six inches beneath the surface of the earth, covered with a piece of sacking. The bomb was the same kind that was used in the Steunenberg killing, and when the wires were attached the slightest opening of the gate would explode it.

Three efforts had been made to kill Judge Goddard, but all hid failed, and Orchard had been compelled to wait for a more favorable time. However, he said, the screweye would be found in the gate and the bomb in the ground, as he had never removed them. Judge Goddard was called in and this feature of the confession was read to him. He immediately went to his home, and in less than thirty minutes he returned, his strong features and heavy gray beard failing to conceal the agitation that almost overcame him.

"It's there," he said, as he sank into a chair.

After the rest of the confession had been read the party, accompanied by Adjt. Gen. Bulkley Wells, went to Judge Goddard's home. After looking at the screweye and measuring the distance according to Orchard's diagram the location of the bomb was fixed.

All went to a safe distance except Gen. Wells, who, taking his penknife, scratched the earth until he found the wire with the fishhook attached. Then, even more carefully, he removed the earth and finally came to the sacking Orchard has described. With infinite care he scraped the earth from the bomb and finally removed it. The dangerous machine was then taken to his office at the Capitol Building.

Then it was discovered that the head of a pin had saved Judge Goddard's life. A pin had been stuck through the cork in the bottle of sulphuric acid, the head inside and the sharp end bent and attached to the wire which was fastened by the other end to the gate. Orchard said he did not know why the bomb had not exploded, but examination soon showed the explanation.

The bomb had laid in the ground several days before Orchard saw the right opportunity to connect it with the gate, and in that time the acid had eaten the head off the pin. When the gate was opened the pin slipped through the cork, instead of pulling the cork out. The knowledge that he had been so close to death has had a painful effect on Judge Goddard, and he has aged ten years in the past three months.

In Orchard's confession he clears up the killing of Merritt Walley, an assayer, who was blown to pieces in an inexplicable manner about a year ago while crossing a vacant lot near his home. It had always been supposed that Walley was carrying a bottle of nitro-glycerine and that either accidentally or with suicidal intent he dropped it, causing it to explode and scattering pieces of his body for hundreds of feet.

Orchard declares that Walley was blown up by a bomb intended for Chief Justice Gabbert of the Colorado Supreme Court. He says Gabbert was a marked man and he had been assigned to put an end to him. He says that he studied Judge Gabbert's habits closely, and ascertained that each morning on his way to his office he took a short cut across a vacant lot near his home to where he took the street car. Orchard planted a bomb in the path the Judge always toook and arranged the wire so that it could be fastened to a purse.

When Orchard saw Judge Gabbert leaving his home he stooped down and fixed the purse to the wire, expecting the Judge would kick it or pick it up, setting off the infernal machine.

But for the first morning in weeks Judge Gabbert, instead of crossing the lot, met a friend and walked down the street a distance with him.

Just then Walley rode along across the lot on a bicycle, and Orchard, at a distance, saw him get off and pick up the purse, which he had spied. The bomb did its deadly work, and he, instead of Judge Gabbert, was blown to pieces.

In his confession Orchard tells of plans that had been made to wreck a special train during the Colorado strike on which Gov. Peabody and his family would be riding. The special train was carrying 200 people from Cripple Creek to Victor to a military ball there the night of Nov. 14, 1903.

The spikes had been pulled from a rail on the curve of a 300-foot embankment, but the engineer had received a warning and drove his train so slowly along the curve that when the loose rail was struck the train stayed on the track. Had the scheme succeeded it is believed that not only Gov. Peabody and

Dynamite Dangers That Threaten New Yorkers

Lesson of the Park Avenue Disaster Seems to Have Been Lost on the Men Who Make Use of High Explosives in This City.

NEW YORK burns up four tons of dynamite a day, which is more than is used in a year in the diamond mines of South Africa. This fact alone arouses at once a public demand to know what safeguards and precautions are taken to avoid accidents.

The committee intrusted with this work by the Board of Aldermen made the following report on April 3, submitting these conclusions as the result of their investigation:

"First—That the alarming frequency of serious accidents arising in blasting operations in this city, which have resulted in loss of life, bodily injuries, and destruction of property, is a public disgrace, and demonstrates that such occurrences are due to the absolute ignorance and incompetence of those engaged in such work or to a reckless or criminal disregard of all measures of prudence necessary to safeguard its operation. This scandalous condition imperatively demands a prompt and radical remedy.

"Second—That the primary causes of this condition are the insufficiency and inadequacy of the rules regulating blasting and blasters, the laxity of the methods employed in granting and revoking licenses, and the imperfect and perfunctory manner in which blasting operations are supervised by the city officials having them in charge.

"Third—That it is impracticable to legislate against individual negligence. It is, however, entirely feasible to prescribe efficient rules and means for their due observance and enforcement which will minimize the chance of negligent action. The fitness for a license as blaster should include the past record or history of the applicant as well as his knowledge and experience.

"Fourth—That the rules and regulations of the Municipal Explosives Commission governing this subject should be revised, both with regard to the qualifications of applicants to be licensed as blasters and the manner of the examination to determine as to those qualifications. The rules should be more stringent and the examinations more thorough.

"Fifth—That whenever occasion arises the authority to revoke a blaster's license should be exercised impartially and without hesitation; and that no licensee should be permitted under any circumstances to shift the burden of incompetence or carelessness upon another. That the temporary transfer of a license should be punished by its immediate and permanent forfeiture, and that the violation of any regulation with reference to the manner of preparing or exploding a blast should be visited with like punishment.

"Sixth—That the city officials charged with the personal supervision of blasting operations should be rigidly held to a more thorough and strict performance of their duties and their neglect should admit of no excuse. That, if necessary, the force should be increased, so as to enable proper supervision to be maintained.

"Seventh—That, by reason of the provisions of Section 43 of the city charter, prescribing that modifications of existing rules and regulations must originate with the department affected, the committee feels that it is without authority to present to the board an ordinance for adoption."

The committee suggested the following amendment to the ordinance governing the examination of blasters:

"In order to be qualified to be examined for and to receive such certificates of qualification as a blaster a person must comply to the satisfaction of said board with the following requirements:

"(a) He must be a citizen of the United States and over 21 years old.

"(b) He must on his first application for examination fill out, in his own handwriting, a blank application to be prepared and supplied by the said Municipal Explosives Commission, and which shall contain the name, age, and place of residence of the applicant, the place or places where previously employed, and the nature of employment for five years prior to the date of application, and a statement that he is a citizen of the United States.

"(c) He must be a person who has been employed as a blaster's helper or a general assistant under the instruction of a licensed blaster in any building in the City of New York for a period of not less than five years.

"(d) The application shall be verified by him and shall, after the verification, contain a certificate signed by three blasters employed in New York City and registered on the books of said Municipal Explosives Commission as blasters working at their trade, certifying that the statements contained in such application are true."

The Bureau of City Betterment of the Citizens' Union, about this time, receiving complaints from householders living in the vicinity of the Pennsylvania hole, on Thirty-third Street, and in proximity to the new tunnel of the New York Central, started a quiet investigation of their own, and they have found ample evidence to support the information supplied to the Board of Aldermen by their committee.

It seems that there are violations of the regulations everywhere in the city where dynamite is used. It also seems that there is a reckless carelessness in the manner with which the powder magazines are cared for, and indifference to accident in the way the dynamite is handled. In their endeavor to finish jobs quickly the Bureau of City Betterment declares that contractors make their blasters use much greater charges than the law allows. Blasts are improperly covered, which in a great measure accounts for flying rocks and consequent damage to property and loss of life.

⁂

The Municipal Explosives Commission, originally appointed by Mayor Low after the Park Avenue accident in the Subway, came into being for the purpose of regulating the management and methods of handling high explosives in New York. In its original personnel it was a very expert committee of three men, who framed a set of regulations covering every dilemma of the dynamite problem. Under changes of administration there have come changes in this committee, and it is charged by the Bureau of City Betterment that in its present authority it is neither expert nor energetic.

The Bureau of Combustibles is supposed to co-operate for mutual benefit in furthering the strictest enforcement of the regulations laid down by the Municipal Explosives Commission.

Does it do so? asks the Bureau of City Betterment, and in the interest of the public shows rather clearly that between these two Pooh-Bahs of dynamite traffic in New York there is no love lost. For instance, the regulations relating to the licensing of blasters are only carried out perfunctorily.

From experts in high explosives, from citizens, city officials, and members of the Municipal Explosives Commission comes evidence to the Bureau of City Betterment confirming the recent report of the Committee on Laws and Legislation of the Board of Aldermen that blasting accidents are "due to the absolute ignorance and incompetence of those engaged in such work or to a reckless and criminal disregard of all measures of prudence necessary to safeguard its operations." It can be stated authoritatively that the law relating to the use of explosives is violated daily, and Superintendent Murray of the Bureau of Combustibles, in reply to an inquiry, admitted that blasters may sometimes put in an extra quantity of explosives for "good measure," and that in some instances blasts might not be properly covered. At the same time there is at present no means of laying this charge directly at the door of individual contractors, for the system of inspection, as now carried on by the Bureau of Combustibles, is insufficient and lax. The drilling of holes is not supervised, the charges are not examined by the city Inspectors, and the covering of the blasts is left to the discretion of the boss blaster, who, in violation of the law, frequently details an irresponsible laborer to do the work.

An instance of laxity in this regard is cited in the case of the New York Contracting and Trucking Company, which has the contract for excavating at the Pennsylvania Railroad station, between Thirty-first and Thirty-third Streets, on either side of Seventh Avenue. This is a big job, and the list of dead and injured is a long one.

Various sorts of blasting accidents have occurred here. Premature explosions have claimed victims, and so have explosions due to drills hitting a forgotten cartridge. Men have likewise been killed by improperly covered blasts, which have hurled rocks in all directions, sometimes for a distance of several blocks, to the serious damage of surrounding property. In cases of accidents like these the Fire Commissioner is permitted, when the offense occurs more than once, to forfeit a contractor's bond, which is conditioned for the payment of any loss, damage, or injury to persons or property from explosions. He may also revoke the contractor's license.

No such measures have been taken to discipline the Pennsylvania contractors for the reason, it was stated at the office of the Bureau of Combustibles, that they promptly repair all damage caused by flying rocks and concussion. This statement is only half the truth. Some repairs are attended to by the claim agent of the contractors, but not all. Within a day or two several damaged houses in the neighborhood of the Pennsylvania cut have been visited. Two were damaged by flying rocks as large as a man's hat; a third had every ceiling thrown down and the walls cracked, while the fourth sustained damage to its water pipes. In each instance the damage was sustained several weeks ago, and despite the fact that it was reported to the contractors, no repairs have been made, and the houses have not been inspected by the contractors' claim agent.

The chief cause of accident is no doubt the incompetence of blasters, of men who handle the dynamite, and of Inspectors. According to the rules of the Municipal Explosives Commission a blaster, in order to obtain a certificate of fitness, must fulfill the following requirements:

1. Be at least 20 years of age.
2. Be able to read the English language understandingly.
3. Be of good habits.
4. Have letter of recommendation from last two employers if he has not been in the service of his last employer for at least three years, in which case a letter testifying to good character and capacity from last employer shall be satisfactory.
5. Be familiar with the provisions of the law and the regulations governing the transportation, storage, and use of explosives, particularly that part relating to the service to be performed by the applicant.
6. Be familiar with the risks incident to the service to be performed by him, and capable of taking all necessary precautions.

While it was stated at the Bureau of Combustibles that the foregoing regulations are complied with in every instance, this is denied by at least one city official, whose position enables him to get the true facts, and also by qualified experts outside the city Government. It is asserted in contradiction that the examination of prospective blasters is most perfunctory, and that the principal qualification that a prospective blaster must have is a note from his employer.

As a number of contractors employ cheap labor, their blasters are frequently ignorant Italians, totally unfit, it is asserted, for the important work they have to perform, and lacking the necessary knowledge of explosives. Some of them, it is asserted, even if they are fairly competent, delegate their duties to unlicensed subordinates, and even go so far as to sell their licenses to men on other jobs, a regular trade in these documents having been established.

The man who actually fired the blast at the most recent accident of importance on Convent Avenue, in this city, was an Italian who had been in this country scarcely six months.

There is a special regulation governing the manner in which dynamite cartridges should be dried, and yet here is the picture of a watchman sorting about 200 sticks that have been drying in the sun, in close proximity to the powder magazine, and necessarily to the danger of surrounding property.

Another picture shows the proximity of the powder magazine to a light, insecure construction track. If the construction engine should accidentally run off the track into one of these magazines the explosion would be like an earthquake to that part of the city.

The Bureau of City Betterment estimates that sometimes as much as 1,500 pounds of powder must be stored for a short while in these magazines, which is in excess of any degree of safety.

There is, apparently, no law regulating the hours prescribed for blasting. Dynamite can be exploded at any time, night or day, in New York.

At the Pennsylvania excavation there is only one Inspector, says the Bureau of City Betterment in its investigation. Obviously he cannot inspect all charges in such a large area.

It is customary, when the boss blaster is ready to charge, to send a laborer to the magazine for the "bolognas," as the dynamite sticks are called. These are carried on a man's shoulder, frequently in an open box, with perhaps a bit of paper over them to comply with the law that demands they should be covered. A cigarette stub dropped carelessly by one of the loungers who are always watching the work would result in an explosion.

A frequent reason for premature explosions and loss of life is the striking by a drill of a forgotten cartridge, which had failed to explode and has been neglected. The regulation in a case of this sort is clear:

"If a charge misses fire and cannot be fired by the use of a stronger detonator, a new hole shall be drilled twelve inches from the first one. In case of an explosion not carrying away entire drill hole, it is forbidden to begin drilling from the bottom of the old drill hole."

The Bureau of Combustibles may be hampered for lack of Inspectors, but it cannot escape liability if it issues certificates of fitness to incompetent blasters.

A week later Superintendent McCormick and Melville Buck, foreman of the Vindicator Mine, which employed non-union men, went down to the sixth level of the mine and were instantly blown to pieces. Orchard says this was the result of a mistake. The bomb was to have been placed on the seventh level, in which case fifteen or twenty of the non-union men would have been caught, but in placing it they got it in the wrong tunnel, and McCormick and Buck were killed.

⁂

The biggest killing pulled off by the "inner circle," according to Orchard, was the dynamiting of the Independence station, when it was planned to annihilate two shifts of non-union men employed in the Findley Mine. Orchard says the scheme was plotted in Haywood's rooms in Denver. The Findley Mine was just above the Independence station. The second, or night, shift went off and the third shift went on at 2 o'clock in the morning, the train bringing up the men of the third and carrying down the men of the second shift. The scheme was to plant the infernal machine and wait until the train ran up flush with the platform, when both shifts would be blown up.

Orchard tells how he made all his plans to establish an alibi through a man in Wyoming. He left town, but the night of the assassination went back, remaining on the outskirts and being unseen.

"I had my explosives all fixed," Orchard says, "and planted my gun with the wire running down along the track to a switch behind a pile of refuse. All I had to do was to get behind that pile and pull the wire when the train pulled in.

"I heard the train coming and saw the fellows come running down the hill. Then I got into my position, got my wire, and waited for them to strike the platform. After I did the job to get away was easy."

Nineteen men were blown up when Orchard pulled that wire. If he had waited a moment longer, instead of nineteen his victims would have numbered at least a hundred. The train with its passengers had not yet reached the platform, nor had the majority of the men from the mine.

A man named Neville, by whom Orchard had established his alibi, knew too much, Orchard says, and came to Denver and forced the Federation Treasurer to give him money. He then went on to Goldfield, Nev., a marked man. Orchard was promised $1,600 to do away with him, and hired a man named Sapp, whom he knew in the Coeur d'Alenes, to assist. Orchard says Sapp went to Goldfield, and in a short time Neville died from mysterious poisoning. Orchard says he got $1,600, but has, strangely enough, never heard from Sapp demanding his share.

It will be remembered that a Coeur d'Alene mining engineer named Bradley, who had incurred the enmity of the miners, was mysteriously blown up a year and a half ago in San Francisco while spending his honeymoon there. It was supposed that leaking gaspipes had caused the explosion, as Bradley had just come out the front door and lighted a match when it occurred.

Orchard says this was also his work, and that a bomb instead of leaking gas was the cause of the explosion. He says he had been trailing Bradley for some time, because of his opposition to the miners, and early one morning he placed a bomb so that it would explode when Bradley opened his door. Neighbors of Bradley in San Francisco partially confirm this story, as they saw a mysterious man whom they recognized from photographs as Orchard on the front porch of Bradley's apartments a few minutes before the explosion occurred.

Orchard says he tried to kill Gov. Peabody so many times that he finally grew superstitious and came to believe he had a charmed life. He declares that he and Simpkins at one time had a bomb fixed just off the walk along which the Governor was accustomed to walk. Orchard stood at a distance with his hand on the wire, Simpkins waiting at another point to give the signal. Just as the Governor stepped close to the bomb a coal wagon backed up a few doors away with its wheels on the wire, so that the bomb could not be exploded.

Orchard says Haywood was getting impatient, and so he decided to try to kill the Governor with a shotgun. He knew Mr. Peabody would be coming home late from a ball one night, so he put a sawed-off shotgun under his coat and lay in wait for him. A carriage drew up at the Peabody home and three women alighted and went up the steps. Orchard looked into the carriage, but the Governor was not inside. He had not returned with his family, as he always made it a rule never to jeopardize them when he could avoid it.

The women saw Orchard look into the cab and were badly frightened. Mrs. Peabody, when asked if anything had ever occurred to annoy or frighten her after returning from a ball, confirmed this portion of Orchard's confession.

The next attempt made to kill the Governor was at the Masonic Temple in Denver. Orchard says he and Simpkins got an automobile and a couple of well-dressed men to stand around the entrance and offer to take the Governor home after the meeting. Orchard was to see that he never got there.

Gov. Peabody has corroborated this story. He says as he was leaving the Capitol one afternoon a man walked along behind him and said sotto voce: "Don't speak to me, but don't ride in any man's automobile to-night."

The Governor thought the man was a crank of some sort and paid no attention to him, but when approached that night by two affable strangers who offered to take him home from the temple, a nervous chill went over him as he remembered the strange warning.

"I would have sworn the men had been up stairs with us," the Governor said. "They were putting on their gloves, and greeted me cordially, and I, of course, replied pleasantly."

"Ride you up, Governor; we're going up your way," said one of the men, but the Governor declined the invitation.

There were many other attempts on Peabody's life, Orchard says, and he himself even went so far as to take up his residence at Cañon City, the Governor's home, in order to get a chance at him. But a strange fetich of good luck seemed to follow the Governor, and time after time, when Orchard thought he had his man, he escaped.

Orchard declares that he knows nothing of the attempt to poison the Governor and his family at Cañon City about three months ago. At that time all the members of the family were taken seriously ill, but, suspecting poisoning, called aid in time and were saved. An analysis of the milk they had used showed the presence of a large quantity of arsenic.

Orchard says he was commissioned to kill D. H. Moffat, the millionaire railroad man, and made elaborate plans for the assassination.

"I found that Mr. Moffat always walked down Seventeenth Street from the Denver Club to the bank," Orchard says, "and that he had a peculiar habit of hugging the buildings as he walked along the street. So I rented a room on the second floor of the Albert Hotel and got ready to pull off an accident from there by dropping something that would finish him. Just after I got my room and had things ready for him, he went to Europe and it was all off for the Summer.

"The next thing I went after was Steunenberg, where Adams and Simpkins had been getting things ready for me."

While a person cannot be convicted on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, the prosecution asserts that Orchard's confession has been fully confirmed, even to the most minute details, by that of Steve Adams.

Adams, it is said, was the thug and slugger for the "Inner Circle" of the federation. When it came to deeds demanding brute force and little brainwork, Adams was called into service. He also is in the Idaho Penitentiary, and it is said has made a confession even more startling than that of Orchard's. Adams, the detectives assert, knows more about the secret workings of the "Inner Circle" than does Orchard. They say his testimony will furnish the larger sensation at the trial. The prosecution has been extremely chary of letting his confession become public, as he has implicated a number of men whom it is hoped to arrest.

Adams's confession was secured in a peculiar way. He was arrested at Haines, Oregon, soon after Orchard's confession. A great hue and cry was raised over the capture of Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone, and it was announced that a million dollars would be raised for their defense. Attorneys were immediately engaged in their behalf and rushed to Boisé, where everything was done to gain their release.

But Adams, as a less important person, was somewhat overlooked in the current talk, and no attorney was sent to see him.

"They can't make me the 'fall guy,'" Adams said, and in a spirit of pique called in the detectives and told them everything he knew.

The detectives say that the confessions of Adams and Orchard clear up at least twenty-four murders during the past ten or fifteen years that have so far remained mysteries.

As a result of Orchard's confession, Vincent St. John, formerly of Telluride, Col., was arrested at Burke, Idaho, where he was holding the Presidency of the Burke Miners' Union under an assumed name. St. John is charged with the murder of Arthur W. Collins, manager of the Smuggler-Union Mine at Telluride. Collins was shot in the back through the window of his home as he was sitting reading one evening with his family. St. John was indicted for this offense, but has only recently been apprehended. He is now in the jail at Telluride and will be tried soon for the murder. He is said to have had a hand in several other killings in the Telluride district during the miners' strike.

The defense of the federation leaders will be led by Charles S. Darrow, a Chicago criminal lawyer, and it is understood that Bourke Cockran of New York has also been retained. Patterson, Richardson & Hawkins of Denver, John F. Nugent of Silver City, Idaho, and Fred Miller of Spokane, Washington, are also employed by the defense.

The prosecution is led by James H. Hawley of Boisé, Idaho, who has had a remarkably successful record, and by W. E. Borah of the same town, a brilliant young man, who is styled "the Bryan of Idaho."

Gov. Gooding of Idaho is an interesting figure in the prosecution. He is English by birth and of indomitable perseverence. Coming to the West when a boy, he has accumulated a fortune, all of which he will spend, he says, if necessary to bring the persons implicated in the Steunenberg murder to justice.

First All-Night Bank in the World Opens To-morrow

An Innovation Which Is Without Precedent in Business Methods, but Has Been Long in Demand.

DAY AND NIGHT BANK, SOUTHEAST CORNER FIFTH AVENUE AND FORTY-FOURTH STREET, AND GERARDUS WYNKOOP, VICE PRESIDENT AND EXECUTIVE.

OAKLEIGH THORNE, PRESIDENT.

THERE was once a man who wrote an essay entitled "A Plea for Gas Lamps." It was not that this writer—and he was a great one—had any grudge against electric lights or municipal progression, but his plea for the poor old gas lamps was that with them would go much of poetry and much of association and romance.

The feeling was probably the same as that which is apt to be produced in the mind when one hears for the first time that the night and day bank has come—a bank which will shake off every banking tradition, convention, and many of the time-bound rules of banking business.

The night and day bank will open to-morrow, and the first depositor at the receiving teller's counter at 6 o'clock to-morrow night will have the distinction of being the first to lodge money after banking hours and the doubtful honor of being the pioneer of night destroyers.

Just think of it! We who have lived all our lives half in play and sleep, half in activity, closing our desks every afternoon and going home to an easy armchair, a pair of warmed slippers, and "He Giveth His Beloved Sleep" over the bedstead; perhaps going to the theatre and to supper afterward; always laughing, crying, quarreling, forgiving like respectable human beings before opening the grim desk in the morning—just think of all this being ended and the bank being open for business all night!

Why, the bank and banking hours have been the one safety clutch of thousands of poor clerks and rich employers. Were it not that the banks closed promptly the poor clerks would have had to work overtime, and the rich employers would never have got even a little enjoyment out of life, worrying, as they would have done, over the business they could have been transacting.

But that's all past now. Banking hours stretch from 12 noon to 12 noon, and the merchant who thinks it won't make any difference, except to his financial convenience, had better think again. So long as a bank is open he'll work; so long as he'll work he'll make money and lodge it, and make more and lodge it; so that, with a bank open all night, the New Yorker's ambition will be like the forever postponed achievement of the man who started out to find the end of the world—he'll keep on traveling.

We have become used, through association with time and divers poets, to think of the night as of rest, the moon as the Queen of Sleep and sentiment, and the stars as her pickets. Tennyson's brook made frivolous noises, but never in poetic truth did a night wind or a moonshaft in the river suggest anything but a temporary cessation from all worldly cares. Well, sleep peacefully to-night; open your casement and let the night breathe all the poetic nothings it has accumulated through centuries; enjoy the serenade of the clerk who takes on a godlike grace after the bank closes; this is the last old-fashioned night; to-morrow evening they'll be doing business in notes and drafts at Forty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue, while the stars weep and the nightingale chants:

"The bank! The bank! The bank! Open all night!"

The whole scheme of things, from writing sonnets to making business appointments, will be changed by this new order of things. Time was when a man sold his kingdom for a special train to "get me t' the city befor-r-re the bank c-loses!" And the banks, still with some respect for the romantic needs of living, managed to close up just as the flier drew in. Then we had the thrilling tableau, "Too l-late!"

There won't be any more of that. The night and day bank has not only robbed us of the sentiment of the stilly night, but deprived us of much that went to the making of good melodramas. Just think of that burglar scene!—Gone, gone forever.

But New Yorkers and their town creep on apace. They do things before anybody else, as a rule, and of course they had to have the first bank in the world that ran all day and night. The New Yorker has succeeded already in destroying nearly every semblance of sentiment and domesticity in his city, but, as this has always been the nature of the New Yorker, this last straw of the all-night bank should not be so very surprising.

For years, merchants, brokers, and professional men have had to lose time in the busy hours of day to make deposits. Now, they will be able to make up their accounts after the day's business is over and deposit their receipts at their leisure. That making up accounts after hours is where the clerks come in—and stay in—but there is one consolation for them; the day and night bank and the making of deposits at any time will simplify bookkeeping.

To hotels and visitors benefit will also accrue. No longer will the hotel clerk eye the guest and then the check, both with suspicion. No longer will the rogue in evening dress be able to murmur things about the slight inconvenience of the bank being closed; and no longer will the honest guest stand like a culprit while the night clerk passes judgment on his character. No! The bank is open, and the night and day has a system of visitors' New York money orders, to be issued by correspondent banks in the country, payable at any time without personal identification. The bank, too, is conveniently situated, being a twelve-story marble building two blocks from Grand Central Station and close to the fashionable hotel section. The building represents an investment of $2,000,000. The capital of the bank is $200,000 paid in, $200,000 surplus, and a reserve fund of $100,000.

Oakleigh Thorne is the President, but the Vice President, Gerardus M. Wynkoop, is the executive officer. It is to Mr. Wynkoop that one must look for an explanation of the innovation in the world's business transactions. What manner of man is this that dares to shock our English banker cousins, the founders of "banking hours" and "bank 'olidays." A brief synopsis of his career will convince any one that Mr. Wynkoop is just the kind of man one would expect to do this sort of thing. In the first and last place, as a cowboy he has breathed the same atmosphere in Wyoming as that other strenuous man—Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. Wynkoop is about forty years of age. He was a Long Island boy, entered into business in this city, and grew tired of it. Then he went to South Dakota, just at the time of the rustlers' war. He worked his way over the line to Wyoming, and worked near the ranch where the President spent his cowboy days.

Gerardus Wynkoop, when not too busy, can tell dozens of stories of rustler mêlées and cattle stampedes. He once had the pleasure of riding for his life before 15,000 steers which had stampeded in a thunderstorm, and also the nervous joy of singing the cattle to rest as the lightning went down on the horizon. Of Jackson's Hole and the rustlers who made frequent raids, and sometimes strung up a ranch foreman, the executive of the day and night bank has tales enough to fill books.

Little over ten years ago, his financial career began as a Wall Street clerk at $5 a week. On Jan. 1, 1900, he entered the banking house of the North American Trust Company. He was first Secretary, then Vice President. Last year he was chosen Vice President of the merged interests of the Trust Company of America, the City Trust Company of New York, and the North American Trust Company. He then took up the organization of the night and day bank.

Undoubtedly the night and day bank is a good thing for business, and Mr. Wynkoop the man to run it successfully, but there are enough women and poets left, perhaps, to wish that he had devoted his genius to the writing of these plainsman stories. Still, after reading over what has been written here, there may be many who will say that New York's night has not been in the past such a calm, inviolate thing that an outcry should be raised because a bank opens. Indeed, that is the right view of it—after a moment's reflection.

Nearly half of New York lives by night and sleeps by day. The day and night bank is a very fine institution after all. There are times when at about 1 A. M. a man might do well to dodge into a banking establishment with his roll of money. Yes, a night bank has some weighty advantages, and the worst disadvantage is that exactly at 2 A. M. you could go get that money out again.

A JAPANESE VIEW OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AND OTHER THINGS AMERICAN

MY DEAR MR. KIICHI KANEKO:

As I said in my last letter the name of Theodore Roosevelt is getting very popular in Japan—in cities, in the country, and, in fact, everywhere throughout the land. But his popularity here is not as a statesman or as the President of the United States. He is famous as an author, as a writer, and especially as the author of that great book "Strenuous Life." The first translation of this book appeared a year or two ago in book form, and now another translation of the same book is running as a serial story in a Tokio magazine by an entirely different translator. We have the "Life of Roosevelt," written by one of my friends, who is an editorial writer of the Yorodu Choho, and a new translation of "The American Spirit." Perhaps I have to explain to you why our reading public likes that book.

In Japan to-day people are talking so much of success, how to succeed in this world, how to make a great fortune in a night, and naturally anything which treats on such a subject seems to interest our people just at this moment. And there are many magazines in Tokio that made such a wonderful success by preaching the sermon on "how to succeed," instead of making the people successful.

I know there are many young men who worship Mr. Roosevelt's book and are trying to live a "strenuous life"—that is, to climb up the high wall of success, to compete with their fellow-men, and to knock down the others in order to make what they call a success. I do not know whether or not this was the intention of the author of this great book. Anyway, it is considered by them as a wonderful guide of the day.

Charles Wagner's "Simple Life" is pretty popular, too. Since its first translation came out last Fall in Tokio there has been much talk of the book. We have another translation of the same book by a different man which recently came out. I think the author of this little volume, who is a plain minister of Christ in Paris, must be very proud of having the two Japanese translators.

We were leading some kind of simple life in the past, and I think too much of it, too. Maybe it was not what the author of "The Simple Life" might call a simple life. Maybe it was rather too primitive a life. Yet I am quite sure that the people who introduced and worshipped a book on "strenuous life" must have one on "simple life," too, as an offset of too much strenuosity.

I learned through a dispatch that Mr. Carnegie has planned to simplify the English spelling. I think it a very good idea, at least to spend his abundant wealth for this kind of work, if it is not wise to spend his money exclusively for libraries. We have much sympathy toward this kind of movement for the reason that the English language is practically our principal adopted language to-day. We teach it from our common schools to our universities; we talk it and read it, and it is not hard to find pretty good English scholars even among the clerks in our small stores.

Is is not wonderful to see the growth of the English language all over the world? Five hundred years ago it was the language of a few million people of the British Islands, and to-day it is spoken by more people than the combined number of the people of Germany, France, and Italy. About fifty-five years ago in Japan the English language was practically unknown, excepting by a few scholars. At that time the Dutch was the only foreign tongue which we were learning. To-day the English is studied by more people than the combined number of the people who study French, German, Italian, and all other foreign languages.

I think that it will not be long when we come to adopt the English as our national tongue; at least, I hope so. We are now trying to adopt the Roman characters in the place of Chinese and Kana, which is our alphabet. Among the advocates of this movement in Tokio we have the university professors, prominent men of letters, and educationists. They are publishing a semi-monthly magazine devoted to the Romanization movement, and the magazine is printed entirely in Roman alphabets.

As there are many opponents of the movement of simplifying the English spelling in America, so here, too, are many conservatives who oppose this new undertaking. It must come, however, sooner or later, the day when we all recognize the benefits as well as the necessity of adapting the Roman alphabet to our language.

We had discussions on anti-Americanism in Tokio quite recently. Did you already hear something about it? Well, I tell you, it is true that when the "Americanization of the world" was emphatically prophesied by that hasty but very interesting journalist-prophet, William Stead of England, some years ago, Japan, too was preparing to be Americanized. In our schools we have now Yankee athletes; in the society we have the champions of tennis and golf which we imported from America. We have the people like Americans who walk fast on the streets; we have the boys like Americans who are ambitious to make a million in a day; we have the merchants like Americans whose business is to advertise; we have the ladies like Americans who talk and talk and talk!

But we began to feel tired of this Americanized state of things, and I hear the voice which is raised strongly by one of our well-known writers that we should not imitate everything American. And we must look into something English which is so much needed to form our national character.

We certainly owe a good deal to America and the Americans, but there is no reason why we should introduce everything that is American. There are many others who hold this kind of view. I should think that the slowness, the reservedness, and simplicity of the English people must be taken into consideration when we are altogether a too rash, too hasty, too clever, too smart, and too self-advertising people as we are to-day.

The news of the death of Susan Anthony was a great shock to me. Her name is not so well known in this country as it is in America, but for some reason I have been interested in the cause of woman, and it was to this cause that she devoted all her life. Possibly America may need no more of this type of woman, for one Susan had done nearly all that the American people required. In Japan, on the contrary, we need this woman heroism more than anything else to-day. The movement for the securing of women's political rights here, however, is now in progress. A few radical women in Tokio are trying to present a bill to the Parliament through the assistance of certain members of the lower house. I am told that at least 300 women have already joined the movement.

Probably you do not know that we have now a monthly magazine which is devoted entirely to this cause of woman, and which is also edited as well as conducted solely by women.

The woman of new Japan is suffering, for she has new education and new ideas under the circumstances of the old. She must fight with the old conditions with her new idea. Most of our men still treat the women with their old ideas, while the women have outgrown the old-day civilization. You know there are thousands of women who are looking for independence, ready to work, but without chance. Our colleges for women are sending out their graduates to the world by thousands every year; but only few positions are offered to them. Some as teachers and still others even as factory hands. They are too highly educated to be driven to marry after the old-fashioned way—that is, without having any freedom of preferring their husbands with their own wills. They rather prefer to work in the factories in order to have a little independence, liberty, and a real happiness than to marry without love and affection.

I presume that there in America the condition of woman must be quite different from ours. Do the American girls marry for money, wealth, or position? The girls here, it seems to me, have a great struggle in this matter. As you know, they are now awfully particular in love affairs, and in this twentieth century civilization of Japan a marriage means money as it does everywhere perhaps. And naturally they cannot have true love. A man may love a woman who has some money, and a rich woman may love a man who possesses nothing. But a love never exists nowadays between the man and woman who have no money. Maybe there are some exceptions, still it is sure that they can never get married.

Is this not an awful state of affairs? Therefore a man has to marry a woman who has some money, and especially most women have got to marry the men who are rich without any love affair, since there is no chance to support themselves by working. Are not the women here unfortunate? The Japanese woman of to-day should have the right to work, the right to have opportunity, and the right to have independence.

Birds at the Zoo Welcome Spring Joyously With One Exception

DIXIE, the only mocking bird of the Zoo, distinguished himself recently by singing for the first time in months. By a very strange coincidence Dixie's outburst of song happened to be for the special benefit of a group of Southern women and children who had sought him out among all the hundreds of songsters that throng the new bird house.

"We've been all over the place," said one of these women to Samuel Stacey, Assistant Curator of Birds, "and not the first sign of a mocking bird have we seen here."

"We have but one lone mocking bird, Madam," explained Stacey, "and he's all out of sorts, somehow; sits around in the dumps all day with his feathers puffed up like a porcupine, and, as for singing, why, all the combined powers of grand opera couldn't induce that bird to even so much as sound his A."

"Never mind, we're from the South, and we want to see the mocking bird," retorted one of the party, a handsome matronly woman. Stacey escorted them to one of the general cages where all sorts of birds are kept huddled up together, the tom-tit, bobolink, and what-not on equal terms with those princes of song and story—the thrush, nightingale, and mocking bird.

Poor Dixie looked more like the understudy of a scarecrow than anything else as he sat perched in one corner, resting on one foot, his beak stuck back in the mess of feathers which, indeed, resembled a porcupine. More than this, he had no tail, his soft drab plumage having been lost from natural causes, or else plucked from him by some combative rival. With many expressions of sympathy, the Southern women peered through the cage at the miserable looking mocking bird, until, finally he aroused himself to see what it all meant. Had he at last come in for some slight recognition there among all those shrieking foreigners from jungle and plain? Was there yet an American left to admire an American bird? Was he the observed of observers among that gay throng of gorgeously plumed creatures from parrakeet to crested cockatoo?

Dixie squinted and peeped at the ladies, drew his feathers more tightly about him, sprang upon another limb of the sprig in the cage, and said "Peep, peep!" two or three times, as if he really took more interest in himself. Then, hopping away up toward the highest sprig he followed these little notes of inquiry with a "Chirp, chirp, chirp," then dashed off a few bars of "Wheetow, wheetow, whee-ee-tow," and finally let loose a gurgle of "Whi-i-i-r, whi-i-i-r, jay, jay, jay, peetah, peetah, wh-i-i-r—"

On and on went the songster, and the faces of those Southern women became illuminated with a light that told plainly enough that sectionalism is not dead, and won't be dead as long as there is a mocking bird left to sing songs of the South.

"Sweet, sweet, swee-ee-t," sang Dixie, and far above the screams of the frantic parrots the melodious music rang out, silencing many a songster with shame.

"Bob White, Bob White," he went on, and in a jiffy he had taken up the calls of every songbird of the South, and run the gamut of birdland. The English nightingales in the same cage all seemed to get very busy just then, scratching on the sandy floor. The mocking bird, silent for months, had come into his own.

"Oh, but doesn't that sound like a letter from home?" said one of the ladies, and the curious crowd which had gathered about the cage laughed aloud.

If there is one inmate of the Zoological Gardens who does not welcome the arrival of Spring, it is the great white gyrfalcon, the raptorial hunter of the arctic regions. This beautiful bird is one of two of its kind known to be in captivity, it being almost impossible to catch them. So far as is known, no human being in recent years has ever succeeded in capturing a gyrfalcon, the only two in captivity in the world having voluntarily surrendered themselves in some strange capricious moment. The specimen at the Zoo is one of the most recent additions, and flew aboard the steamer Citta di Milano 800 miles at sea, off the coast of Newfoundland.

It was hardly to be expected that Mr. Gyrfalcon would raise his ponderous body, flop his great spotted wings, and scream with glee at the coming of Spring. He wants no "ethereal mildness" on his bill of fare, and if he had his way he would, no doubt, call down upon Bronx Park a perpetual blizzard. He comes from above the tree line. He was born in a nest not built in the cozy corner of some broad, sweeping elm, but upon the summit of Greenland's icy mountains, or further yet to the north, perhaps on an iceberg. He was a pitiful spectacle the first day the sun beamed down its peaceful benediction upon Bronx Park, for, while hundreds of jolly birds were building their nests and singing blithesomely in the flood of warm sunlight, Mr. Gyrfalcon sat stoically dreaming of that faraway land where the "northern lights come down o' nights."

The gyrfalcon is a great favorite with the thousands of children who visit the Zoological Gardens, although he has only been there a short time. Not one of these children but has read in nursery books of the great gyrfalcons of the Kings of olden days that were sent out over the countryside to bring home a lamb for the King's dinner. The bird has long figured in fiction, perhaps for the very good reason that he has rarely been sufficiently in close touch with humanity to figure in any other thing than mere fiction.

Contrasted with the gyrfalcon's dissatisfaction at the dawn of Spring was the unspeakable joy displayed by the American eagles. Uncle Sam, Jonathan, and the whole family fairly shrieked their welcome to the season, and positively refused to rest contentedly in the great cage that had been built for them. Out into the sunlight they hopped and stretched their wings exactly as the eagle on the silver dollar flaunts his plumage. It was no doubt this pose of the eagle that inspired the Irish-American patriot to utter the toast:

Here's to the American eagle,
Proud bird of freedom, all hail!
Whom no man could ever inveigle,
Or put salt on his beautiful tail!

It was the desire of every eagle in the flock to soar upward to the very disk of the sun, but by the time they had flopped their ponderous wings a time or two their bodies would strike the roof of the cage, and down they would come in a heap upon the ground, screaming wildly at their chagrin.

This acrobatic performance by the proudest of birds pleased the children immensely, and there were scores of them about the cages all the while, goodhumoredly laughing at the expense of the emblem of their country. One of the pleasantest of observations to a casual visitor at the Zoo is at the eagle cage when fond mothers take their children there to let them catch the inspiration of patriotism the haughty bird of freedom is supposed to impart. The little lessons of patriotism whispered to the youngsters by their mothers vary in accordance with the different nationalities. It is a common thing to see a woman, born herself in Germany, or in Italy, leaning over her American-born child and whispering something like this:

"Now, there's the American eagle, the bird that protects little boys and little girls in this country. That's the bird that's on the money that buys your food and clothing—the bird you'll have to fight for if you ever go to war."

Jerome K. Jerome Returns to England Indignant

British Humorist Lapses into Seriousness as He Recapitulates the Shocking Things He Has Seen in This Country.

It may be deplorable information to those who have their prejudices against the British joke to be told that English humor is now universally understood in this country. But here is Jerome K. Jerome, after a trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast, returning to his original joke-land—buoyant, happy, unharmed.

Six months has this celebrated humorist perpetrated his native quips upon a heretofore suspicious American public, and he has escaped unscathed. It is even said by his American managers, the Pond Lecture Bureau, that much American money has been willingly paid to listen to him.

There were people even in Waco, Texas, who had read his books, and there were other people in North Dakota who thought he was talking French, so strong and unassailable was his English accent, but in spite of these surprises he has gone steadily on across this vast continent, facing friends and foes with no other sign of self-protection than a dress suit made in Bond Street and an accent picked up in Paddington.

To one who had the privilege of meeting him in the first spasm of his expectations in this country and in his last before leaving it there is an inevitable impression upon the mind that America really must be a strange and curious place.

America, of course, is always an undiscovered country to some one, in spite of Christopher Columbus, so that when Mr. Jerome, in his dry, calculating way, waved the United States before me as if it were a thesis instead of a continent the impression of what America had done with Mr. Jerome was more interesting than what Mr. Jerome had discovered in America.

Another six months in this country and the serious side of Mr. Jerome would have got the better of him.

The tragic instinct is a nemesis that always threatens the genius of comedy—and usually destroys it; so I was sorry to see the serene and whimsical Jerome changed into a sort of Japanese solemnity when he described his overwhelming indignation at the lynch law he had discovered while in the South.

He was in his shirtsleeves, his evening trousers were in danger of Mrs. Jerome's energetic instinct to pack them away, (and he needed them under a banquet table that night,) his hosiery had to be changed and he was expected to give a public toast to the ladies in a couple of hours; and yet, with all the weight of these necessities pressing upon his vigilance, he did not hesitate to indorse his wife's statement that he "would take tea with a negro at any time." I tried to point out what to many Americans seems the unusual character of his opinion on this question, and he almost climbed over the foot of the bed in the nervous tension of his feeling against such "injustice."

"Because a man's skin happens to be black, is that any reason why he should be denied the usual protection of the law? We have bad men in England. There are roads about the country where I would not let my little girl ride her wheel alone, at home—but we do not lynch people there. It is even against the law in England to shoot in self-defense. While I was in the South, two negroes were taken out of prison and killed by the mob, and afterward it was found they were innocent of the crime. One of the foremost citizens of the town in which this occurred was a leader, under the impression that he was performing a heroic act. What did he do it for? To protect the women, is the sentiment that sustains such acts, but surely there are laws to protect women. It is not brave to hide behind petticoats to excuse an expression of race hatred. I expressed my opinion on this subject in a Tennessee city, at the end of my reading, and several men came up to me afterward and thanked me for my attack on lynch law, but while they were talking I could see they were looking furtively about for fear their own townpeople would overhear them."

"I wish you would sit down, dear, you must be tired," urged Mrs. Jerome, unaccustomed no doubt to see this disturbing current of serious feeling in the usually serene British humorist.

But he wouldn't sit down—he couldn't, while the "oppressed American negro" was so "cruelly misunderstood" in the South.

"Where would the South be without the negroes? They do every bit of the hard work there is to do," continued the Englishman valiantly, "and they are a cheerful sort of people, with much sentiment and music, and extremely courteous in their manner."

"Including the Pullman porters?" I asked.

"Yes, I found them so. Perhaps they are not yet equal in civilization to the whites, but they must be given time to arrive at that. Treat them like children, and encourage them; don't bully and despise them."

"What would you advise the Americans to do with this lynching problem?" I asked, taking him seriously, as he wished to be, for the moment.

"Arouse public sentiment so thoroughly against lynching that any man or woman would be ashamed to support it. Talk against it, agitate public feeling, openly, loudly against it. Nothing can stand against public sentiment. We have no lynching in South Africa, and when our own black natives come to England we receive them as equals, if they are civilized and a bit educated."

This was not quite the pacific spirit with which Columbus met the red man, but like other European celebrities who have been discovered by America before they themselves discovered us, Mr. Jerome wants to help us along. Mrs. Jerome was quite as emphatic in her sympathy for the negro as her husband, but as she had never seen anything in black faces but a minstrel show before she entered hotel life in America, her judgment is not so extensive as her husband's.

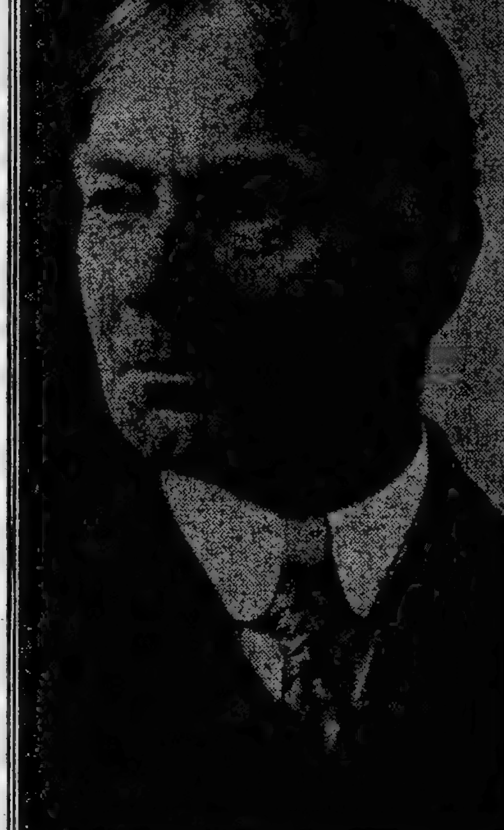
Yes, America had left the English humorist in a serious state of mind, there was no doubt about it.

"Will you tell me why, in the foreign news of American papers, I read only about the triumph of the Conservatives in England, and always a slur at the Liberals?" he asked me, in a burst of suppressed indignation.

"Do you?" I mildly replied.

"Surely every one knows that the Liberals in England are in power, and they represent the labor party!"

"Do try and sit down, dear," persisted Mrs. Jerome meekly; then in soothing tones she added, "I was just telling this gentleman that I would have no hesitation in taking tea with a negro."



JEROME K. JEROME.

"But you liked the South," I urged.

"Some of it, yes. The people don't have any unpleasant accent—in fact, they have no accent at all," said the humorist emphatically, "and there are some fine old houses, which I was glad to see," and he slid uncompromisingly onto the edge of an armchair.

"Where did you find the most appreciative audiences?"

"In the West, I should say. Every point went out there, excepting in Dakota, where for the first fifteen minutes they leaned forward as if they were trying to understand, just as people do at a French play. It was my accent, I fancy, that puzzled them. I think those people in the West are a little quicker to see the point of a joke than some audiences at home, even—and then there are so many societies, literary and musical, all knowing the best in the arts and demanding it. Yes, I think some day the West will supply the artistic impulse of this country. But then, what can a man really know about it intimately in six months, it is so enormous."

"You are going to write a book about it?"

"No, I don't expect to. I've got five plays to finish up, and that will take some thinking; and then, you know, this country isn't finished yet. I never would have believed what a lot of building up is going on if I had not seen it myself."

* * *

"Chicago is almost done, isn't it?" I asked.

"Well, it almost did for us. I thought those street cars there were chariots of execution; they seemed to try their best to kill something, or at least shake one to death. I really don't know how my wife escaped alive, because they never stop for you, and she did the most wonderful giant swings to avoid being separated from me that you ever saw."

"It was exceedingly exciting," remarked Mrs. Jerome cheerfully.

"And I say; you don't seem to care how many people you kill on the railroads here," continued the humorist, with a tolerant smile.

"It isn't an American fad, exactly," I said pleasantly.

"Perhaps not, but human life is not so carefully regarded. There were wrecks all around us, in front and behind, but the papers sometimes didn't have a word about it the next morning, and yet there were lives lost always—people killed."

"You found the traveling accommodations fairly comfortable?"

"On the whole, y-e-s, they were good. On a good train your find your barber's shops, and your bath, and your reading room, and so on, which of course is better than anything in Europe—excepting in Germany, where traveling is luxurious. But what horrible contrasts one gets in traveling here. Either you are in a magnificent train, or else you are compelled, to reach your destination, to take some miserable little box of a car, because there is no other kind used on the branch lines." Everything seemed to have contributed to Mr. Jerome's serious observation, and so much had escaped his humorous outlook.

"What do you think of American humor, as you saw it?" I asked.

"Didn't really see it," said the English humorist, cheerfully, "didn't have time to look for it."

"Mr. Jerome went to a bullfight, though," interpolated Mrs. Jerome, with a sly smile at her husband, who suddenly became very grave again.

"Yes, I saw it," he said, "somewhere near El Paso, and I reached the place by trolley. The audience was entirely American, too," and he fixed a searching immobile Japanese eye upon me, waiting for some explanation of such unchristian conduct.

"At any rate, it was exciting?"

"Not at all," he replied.

"Was there much applause?"

"A little, when the bull was finally put to death. It reminded me more of a slaughter house, a butcher's shop, where meat was being handled on business principles. No one was hurt but the bull; no one was even in danger. The horses were protected by a sort of cardboard shield, but they were so exhausted from old age when they were brought in that they ought to have been killed two years before. The bull seemed quite the most intelligent thing in the ring. It kept looking around in amazement, then it would stand still and wag its head in sorrow for the imbeciles who had paid to come and see it. There were quite as many women as there were men in the audience, too. Is bullfighting an American custom?"

He would have started off on another unpleasant "impression of America," but I pushed him back, so to speak, into California.

"Ah! that's the spot. It's a paradise. California is the only place in America where the houses have any aesthetic expression. It seems as though the people out there have absorbed the wonderful beauty of their surroundings, as though nature had influenced them to a sense of harmonious beauty. Of course the big towns are like all other American cities, always building up, and looking like any other big city."

"Yes, we saw him, but nothing happened. I was very unfortunate in this respect. I didn't see a 'bad man' do anything really bad. I was disappointed."

A bellboy came to the door and announced that sone one was on the telephone wishing to speak to the British humorist.

* * *

"Ah! that's about this toast to the ladies tonight, and I have not written it yet," he said, with a farewell smile at me.

"Does it take you long to write a speech?"

"I write very slowly, and you see I only have two hours in which to do it. I am glad to get home to see the children, but I shall be back in the Autumn to look after some of my plays. I feel, somehow, younger for this trip. Whether it is a youth imparted by the American people, or the result of having to hustle up so much for trains and boats, I can't say."

Mr. Jerome had seen so much of the beautiful American that he was tired of her—but Mrs. Jerome desired to give it as her impression that the most fascinating thing about the American woman was her camaraderie with her own sex—her ready helpfulness toward another woman. PENDENNIS.

WONDERS OF RADIUM EXPLAINED BY A PROFESSOR OF JOHNS HOPKINS

The close of the nineteenth century was signalized by more than one notable scientific discovery, but not one of these was of more importance or value than that of the radio-activity of certain substances, leading, as these discoveries must, to further analyses of matter itself and new ideas as to its nature.

The work of summing up the discoveries which have been made during the last ten years occupy an entire volume from the pen of Prof. Harry C. Jones of the Johns Hopkins University, just about to appear from the press of the D. Van Nostrand Company. It is a book which will make any one think, and every careful reader must marvel at the novelty of the discoveries which science has brought about within the last decade.

It is the present conclusion of science that all atoms of whatsoever kind are made up of electrons, which are nothing but negative charges of electricity in rapid motion. We must remember, however, that we have over seventy apparently different forms of matter which cannot be decomposed into anything simpler, or into one another, by any agent known to man.

When Becquerel found that the salts of uranium produced an impression on a photographic plate wrapped in black paper to cut off ordinary light, and that the radiation given off by the salts of uranium could pass through thin sheets of metal and still affect the photographic plate, he set the scientific world thinking, for here was a new kind of all-penetrating light. But when it was further found that the radiation given forth by uranium is not diminished in several years—i. e., during the longest period during which observations have been made—the astonishment grew. This property of substances to emit radiations without any external cause is known as radio-activity, and such substances are radio-active. There are a number of such instances.

This discovery, Prof. Jones says in effect, following that of the X-rays, stimulated the work of investigators, and Mme. Curié at last discovered radium itself with the wonderful attribute of being self-luminous, the only substance in the world known to be so. Moreover, radium is the only substance known that has the power to charge itself electrically.

The results of experiments with radium are surprising on account of their enormous magnitude. A gram of radium gives out every hour about eighty calorics of heat. Since the heat of fusion of ice is eighty calorics, or eighty calorics of heat are required to melt one gram of ice, it follows that radium gives out enough heat to melt its own weight of ice every hour.

The most remarkable feature of all is the fact that radium continues to give out heat at this rate for apparently an indefinite time. This is a most surprising result. Indeed it is one of the most startling facts that have ever been discovered in any branch of physical science. Think of the enormous amount of energy that this substance is capable of liberating! There is a rational explanation as to the origin of the enormous amount of energy given out by radium.

Rutherford has suggested that the discovery of the large amount of heat liberated by radium would account for at least a part of the solar heat. If the sun consists of a very small fraction of 1 per cent. of radium this would account for the heat that is given out by it. There is at least some evidence pointing toward the existence of radium there.

The three properties of radium, then, which are in the highest degree remarkable are, according to Prof. Jones: That it has the power to charge itself electrically; that it has the power to illuminate itself, or is, as we say, self-luminous; that it produces heat-energy spontaneously, or can warm itself.

These are the facts, but it is not the highest aim of science to ascertain facts, save as they help us to reach a theory or generalization, which, when sufficiently established, becomes a law. The discovery of isolated facts bears the same relation to science as the making of bricks to architecture. The bricks are absolutely essential in constructing the building, but they are not the end or aim of the architect. In the light of the facts that have been ascertained about radio-activity certain generalizations have been reached. New light has been thrown on the nature of the atom, on the genesis of matter, and on other theories.

Keeping in mind the peculiar properties of radium, especially its wonderful power of heat production, we are forced to the conclusion that the radio-active elements are unstable. The atoms of these substances represent unstable systems which are continually undergoing rearrangement and decomposition. The question that would first arise is this: Are the changes that are going on in the radio-active elements fundamentally different from chemical reactions? New substances with properties different from the original substances are being formed. Energy in the form of heat is liberated, and these changes are characteristic of ordinary chemical transformations. If we study more closely the changes that are taking place in radio-active matter we shall find marked differences between them and chemical reactions.

In the first place, the changes in radio-active matter take place at a definite rate, which is entirely unaffected by conditions. This alone would show that the transformations in radio-active matter are fundamentally different from chemical reactions.

It is calculated that at least thousands of years would pass before radium diminished appreciably in bulk, but that radium is depreciating and undergoing decomposition is certain, and if it were not being produced in some way all of the radium now in existence would eventually disappear. Radium is being continually produced, probably from uranium.

Another marked difference between the transformations that are taking place in radio-active matter and chemical reactions is in the amount of energy set free. If we compare the amount of heat set free when the most vigorous chemical reactions take place with that liberated by salts of radium the former is utterly insignificant. We must, therefore, abandon any attempt to explain the transformation of the radio-active elements on the basis of chemical reaction.

It is only by the electron theory of J. J. Thomson that we can account rationally for many of the remarkable phenomena of radio-activity. It is the only theory that enables us to deal at all satisfactorily with the unstable atom. Formerly the elements were regarded as stable and unchanging. In the light of recent investigations with the radio-active elements there is evidence that all the elements are radio-active to some extent. If this should be proved to be due to the elements themselves, to be a property inherent in all matter, and not caused by the deposition of some form of radio-active matter, then we must regard matter in general as undergoing change. This change is slow, very slow, but is progressing continuously; the more complex, unstable forms breaking down into simpler forms of electrons.

If it should be shown that all matter is slightly radio-active, as seems not improbable, then we should be forced to the conclusion of the general instability of the chemical elements. Our former conceptions of the nature of the chemical element must be fundamentally modified.

After a long and exhaustive study of the production of radium the general conclusion now accepted is that uranium is the parent of radium, but radium is not formed directly from the former. One or more intermediate products with a slow rate of change must be formed. These, on breaking down, yield radium directly or indirectly.

The greatest sensation in connection with the effects of radium has been created by Burke, who asserted that by the application of radium he could make the radiobe, which was actually a living organism; in other words, that radium was the life-producer. Sir William Ramsay explains the apparent formation of cells by Burke in this way. He says: "When radium bromide powder is sprinkled on the gelatine it naturally sinks a little below the surface. The emanation would act upon the water in the gelatine and decompose it, liberating oxygen and hydrogen. These bubbles of gas become surrounded by sacks, due to the coagulating action of the emanation on the albumen. They would thus appear like cells. The bubbles would at first be very small, probably of ultra-microscopic dimensions. They would gradually increase in size as more and more water was decomposed and would thus appear to grow. The contents of the supposed 'cell' would be gaseous—a mixture of oxygen and hydrogen—and also some of the emanations." So the quietus is put upon the theory of Burke that he has created a cell, or the beginning of organic life, through radium.

Prof. Jones concludes that these investigations mark a new epoch in the development of the physical sciences. Facts have been brought to light which are of a character that are very different from anything hitherto known. The existence of extremely penetrating forms of radiation, the instability of the chemical atom, the formation of one elementary substance from another, the existence of a form of matter that can charge itself electrically, that can light itself, that can give out an amount of heat that is almost inconceivably great, are some of the facts to which we must now adapt ourselves.

ONE AND A QUARTER MILLION PEOPLE ATTEND NEW YORK'S FREE LECTURES

"The public lectures furnish refined recreation to many thousands of New York's toiling masses, and this one object alone would be sufficient to make them a wise investment by the city."

These words were spoken by Dr. Henry M. Leipziger, Supervisor of Lectures for the Board of Education of New York City, to a reporter for The Sunday Times who called at his office on one of the busy days which have just marked the close of the sixteenth successive year of the free lectures.

"But the lectures do more than furnish recreation," was suggested.

"They do," the speaker continued. "The free lectures constitute an institution by themselves—the People's University, devoted to the cause of adult education in America's greatest city. They are, in fact, a system of university extension. They create and stimulate a real desire for knowledge, confirm habits of thought and study, bring about an acquaintance with books and libraries, bridge over the gap between parents and children, strengthen family ties, and extend a civilizing and humanizing influence to the grown-up children from foreign lands."

Dr. Leipziger for more than twoscore years has lived in New York City, studying successively in the public schools, the College of the City of New York, and Columbia University, and working actively as a member of the bar, teacher in the public schools, organizer of the Hebrew Technical Institute, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, and Supervisor of Lectures.

"What have the public lectures done for the people during the season just closing?"

"We have maintained in Greater New York 155 lecture centres, of which 64 were in Manhattan, 20 in the Bronx, 39 in Brooklyn, 22 in Queens, and 10 in Richmond. These centres have all been open to the public at least one evening in each week, and most of them have been open two evenings in each week. There have been delivered in these centres 5,261 lectures by 505 different lecturers. The subjects have included physiology and hygiene, natural science, astronomy, physics, electricity, chemistry, metallurgy, domestic science, industries, general history, biography, American history, citizenship, government, economics, education, descriptive geography, literature, music, art, and architecture. Practically all of the lectures were illustrated, those upon physiology and hygiene by practical demonstrations, those upon physical science by experiments with apparatus, those upon music by the use of the voice and musical instruments, those upon other subjects by means of photographic views thrown upon the screen by the stereopticon. Many of the more important lectures, such as those upon science, sociological subjects, and literature, have been arranged in courses of from three to eight lectures in a course. In all important courses printed syllabuses were distributed free. Each lecture centre has been in charge of a competent Superintendent who has been interested in the work, and sympathetic and helpful to the people."

"And how have the people responded to this generous offer?"

"The total attendance for the year just closing is estimated to be very close to one million and a quarter, an average of 237 persons for each lecture given," was the ready reply.

* * *

Dr. Leipziger makes it plain to every new lecturer that he is expected not merely to amuse and entertain, but to instruct. The best and most successful lecturer is he who puts common every-day things in a new light, and then takes advantage of the aroused interest to drive home new, significant facts that will inspire his hearers to increased activity of mind and body. That Dr. Leipziger has a rare faculty for finding and interesting men of this sort is evident from the list of names of the lecturers, past and present.

Among the prominent lecturers of the season just ended were Dr. S. A. Mitchell of Columbia University, who lectured on astronomy; Prof. E. R. Van Nardroff of Erasmus High School, whose lectures on general physics and electricity have become widely known; Prof. Morris Loeb of New York University, who lectured on chemistry; Prof. Bradley Stoughton of Columbia University, whose subject was iron and steel; Miss Anna Barrows of Teachers College, Columbia University, who lectured on foods and their preparation; Prof. Adolphe Cohn of Columbia University, who lectured on the French Revolution, and Prof. William MacDonald of Brown University, who gave six lectures on the American Revolution. Others were Robert Erskine Ely of the League for Political Education, whose subject was citizenship; Dr. Walter E. Clark of the College of the City of New York, who lectured on money and banking; Prof. Louis Bevier, Jr., of Rutgers College, who lectured on the American poets, and Dr. F. H. Sykes of Teachers College, Columbia University, who lectured throughout the year on English literature.

Dr. Leipziger was asked to show something of the practical working of the great system of which he is the head. He displayed a series of maps of the five boroughs of the city, suspended on the wall in a position to be readily seen. Each map was thickly peppered over with small red wafers, each of which bore a number or initial letter.

"Each wafer represents a lecture centre," he said. "You see they are scattered widely throughout the city, from such central localities as Forty-second Street, Manhattan, to the furthest corner of the Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, and Richmond. The best routes for reaching the more remote centres are fully described in our route book, which is issued once each year for the use of the lecturers. Even in spite of this the best lecturers sometimes go astray. The story is told of a well-meaning lecturer who started in good season for Coney Island, but who arrived, with tears in his eyes, nearly one hour late. But the audience was still waiting for him, having been entertained by the bright young Superintendent in charge of the centre, who, having served as a Captain in the Spanish war, proceeded to give an extemporaneous lecture on the subject of his experiences.

"You see, Queens furnishes many outlying centres, such as those at Flushing, Woodside, Elmhurst, Corona, College Point, Far Rockaway, Rockaway Beach, Jamaica, Richmond Hill, and Morris Park. To reach many of these a journey by railroad is often necessary. In Richmond there are centres at New Dorp, Stapleton, Tompkinsville, Mariner's Harbor, Port Richmond, and Linoleumville. The centre in Brooklyn most difficult of access is that at Barren Island. The lecturer must leave Canarsie at 5:30 P. M., and must remain on the island over night. In the Bronx there are also many distant centres, such as those at Wakefield and Unionport and at Throgg's Neck. An interesting centre in the Bronx is that at the New York Catholic Protectory. In Manhattan the centres are all easily accessible to lecturers. Of peculiar interest, perhaps, is that on the schoolship St. Mary's, at the foot of East Twenty-fourth Street, and that at the House of Refuge, on Randall's Island.

"The variety of buildings in which the lectures are held indicates the degree to which other organizations co-operate with the free lecture system. Take the centres in Manhattan, for example. First of all we have the centre at the American Museum of Natural History. Since its establishment, in 1895, its growth has been rapid, and it now has an average attendance of over 1,000. The centre at Cooper Union, established in 1896, also has an average attendance of over 1,000. Next should be mentioned the centres in the Wadleigh High School, the new De Witt Clinton High School, and the High School of Commerce. The centres are all housed in new buildings, each of which is provided with an ample auditorium furnished with comfortable seats for adults, the lack of which is severely felt in most of the school buildings of the older type which are used for lecture purposes. Another important centre is that in the hall of the Board of Education, on Fifty-ninth Street. Then there is the centre in the West Side Auditorium of the Young Men's Christian Association, on Fifty-seventh Street, and that in the Young Men's Christian Association building on 125th Street. The centres in halls provided by churches are numerous, as, for example, the well-known centre in St. Bartholomew's Lyceum Hall, on Forty-second Street. Then there are the numerous centres in the halls of various charitable and educational organizations, such as the Educational Alliance, the University Settlement, and the West Side Neighborhood House.

"The most trustworthy evidence of the good results of the lectures is found in the testimony of the people themselves. We are receiving at all times many hundreds of letters which come unsolicited and which contain many suggestions of value. We also send out at the close of each of the three lecture courses many thousand printed forms which we request the people to fill out and return to this office. At the present time we have just sent out about 12,000 of these blanks, and thousands of them have already been returned and are being compiled for future reference."

"An Englishwoman in New York": Girls and Girls

Our Visitor Makes Some Comparisons Between the English "Bread-and-Butter Miss" and the American Schoolgirl.

IN England we have a term, "bread-and-butter miss," by which we describe our girl of the awkward age, who is just emerging from the confines of childhood, the nursery, and the milk pudding stage.

A girl begins to be a bread-and-butter miss when she is about thirteen. How long she remains in that stage of existence depends somewhat upon herself and her natural combativeness, the views of her parents, her financial and social position, and her general environment. If she has no older unmarried sisters, when she reaches the age of eighteen, or in some cases even when she has, she begins to feel her wings about that time. But I have known more than one English girl who was a bread-and-butter miss, nothing more, nothing less, when she was twenty-three or twenty-four.

I suppose the term originated on account of the remarkable capacity of the growing English girl for bread and butter and jam and her feeling of scorn for the milk puddings of her early nursery days. She has graduated from the nursery to the schoolroom, and instead of a nurse, she has a governess. During the early part of the long Winter evenings she is allowed to read and study a bit by lamplight, and her bedtime hour is postponed to 7:30 or 8 o'clock.

In the matter of appearance, awkwardness and unprepossessingness may be said to be her chief characteristic. Her figure, if such it may be called, runs mostly to waist and legs. The half of her which is not waist is legs, long and spindly, and vice versa.

Her clothes have a look of use, never of ornament. There was a period in her life—during the milk pudding stage—when she had some cunning little frocks and some dainty sashes. Now her clothes are—just clothes. One thing she has to be thankful for. That she is now too big—or is it too ugly?—to wear half socks, exhibiting bare calves and knees to the Winter's cold and the Summer's heat and insect bites, in accordance with our barbarous English custom of dressing children.

If she is at all sensitive she is apt to be made somewhat unhappy by reflection on the fact that while she is clothed in the ugliest fashion imaginable, her brothers of about the same age are made to look veritable lordlings in their Eton coats and collars, spotless little silk hats, carrying their smart-handled sticks with the airs of grown-upedness. She may also sadly reflect upon the fact of their being sent away to school to associate with other boys of their own age and receive wonderful plum cakes from home at certain intervals, while her schoolroom is the fourth floor front in her father's house, presided over by a none too attractive governess.

She would like to know the joy of going in a London street alone, unaccompanied by Miss Smith. She has her allowance, and—joy of joys!—it is now being substantially increased from quarter to quarter. Sixpence, possibly a shilling, a week now, if you please, and nobody to inquire what she has done with it! Yet, when she goes shopping, Miss Smith must go, too, though if that lady is good natured, she may busy herself with her own shopping while her charge hesitates over a decision between Scotch toffee and American chocolates.

She goes to the matinée, too, on occasions, when such things as are suited to her comprehension appear on the boards. On such occasions she is accompanied by her governess or her mother, and perhaps her dearest chum.

She suffers frequently for the lack of suitable literature, having passed by the period when "Our Little Folks" and "The Would-Be-Goods" appeal to her imagination. England is full of delightful books for her brothers and boy cousins, but she is really not very well provided for, unless her governess and her parents happen to know all about the wonderful books published in the United States for girls of precisely her age.

Spending a good part of her life in the country, she could find the keenest delight in the nature books which the Americans are constantly providing for growing girls and boys, and when she falls upon the story books written for American schoolgirls she enjoys but does not understand them. Your American life is so altogether different from her English life. She reads of your public school life, where boys and girls study and recite together. In her country, public schools are for boys, and free schools are board schools, where only the poorer classes are educated.

The very best thing that could happen to this bread-and-butter miss would be a trip just now during her awkward age through the United States or even a visit to certain American far-removed cousins she may have residing in New York. It would wake her up. I would, however, have her under the care of her own English mother or governess while she is making the visit, lest she wake too suddenly and wholly and become altogether too American, which would certainly be unfortunate for herself and all concerned. I once knew a little English maid of twelve who made a year's visit to her American relatives, and when she returned to her English home it became a question as to whether all England and its customs should be made over to suit that child or the child remade into an English girl willing to live and let live!

For it is a far call from the English bread-and-butter miss to the American schoolgirl of the same age. Our men are different from your men, our women from your women, our manners and customs from yours. But perhaps nowhere does one find a difference so marked as that which distinguishes the young girls of the two countries.

When ours are in bed yours are sitting at the family dinner table; when ours are out walking with their governess, yours are off walking by themselves or in twos and threes. While ours are quietly listening to the advice of their elders, yours are giving counsel to their parents. While ours are enjoying fairy lore, yours are visiting the public libraries, selecting their own literature with only such superintendence as an interested library attendant may choose to give them.

Some Americans will describe the difference briefly by saying that the English bread-and-butter miss is stupid and uninteresting; the American schoolgirl bright and entertaining.

I am not sure that I will not, with certain reservations, subscribe to this description of the difference myself, while ever in my heart preferring for my own comfort and peace of mind the English stupidity and uninterestingness to the American brightness and entertaining faculties.

With all her backwardness the young English girl can make herself very much of a comfort to her elders, while her American cousin of the sparkling eyes, vivacious tongue, and pretty frock is more often than not the most veritable of nuisances. As soon as she knows a thing she is determined that you shall know she knows it. I was recently at dinner where the thirteen-year-old daughter inquired of me whether I was aware of the causes of earthquakes and the eruptions of Vesuvius. With an air of patronage she desired to know if I had studied algebra and if I did not think England was in her decline. In the midst of a discussion concerning Eden Phillpotts's latest novel, there came from the mother of the family a warning and ominous "S-sh! We seem to have forgotten the adage concerning little pitchers and big ears! Nellie, dear, go the library and bring mother's desk key, will you?" and while the little miss was away from the table the mother said:

"I really quite forgot the child's presence! One can't be too careful about what girls of that age hear."

An experience like this is apt to make one feel that the English system of having dinners in the schoolroom for young persons of this age is most highly to be commended. One feels that almost any amount of their "companionship" might well be sacrificed for a little comfort.

We were discussing a certain play the other afternoon at a small tea party of women, mostly mothers. There were those who objected to it, on what they called "moral grounds." There were those who declared that its aim was of the highest and that its influence was vastly for good.

"Well," said a woman of perhaps 37, wife of a lawyer and member of a literary club, "all I have to say is that it is not a play I should wish my Lucy to see."

Lucy is exactly aged 15 years and 7 months!

"But surely," I said, "that can have no bearing upon the subject whatever."

"It has everything to do with it!" she said with great finality.

I was present at a country house party a few years ago in Kent when an American visitor arrived with her fourteen-year-old daughter. The hostess greeted the young visitor kindly, patted her on the head, and told her she was so glad she had a little girl of her age so that she should not be lonely, whereupon she rang for a maid to conduct the young person to the schoolroom and with instructions to the governess to give her own young daughter a half holiday from her studies. The next day the American mother left without paying her intended week's visit, because, as she frankly explained to an Anglicized countrywoman of her own, she could not allow her daughter to be separated from her at mealtime as though she were a servant. The child's luncheon and dinner had been served with that of her little hostess, presided over by the governess, and at 9 o'clock she had created a sensation by appearing in the drawing room when the ladies of the party were having their coffee.

Now, I am quite sure that a prolonged visit at that country house would have done that American child a world of good—and the further removed from her doting mother the better. When the English young miss visits this country I would have her still under the care of her own countrywomen, but when the American miss goes to visit at an English home I would certainly remove the American influences and let her receive some of the wholesome discipline that will be good for her little soul. She needs much to learn the important fact of her own minuteness in the general scheme of things and the relative importance of other persons and other things.

But the American schoolgirl's faults are mostly those of her bringing up, not her own. She has some of the most charming traits. Once get her out of the notion that she must patronize you and she makes a delightful companion, especially for a long walk or a drive or a journey by trolley. If she is studying botany or zoology she is full of interest in field and flower and beast and insect. The textbooks which she studies in school are written down to her comprehension, and her enthusiasms are all inspiring to her grown-up friends. In appearance she has less of awkwardness than her little English cousin, probably because in this country you have dressmakers and department shops which take into consideration the needs of the growing girl. Her frocks are pretty and becoming, though at times she is somewhat overdressed.

One cannot help dwelling upon all the delightful possibilities of the American schoolgirl if only she might be taught to practice a little self-repression. Just as when she is ubiquitous she can make of herself a most troublesome little creature, so under proper restraint does she veritably become the angel in the house. A few weeks ago I attended a ladies' luncheon at a house where the hostess's cook and housemaid had suddenly given up their situations three hours before the arrival of the expected guests in that quaint American fashion which your American laws seem to have no power to interfere with. I took it for granted that our hostess had provided us with a luncheon sent in by caterers, and when it was time for the removal of the first course I looked for the appearance of a white-acketed black man to perform that task. But in reply to the clinking of a spoon against a cup there appeared the hostess's little daughter of 13, wearing a white apron over her pretty frock. She bestowed a general smile upon the company, and then proceeded to wait on the table with all the grace and expertness of a trained English parlormaid. Only once during the meal did her mother find it necessary to excuse herself from the table, and then because a particular dish was to be brought in that was somewhat larger than the little maid herself. She paid not the slightest heed to the conversation at the table. Her demeanor was perfect, and her face was so sunny that she seemed to be a sort of sauce piquant for the various dishes served.

Such a child, of course, must be an exception, even in this land of clever and resourceful children, but I fancy that in no other country in the world could an occurrence of this sort be noted.

The average American schoolgirl is at once the most helpful or the most helpless specimen of humanity. Brought up in a home where there are no servants or where there is but one maid-of-all-work, she is usually a very charming little housewife, able to make her own bed neatly, keep her own clothes in repair, assist her mother in various ways, and look carefully after her own welfare.

Reared in a home of luxury and with several servants, she is quite the reverse of self-dependent, and one or two other members of the household will be kept busy picking up after her. She roams over the large house at will, leaving her arithmetic on the hall table, her goloshes in the library, her cape in the drawing room, and her hat in the butler's pantry. Then there is a scramble to get her off to school in the morning, since her various belongings must be located and brought together before her troublesome presence can be got rid of. Helpless as the British young girl may be considered from the American standpoint, she requires not nearly so much waiting on as does this pampered young American. The little English girl keeps herself and her belongings in her own bedroom and schoolroom. Her hat hangs ever on its own particular peg, her umbrella stands in its own corner, and woe to the person who shall presume to meddle with these little privacies of hers. She may be bashful when brought into the drawing room to be presented to a guest. She may have no "tricks" to show off in the presence of visitors. She may not be able to "speak a piece" for her uncle when he returns from the wars. She may be robed all unstylishly and unbecomingly. But the one thing she resents is grown-up meddlesomeness. Just as her elders warn her off their domain, she warns them off hers. She goes not to the drawing room without an invitation, and she would be surprised to have her parents bring visitors to the schoolroom without an invitation from her.

However, even with this show of independence on her part, she is subjected to too much superintendence and "overseeing" on the part of her mother, her nurse, and her governess. It interferes with her naturalness. So often she has little chance for conversation with her playmates and chums where the ear of an elder cannot hear; especially is this the case in town, and especially does this make her love the country.

Though the American schoolgirl is so continually thrown into contact with grown-up persons, she has not this disadvantage of the English girl's existence. Very readily and very easily indeed does the American girl throw off the supervision of older eyes and ears. She has her school away from her home and her school friends, many of the latter not even being known to her mother. She goes to and from school unattended with all the freedom of the little daughter of a London artisan attending the board school. She comes into contact with girls of her own age who belong to every social class, and she is quite as likely as not to have for her "best friend" a little girl whose mother her own dainty mother would not dream of visiting. Truly your public schools are the nurseries of democracy, and no one could fancy a better educational environment for your future men and women.

One often hears the subject of chaperonage for young ladies discussed when comparisons are made between the English girl and the American girl. I refer now not to the bread-and-butter misses of the two countries, but to those who have passed that stage. But one thing I have particularly noticed in regard to the chaperonage of the older sisters of the young American girl. However much they may escape the chaperonage of their mothers and aunts, they are seldom free from that of their young sisters.

I should say that one of the chief responsibilities of your schoolgirl, as she understands it, is chaperoning her older sister.

MARY MORTIMER MAXWELL.

New Light on the Shepherd Kings of Egypt

Discoveries Which Promise to Reveal the Identity of the Pharaohs of the Biblical Record.

A FEW days ago came the news from Egypt that Prof. W. M. Flinders-Petrie, the most noted of living explorers in the archaeological remains of the East, had unearthed, about eighteen miles north of Cairo, the Temple of Onias, the fugitive nephew of the High Priest of Jerusalem, and that the Hyksos Cemetery, containing scarabs of the Hyksos age, together with the great fort of Hkysos, had also been laid bare. In the first announcement of this discovery, in a dispatch to a friend in this country, Prof. Petrie claims for what he has found the distinction of being the most important addition recently made to the archaeology of Egypt, pointing out that it contains the solution of what has always been a puzzle to Egyptologists and Biblical students—the identity of the mysterious race of "Shepherd Kings" or "Hyksos," as they are called.

The details of the discovery have not, of course, been published so far by Prof. Petrie; but enough has been given to excite the curiosity of scholars the world over who believe that another and most important chapter dealing with the beginnings and the actual historical background of the Bible is about to be written. The discovery is of special interest at this time to archaeologists in this city, since it is closely connected, in subject and material, with the very remarkable collection of Egyptian scarabs, amulets, and seals that has just been presented by J. Pierpont Morgan to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. This collection of scarabs, about 450 in number, was made by the Egyptologist John Ward, and supplements a similar gift made to the Museum by D. O. Mills two years ago. The combined collection is described by Prof. Charles R. Gillett, Librarian of the Union Theological Seminary, the noted archaeologist, who is at present engaged in cataloguing and systematizing the antiquities of the Metropolitan Museum, as being one of the most notable in the world outside of Egypt itself.

"This announcement of Prof. Petrie's discovery of the town and temple site of Onias in Egypt," said Prof. Gillett to a Sunday Times reporter yesterday, "is extremely interesting and significant, as the dispatch containing it points out, in its bearing on the Hyksos riddle. What are the Hyksos? The word's etymological meaning is 'Shepherd Kings,' and it is specifically applied to those Pharaohs of Egypt who welcomed the Hebrews to that country when, according to the Biblical story, there was a seven-year famine, and all the wheat to be found anywhere in the countries of the Nile was stored in the houses of the King. This dynasty of the Shepherd Kings has always been to the Egyptologist a historical problem. The period in which it falls is extremely dark, so far as the records go. We know the names of many of the Kings, but we cannot place them with any degree of accuracy, either chronologically or racially. The discovery of Prof. Petrie, however, gives hope that this very important niche in the Biblical record will now be cleared of some of its obscurity, and the well-known story of 'Joseph and the Corner in Wheat' be given a more definite historical setting.

"These excavations that Prof. Petrie has made are not the first that have been attempted on the same site. Edward Neville, the Swiss explorer, has been over the same ground and given the results of his findings in the seventh publication of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, 'The City of Onias and the Mound of the Jew.' Neville found a few things of historical interest in this field, but on the whole the results were disappointing. Petrie, however, is a most remarkable man, an explorer second to none, tireless in his work, and with an experience so complete in this kind of thing as to render his dictum on the age or meaning of an archaeological discovery authoritative. Hence the importance to be attached to this announcement of his from Egypt.

"In regard to the Hyksos, the subject of Petrie's discovery, about which there has been so much speculation among Egyptologists, it is generally supposed that they were a dynasty of foreigners who conquered and overthrew the native Kings of Egypt, and under whom the Jews, who were likewise strangers, found favor and protection. According to the chronology of Brested these Shepherd Kings formed the seventeenth Egyptian dynasty, which came to its close in the year 1580 B. C., when it was succeeded by a long line of native dynasties, Kings who, in the words of the Old Testament, 'knew not Joseph' and were opposed to all foreigners.

"The Shepherd King who reigned in the time of Joseph was somewhere around the year 1700 B. C., if we use Brested's system of calculation. It is probable that his name was Apepa. A scarab of his has just been put on exhibition in the Ward collection in the Museum. All that we know of these Shepherd Kings comes to us on these scarabs. In Bagdad, also, there is a sphinx with the name of one of these Kings engraved on it. The same name is found on an alabaster vase in Crete, showing that the fame of the stranger dynasty was widely diffused.

"If it had not been for a deplorable accident that happened a century ago the mystery that surrounds this race of conquerors, who are so intimately connected with the Jews of ancient history, would be dispelled. It was a century ago that a remarkable papyrus was discovered in Egypt, containing a complete list of all the Kings of that country, with the lengths of their reigns. When it was discovered the value to history of this papyrus was recognized to be so great that special care was taken in bringing it to its destination in Europe. It was placed in a sealed bottle as the surest way to protect it from the dangers of air and water. But the bottle was broken while on its way to Turin, and the papyrus reduced to fragments, whose restoration has ever since baffled the skill of archaeological experts.

"It is remarkable how perfectly these papyri preserve the characters with which they are inscribed. I remember deciphering and copying one some years ago in Berlin. It was 4,000 years old, and so delicately written that to-day one can tell where the scribe dipped his brush into the ink and where a fine hair got in the way of his writing. But let such a papyrus be broken and it becomes as unintelligible for all purposes of history as this ill-fated papyrus of Turin. Thus the scarab has become a valuable and almost the only memorial of those far-off times.

"The scarab, as you know, was an Egyptian beetle carved in stone, and was employed for a variety of purposes—historical, religious, talismanic, and decorative. They were used as seals and as beads, and sometimes they were buried with the dead as a protection against the powers of evil which infested the nether world. As a symbol the scarab represented the reappearance of the living from the dead. The scarabeic beetle seemed to the people of Egypt to have the power of self-reproduction without the function of sex, and hence it represented to them absolute life, or pure being. This came about quite naturally. The Egyptian watched the beetle rolling a ball over the sand and then burying it, after which the same ball would reappear as a living organism, a fact in natural history that ultimately led to the scarab being taken as the type of everlasting life and the resurrection of the dead.

"In the famous Ward collection that has just been put on exhibition in the Metropolitan Museum there is one scarab between 5,000 and 6,000 years old, belonging to the period of the King of the fourth Egyptian dynasty, who built the second Pyramid of Ghizeh. It has this King's name on its back—Kha-f-ra. The time of the Hyksos, the Shepherd Kings, is represented in the Ward collection by some noteworthy specimens among the scarabs, all bearing the engraved names of the Kings to whom they belonged. There are many scarabs here, also, which are engraved with characters having no intelligible meaning and are thus incapable of translation. Their significance was private and only understood by their owners, who regarded them probably as mascots. Many are 'good luck' tokens for friends, travelers, and hunters. Other scarabs have intricate designs, some systematically arranged. One that we have shows a variation of the floral design which symbolized the union of the two lands of Upper and Lower Egypt into one kingdom. Other scarabs show more intricate, decorative patterns of scrolls without other special significance.

"It is from these scarabs, contained in the new Museum collection and in a few similar collections elsewhere, that information as to the Shepherd Kings, the 'Pharaohs who knew Joseph,' has been derived. To these existing collections the additions that will be made from the present discovery of Prof. Petrie near Cairo will undoubtedly come with great force, and something more definite than we have had heretofore as to the ancestry of the Hebrew and his possible relationship to the mysterious Shepherd Kings of Egypt should result.

"Very few references to the Jews have been found in the hieroglyphs of Egypt, and archaeologists are everywhere looking for more, as a result of the explorations that are now being made. There is one wall picture in existence representing a nation having strong Semitic features, certainly not Egyptian, coming into the country as strangers and asking permission of the natives to settle and feed their cattle. To the native Egyptian the shepherd, the herdsman, was an outcast—almost a pariah. The care of the cattle was usually relegated to the slave. The Jews, of course, were cattlemen, shepherds, and the picture seems in every way to designate them as they sought refuge in Egypt in the manner and at the time made familiar by the Old Testament story.

"Then, if the etymology of the Hyksos, Shepherd Kings, is correct, it would account for the Pharaoh of Joseph's time being friendly to the Jews, granting them entrance to the country, and treating them as a race to which he was bound by ties of blood. That is a reasonable hypothesis, shedding light on the Old Testament narrative, and is corroborated by a portrait statue that we have of Apepa, the Shepherd King, or Pharaoh, of Joseph. 'Pharaoh' simply means 'the Great House,' and is equivalent to the 'Sublime Porte' of modern times, as indicating the ruler of Turkey. In the Old Testament all the Egyptian Kings are called indiscriminately 'Pharaoh,' and it is thus difficult to individualize them.

"There was evidently a change of dynasty, however, after the death of Joseph's Pharaoh, a change by which the Shepherd Kings, who may themselves have been of Jewish origin, were driven out by a conquering native dynasty. The latter was naturally inimical to the Hebrews who were left in Egypt, and reduced them to the condition of semi-slavery described in the Old Testament. A favorite theory has been that it was under this oppressive rule over the Jews that the pyramids were built. Archaeological research has proved, however, that the pyramids were erected at least a thousand years before the supremacy of the native dynasty that dethroned the Shepherd Kings. What the Jews were forced to build was a royal storehouse in Pythom, the remains of which are now being excavated. Interesting relics of this first recorded persecution of the Jews are some specimens of bricks made without straw, unearthed by the explorer Neville, and now on exhibition in the Metropolitan Museum. They are as big as three ordinary bricks and in excellent preservation.

"When the full details of Petrie's discovery reach us these exhibits will undoubtedly gain in historical value, and it may then be possible to prove, what is now only a hypothesis, that the conquerors of Egypt, from whom arose one of its most famous dynasties, were of the race of Israel—a fact that will be of value in clearing up some of the obscurities of the old Bible narrative."

Thirty Million Dollars Invested in Yachts in and Around New York

WITH upward of thirty million dollars invested in the sport already, New York yachtsmen are preparing this year to add a million more in boats, to say nothing of what they will spend for maintenance. The big schooner yacht that J. Rogers Maxwell is building at Herreshoff's in order to race for the King's Cup, the feature event of the year, will alone cost upward of $75,000 before she appears in a race. L. J. Callanan is building another schooner that will race for the King's Cup, and, though a smaller boat, her cost will be considerable, while William E. Iselin plans a new 90-foot schooner that will cost quite as much as Queen, the new Maxwell boat.

F. M. Smith of borax fame is building as notable a boat in the sloop class. She is only a sixty-footer, and, being sloop-rigged, entails a materially smaller outlay, but it would cost easily $25,000 to duplicate her. A similar boat is being built by the Bristol wizard for E. Walter Clark, while of the smaller racing boats there are a host building, fully seventy-five, that will cost anywhere from $250 to $5,000 before they go into commission.

But, while sailboats are the more interesting to the true yachtsmen, they represent a small part of the money laid out in pleasure craft. It is the steamer that costs most to build and most to run. The biggest steamer of the year is building at Boston for Roswell Eldridge. She is only 120 feet over all, but she will cost $750 a foot. Ranging from her, the new power craft are building in scores, costing anywhere from her $90,000 total down to $250. To include the number of boats that are installing motors in them—for the use of the "kicker," despised though it be by the sailing enthusiast, is growing tremendously—would be to run the total figures of the money being spent in yachts far beyond the conservative million dollars estimated above.

A yacht is like any other pleasure vehicle in that its cost price is its smallest expense. To maintain a yacht means a thousand and one expenditures that one wots not of until he undertakes it. The cost may be much or little, according to the extent that one entertains, but it is an incessant drain. Few attempt to maintain boats at nominal figures, and these few find it a laborious work.

The cost of entertaining may run to any figures. It is said that the flag officership of any prominent yacht club costs at a minimum $10,000 a year. There are thirty first-class yacht clubs in America, and a dozen of these are in New York. A glance at the names of a few who hold such offices will indicate the character of the expenses connected with the office, for none but the very wealthy aspire to the places.

There is Cornelius Vanderbilt, at the head of the New York Yacht Club. He keeps his big steam yacht North Star in commission many months in the year. Besides this he will race his seventy-footer Rainbow this year. To race her properly he has hired Charley Barr to skipper her, and the cost of Barr's services is no insignificant item. It will cost him for actual running expenses of these two boats at a moderate estimate $40,000. How much more he will add for entertaining no one can say.

Vice Commodore Walters of the New York Yacht Club has his Narada in commission fully as many months of the year as the North Star. He is lavish in his entertaining aboard her. The coal bills of his 275-ton craft would alone keep more than one family the year round. Seymour L. Husted, the third ranking officer, cruises in his schooner Crusader II., which, being a sail craft and not a racer, costs comparatively little to maintain, but for entertainment he spends a pretty penny.

At Larchmont there are three racing men holding flag office. Wilson Marshall's Atlantic has cost more than any other similar craft afloat in one way or another. To win the Kaiser's Cup in the ocean race it is said that he spent over $50,000. He has been cruising the Mediterranean in her with a party of ten for the past three months, and is now homeward bound across the Atlantic to overhaul his boat and put her in shape for her onerous and costly duties as the flagship of the Larchmont fleet. Fred Hoyt, the Vice Commodore, owns and will race the Isolde. He paid a good price for the English cutter before he brought her over from the other side, and he has duplicated her cost in entertaining several times, no doubt. Howard Willets, the third officer, owns the Cricket, Rana, and Minx, three small racing boats, that cost him from $3,000 to $5,000 each, and he has just chartered the schooner Tekla to better do justice to his official position. The cost of charter will be a small part of the cost his official duties will impose.

So one might go on and recall the famous steam yacht Oneida, owned by Commodore E. C. Benedict, who succeeded W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., as Commodore of the Seawanhaka Corinthians at Oyster Bay; or the Endymion, the ocean racer which pushed the Atlantic for honors in the Kaiser's Cup race, owned by George Lauder of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club; or the Rheclair, the flagship of Daniel G. Reid of the Atlantic Yacht Club; or the Florence, or the Altra, or the Alert, all owned by Commodore Alphonse Alker of Manhasset Bay; or the famous little racer Mimosa III., which, with the Mimosa I. and the Mimosa II., was owned by Commodore Trenor L. Park of the American Yacht Club. The story of all would be the same—wealth, position, and lavish expenditure.

About the yacht yards in New York City there are now fitting out upward of seventy-five steam yachts, and the season is more than a month distant. Col. John Jacob Astor is having the Nourmahal overhauled in South Brooklyn. His use of the boat is limited to late cruising, as a rule, but he makes up for the lateness with his generous hospitality. The Warrior, Frederick Vanderbilt's imported steam yacht, is fitting out near the Nourmahal. Frederick Vanderbilt is essentially a cruiser, who cares little for entertainment, but it costs him a good sum to run a craft the size of the Warrior.

Besides the Warrior, North Star, and Rainbow there is in the Vanderbilt family the 886-ton Valiant, owned by W. K. Vanderbilt, the biggest yacht owned in America with the exception of the 969-ton Nahma, owned by Mrs. Ogden Goelet; the famous turbine speed yacht Tarantula and the seventy-footer Virginia, owned by W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.; the Adroit, owned by Alfred G. Vanderbilt, and several small racers. Frederick Vanderbilt also owns the 203-ton Conqueror.

In the Gould family, Howard owns the Niagara, the big 700-ton steamer, in which he is now cruising the Mediterranean, and the Niagara III., the fast steam yacht that last year cost him a $5,000 wager with W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., when she was beaten by the Tarantula, aside from other expenditures; Frank owns the 207-ton Helenita, and Edwin owns the Aileen and the Chichota. August Belmont owns the 200-ton Satellite, besides his interest in the big and little racers.

One might go on almost endlessly reciting the big boats owned. In the New York Yacht Club alone, besides those named, there are forty yachts of more than 200 tons. J. Pierpont Morgan's 772-ton Corsair is the biggest, and Col. Oliver H. Payne's Aphrodite, 654 tons, ranks second. Then there is James Gordon Bennett's Lysistrata, 626 tons; William B. Leeds's 519-ton Noma, William Ziegler's 465-ton America and his 450-ton Terra Nova; James J. Hill's 401-ton Wacouta, Eugene Higgins's 395-ton Varuna, Amzi L. Barber's 379-ton Lorena, J. Harvey Ladew's 349-ton Columbia, Edmund Randolph's 307-ton Apache, Henry H. Rogers's 323-ton Kanawha, A. S. Cockran's 318-ton Alvina, James E. Childs's 304-ton Nirodha, and Walter Jennings's 303-ton Tuscarora.

These give an idea of the magnitude of the game, but nothing but active participation in it will give any one an idea of the extent of its cost.

Changes That the May Heavens Offer to the Star Gazer

ALL nature smiles in the month of May, and our eyes and ears must give full attention to all its appealing developments. May, with its life and stir, its glow of resurrection, its lengthening days, which our sporty out-of-door friends find still all too short for all there is to do and see. The month's thousand nameless charms, its surprises, its hopefulness, its prodigal growth of flowers and grass, its eager haste, its joyfulness, and its songs. Each day contains something new, as old as the Spring, perhaps, and yet new to-day, something that was not there yesterday; a bird, a flower, a fern unfolding its green coils, a butterfly, a bird's nest, a bird's song. There is no monotony in May.

The changes that take place as we cast our eyes upward through the pure atmosphere to the far-distant stars are also marked at this season. The splendid constellations Orion and the Greater Dog take their leave in May, and will not make their appearance again in the evening until early in the Winter. Their leading brilliants, Sirius, Betelguese, and Rigel, may be seen for a short time after sunset in the early part of the month, but they will have vanished before the month ends. And with them will depart Aldebaran, the most conspicuous luminary in the constellation of the Bull.

The first magnitude stars long with us which remain throughout the month are Procyon, of the constellation of the Lesser Dog, in the southwest; Castor and Pollux, of the Twins, in the west, Pollux being the further to the south and the brighter of the two; Copella, of the Charioteer, in the northwest; Regulus, of the Lion, in the south, and Spica, of the Virgin, in the southwest, while Arcturus, of the Cowherd, which came into view in the evening sky early in April, is in the east and well up toward the zenith. This will be the approximate position of the stars named at about 8 o'clock on the nights of the first week of May.

Within the past two or three weeks another first magnitude star has come into the field of vision early in the evening. This is Vega, of the constellation of the Lyre, which may now be seen swinging into sight in the northeast about two hours after sunset. Before the month ends the constellation of the Eagle, with the magnificent Altair near the centre, will appear in the east early in the evening, and about the same time, low in the southeast, the splendid Antares, of the star group of the Scorpion, will come into view.

Venus and Mars all but touch one another on the 6th, and the meeting will be well worth watching, but will of course be eclipsed by the near approach of Venus and Jupiter on the 11th. This last event, while resulting in more intervening clear sky, will be the most interesting number on our monthly programme. The two planets are easily the most conspicuous of the brotherhood, and their gradual approach has been a matter of interest to lovers of the sky and its brilliant treasures for some weeks.

If Mars were as brilliant and fiery as he sometimes appears the picture presented by the three planets in such proximity would be wonderfully appealing. When the month closes Jupiter sets 26 minutes after the sun, Mars 53 minutes, and Venus 1 hour and 54 minutes. The three planets will be having a fine game of cross tag for a number of days, for on the 18th Jupiter and Mars are in conjunction, while Venus is at the apex of the somewhat irregular triangle. During most of this period of interesting events the moon will probably not be too bright to spoil the planets' chances. Besides which, she will be in conjunction with them when new. The aid of a glass will add materially to our enjoyment, as when the month closes the sun's rays will have dimmed the light of Jupiter and Mars to an appreciable extent.

Uranus and the moon are in somewhat distant relation when in conjunction on the 11th. The planet is moving toward opposition, where it will arrive the latter part of June, and we shall have a chance to pick it out from its surroundings, a somewhat rare pleasure, as this beautiful planet is by no means easy to find with unaided vision. At present Uranus is numbered among the morning stars.

Saturn is also a morning star, and the fading crescent of the moon occults his disk on the 16th. The early risers will, however, be the only ones to see this meeting. With this exception Saturn has nothing particularly attractive this month to recommend him to us. After his opposition with the sun in September he will for the rest of the year be a very conspicuous object in the evening sky.

On the 2d Mercury reaches his furthest western point on this portion of his swing, and will then turn about and move in toward the sun, being throughout the month a morning star. Just now we can see him not far from the sunrise point, as he gets up 1 hour and 40 minutes ahead of the sun.

Neptune is an evening star, and will continue in that class until his time of conjunction with the sun early in July.

How the First English Rugby Football Game Was Played in New Haven

ENGLISH Rugby football, or what passed for that ancient and honorable game, was introduced here recently by a team of English players which came up on invitation from New York, says a Yale man in the Alumni Weekly. The team was not a regularly organized one, but was made up at short notice from English and Scotch university men now employed in or near New York. Bell of the Edinburgh Academy, who captained the team, was one of the most famous of all Scotland's famous football players a few years ago, and he had with him men whose names were well known in the English football world in their day. Some of them had their degree only recently, but one of the forwards, who, by the way, played a lively game, said he had not "scrimmed" for 18 years. The costumes of the English players were unlike anything ever seen on Yale Field. Nearly every individual had a different uniform, and several wore tasseled caps. Stockings were of all colors of the rainbow, and a large expanse of bare leg showed between the top of the stocking and the abbreviated trouser leg. Yale was uniformed in blue jerseys with white running trousers and golf stockings, and easily beat the Englishmen on aggregate area of bare leg. Both teams wore light, cleated shoes.

Yale didn't know anything about the game, but wanted to learn, and did learn with surprising rapidity. In an hour of play, divided into two halves of thirty minutes each, neither side scored nor even came very near it. Yale had the best of the game nearly all of the time, and made a number of long runs, but could not get the ball across the goal line. Time after time the New Haven men worked the ball down very near the line, but through some unintentional violation of the rules they were set back, and the game ended with the ball in midfield.

For the benefit of those not acquainted with the English game of Rugby, which is the father of the American college game, it may be said that the object of the teams, as in the American game, is to carry the ball across the opponent's goal line or to drop-kick it between the posts. Fourteen men play on a side, divided into forwards, half backs, three-quarter backs, and full backs. The "scrum" corresponds to our scrimmage, but in the English game the forwards, or linemen, put their shoulders together and push against each other while the ball, which is the same as is used in the American college game, is thrown in between the two lines to be "heeled out." "Heeling out" is a kind of back kick or a pawing of the ball with the foot, and when it comes out of the "scrum" it is seized by one of the half backs, who play in about the position of the American quarter back. The half may run with the ball himself or may pass it to one of the three-quarter backs, who stands thirty feet or more away and to the side, right or left, ready for a dash down the field. This back may kick or run, according to circumstances. There are no signals, and the play is in no way prearranged. It all depends on chance.

No interference is allowed, and a runner must make his own way. Every one on the attacking side must be behind the man with the ball. This latter was particularly hard on the Yale backs, who illustrated in a striking manner force of habit by continually falling in behind the interference which always formed for them. Of course this was a violation of the rules, and cost Yale a good many yards. In the English game there is a good deal of kicking. Since possession of the ball counts for little, this is not like our own kicking, behind protection, but in the open, when there is no chance of carrying the ball further. It is any one's ball when it touches the ground on a kick or a pass, so the ball is constantly changing hands. Bell, the Captain, was wonderfully skillful at kicking the ball on a dead run with tacklers right upon him, but his kicks were all short and low. Yale players, following their training, would tuck the ball under their arms, bore through the "pack," and forget to kick when hemmed in. Passing, which is so important a part of the English Rugby game, came hard to the Yale players. The memory of the injunction, "Hang on to that ball," put upon them by coaches for years, could not be shaken off in one afternoon, and it was not until the second half that they began to let go of the ball, and then it was more often reckless throwing. In several cases, however, beautiful passes of thirty feet or more were made on the run, incidents of the game which may have their hint of meaning for Capt. Morse in the look toward next Fall.

Bell, Edinburgh Academy, Picking Up the Ball for a Run After It Has Been Heeled-Out of the "Scum." Five Yale Men Waiting for Him.

The American school of training, while it helped to stop Yale's advance, spoiled many gains of the New York team, whose plans of passing and running were completely upset by the deadly American tackling. Yale men followed the ball like bloodhounds, and it was a very rare thing that an English runner was left uncovered for a moment. They broke through constantly and put the runner back for a loss, and when he passed the ball at least one Yale man was with it. In England an aggressive defense of this kind is not known, and the Englishmen had no protection for it. Another thing that bothered the visitors was the American style of falling on the ball. Every time a ball got loose a Yale man fell upon it, but it was a waste of energy, for, as has been indicated, possession is of no particular importance in this game.

The play was fast and lively, and shifted with kaleidoscopic rapidity from side to side and from end to end of the field. Once Yale carried the ball sixty yards in three rushes, lost it all the next minute, and made most of it up the next. Morse, Veeder, Linn, Wylie, and Roome played brilliantly when they grasped the idea of the game. They played with might and main and spilled the English players around so violently that coming along toward the end the Englishmen declined to take chances on a tackle and kicked when there was danger of one.

The Englishmen took it comparatively easy and tackled well, but rarely stopped their man short. The game was one of the best possible illustrations of the difference in temperament between the English and American races. Good feeling was apparent all the time between the teams, the players applauding each other for good plays.

More than 2,000 people saw the game, which was free to all, and spent the hour laughing and applauding and cheering. No game since the memorable game of pushball three years ago, when the opposing lines, rushing to the attack, missed the ball and met in a head-on collision, has caused so much genuine merriment. From the spectators' point of view it was a kind of circus. The general opinion seems to be that the American game is in no danger of being supplanted here by the English game of football. The players themselves say there is too much chance about it and no science. All agree, however, it is a great game for exercise.

Nature and Art On the Stage

The Matter of Personal Fitness and the Part It Plays in Acting---What One Afternoon Revealed at the Manhattan Theatre.

THE art of acting as it is generally understood and accepted is one thing; the art of acting as it is occasionally illustrated is quite another. From week to week and year to year one sees playing on our stage which, for all intents and purposes, is satisfying and competent, sometimes a little more than that. Rarely, however, does the exhibition justify those unqualified expressions of appreciation that should be reserved for works of art.

In the acting of the greatest number of our stage plays nature, not art, is entitled to most of the credit. Few actors are able to attain much prominence without some cultivated ability in the mechanics of their profession, but this fact does not affect the other proposition, that it is the man or the woman, rather than the artist, who is most often called upon to fill the part.

In a measure this has always been true. The theatre has its limitations; illusion may be carried just so far and no further, and it is rarely the case even where there is exceptional genius, that the actor can entirely overcome the restrictions imposed upon him at the outset by the operation of natural laws over which he has no control. The dwarf, no matter how great his capacity for simulation, cannot pass himself off as a giant. When he roars and asks men to be afraid, they laugh.

So the actor, who must always, in some manner, measure up to the standard of his part. He must create a sense of fulfillment in the eyes of the spectator. And this is no more a truth to-day than it has always been.

But it does not follow that because nature plays some part in the result that nature is the whole show. If such were the case, there would be no need of training, no value in experience, and amateur performances would not so often be trials to everybody except the performers and their nearest friends; the professional stage would be the easiest of all places to make a living and a reputation.

Fortunately it is not so. Even in a theatre, where personality plays its largest part, nature sets its own limitations. Youth is frequently able to dissemble quite successfully and pass itself off for age, but to accomplish the deceit art comes in to lend a hand. Curiously enough, the reverse arrangement is far more difficult. Our greatest actors can, to some extent, defy the ravages of time, but most artists know that as age creeps on apace an attempt to enact the part of youth is invitation to disaster. A woman like Bernhardt, it is true, may triumph as a youthful heroine even at threescore and a little over. But that is the one case where the art is so unusual, so great, that it holds the whiphand over nature. It is the one case out of thousands, the exception to prove a rule. For view it as one will, the matter of natural fitness for the rôles to be played must always be taken into account.

The only pity is that it is and has been taken too much into account. For, when all is said and done, one goes to the theatre to see actors, not personalities—or one ought so to go. In these days of hand-made stars, one needs now and then a reminder of the fact.

Such a reminder came again the other afternoon at the Manhattan, when the excellent Fiske organization, tarrying for a brief spell, provided a taste of its own quality, and incidentally a taste of what real acting may be like. If the special matinée of three short plays brought any one lesson, it was revealed in the exhibition in which, for once, the matter of personality was reduced to a minimum, and art, the genuine art of the theatre, which demands something of impersonation, was reflected in the maximum degree.

Mr. Arliss, for example, is an actor who has generally been identified in the public mind with the rôle of villain. His is always a subtle, a finished villain. Indeed, it is not too much to say that he quite succeeds in making villainy attractive. But such are the peculiar conditions of the calling that for the last five years or more there has been hardly an indication that his artistic resource comprised anything of the compelling power to create a sympathetic understanding. A face, a voice, a manner lending itself admirably to suggestions of craft and guile, he has built up a substantial and enduring reputation as an actor of such rôles as arouse resentment in the mind of any normally constituted spectator. To his success in such parts he lends the force of natural endowments, supplemented with much intelligence, much experience, much art. He would probably make a most engaging Iago—for Iago is engaging, or ought to be, when he is properly played. Mr. Arliss, on the other hand, could not play Othello, for there the limitations of nature stand in the way. His is not the masque, the physique, the voice for such a rôle. All the externals are wrong. But it does not follow that all he can do is comprised in the narrow sphere of stage duplicity and guile.

A year ago we saw him for the time in this exquisite study of the old grandfather in Mrs. Fiske's little play, "The Eyes of the Heart," and it was at once apparent that range and variety were his. The opportunity for seeing him in the rôle again has been one of the most agreeable experiences of the long season now rapidly nearing its end. The year has brought us many things, some more pretentious, some perhaps as completely satisfying, but none more gratifying in respect to this; —that it enables us to know that our theatre is not wholly without men capable of excellent accomplishment in lines of varied effort, in lines where art does not merely tag along at the heels of nature, but is a power in itself. In such a case one may imagine the actor communing with his own personality, telling it "go hang," that he is the master of his own resources, setting out to prove it, completely masking his own natural physical equipment. In other words, he recreates himself, fashions himself after an idea outside of his own narrow personal limitations, and becomes the creative artist. That is acting in the higher, better sense.

In John Mason's contributions to the same programme one had possibly an even better illustration of the point, since in his case that which was mostly personal was at once contrasted with that wherein art entered and practically expunged a natural individuality.

To the rôle of the American painter in Mr. Long's "Dolce" Mr. Mason brought all the deftness of long experience and knowledge, but the part was one that might easily be played by any agreeable actor along the line of his own agreeable personality. Not without demands upon an actor's resources in competent and expressive mechanics, all its requirements are such as could be readily compassed by an actor of Mr. Mason's experience with the least departure from the realm of his own personal limitations. In the rôle of the drink-crazed Creole, however, in "A Light from St. Agnes," there lies a demand beyond and apart from the actor's natural qualifications. A colorful, picturesque little play, its characters are those of colorful melodrama, again not the most difficult medium for success, but in the case of an individuality as strongly marked as that of Mr. Mason requiring a very considerable amount of deftness in the art which is to conceal art.

When one comes to consider Miss Ellisou's playing in the same little piece one decides in the face of any evidence to the contrary that hers is largely a triumph of a personality lending itself naturally to a rôle to which it is especially adapted. But versatility and power to overcome the natural limitations have always been more rare in women than in men. We have few real character actresses.

In Mrs. Fiske's playing of Dolce, for instance, the ability at successful masquerade is suggested, never quite attained. The actress's personality is too strongly marked, has been too assiduously a matter of cultivation to be entirely overcome. And yet so sure and firm and authoritative is she in the symbols of dissimulation that there is a sense of a new character, a new woman, in the newer rôle. Her Dolce is, in fact, the most satisfying bit of real acting which has been seen from her since the early days of "Tess," when, too, she was showing her attractive comedy method in a Cyprienne that no actress has excelled. In both these earlier exhibitions there was far less of the purely personal than has marked her efforts since, far less of emphasized and overworked mannerism.

In "Dolce," happily, she returns to her former method of apparently unconscious naturalism, a naturalism that is merely a manifestation, not of nature, but of art—the art of acting at its best.

"THE NEWCOMES" IN PLAY FORM.

Mr. Tree may produce, at His Majesty's Michael Morton's adaptation of Thackeray's "The Newcomes," toward the end of his present season. The play principally deals with the rise and fall of the old Colonel—his unselfish love, his fight for his boy, his interest and solicitude for the lad whose love story so closely resembles his own, his love for Lenore, the daughter of the French nobleman, from whom he takes French lessons. There are twenty characters in the cast, and the play is in four acts. The first is laid at Col. Newcome's, the second at Lady Fareham's, the third at the Colonel's again, the fourth at the Greyfriars—the school and the hospital.

"THE DISTRICT LEADER,"

"A SQUARE DEAL,"

TO-MORROW evening, at Daly's Theatre, Frederick Paulding's new comedy, "Cousin Louisa," will have its New York presentation. The piece was produced last Monday at the Park Theatre, Boston.

"Cousin Louisa" is staged in three acts and played in three scenes, which represent the Moorish Room at "Windy Gables," the country place of a Mr. Darriott on the Jersey coast, and the morning room in this mansion. The time of the first act is 8 o'clock of an August evening, the second act 10 P. M. the same night, and the third act 4 o'clock the next morning.

The rôle of Cousin Louisa is played by Mary Van Buren, a young actress, who is said to fit the part excellently, both in personality and stage methods. This will be her first appearance in New York. The opposite character, Paul Shotland, is acted by Charles Cherry, late leading man for Maxine Elliott, with whose accomplishments New York theatregoers are quite familiar. The other principals of the cast are Samuel Reed as Mathew Hexton, a lawyer; Charles Swickard as David Darriott, Paula Gloy as Florence Darriott, George Robert as Tynan Pestwaite, Kate Denim Wilson as Mrs. Harriet Avery Kirkwood, and Dorothy Ravell as Bertha Eloise Kirkwood, known as "Pussie, her sweet child," (five heirs to the Farbell millions,) and Thomas Ince, Jr., as Thomas Prentiss Challoner, Cornell, 1904.

"The District Leader," a new musical comedy by Joseph E. Howard, composer of "The New Bully," "Hello, My Baby," and "Same Old Moon," will have its New York presentation at Wallack's Theatre to-morrow evening.

The story of the piece deals with the campaign for State Senatorship conducted by a popular district leader in the east side section. This part is played by Harry Stone. Others in the cast are Dave Lewis, Joseph E. Howard, Mark Sullivan, Diamond Dollar, and Florence Sinnott. Among the musical numbers are "Heart to Let," "The Big Banshee," and "Old Broadway."

⁂

The closing performance of the season at Heinrich Conried's Irving Place Theatre will take place to-morrow evening. A testimonial has been arranged for the benefit of the stage manager, Gustav von Seyffertitz, who will appear in the leading rôle of Fischer and Jarnow's comedy, "Der Rabenvater."

PLAYS ONE PART 5,000 TIMES.

How many actors are there in a position to boast that they have played the same part 5,000 times? Not many, assuredly. Charles Warner, nevertheless, is among the number of those who have accomplished this amazing tour de force. It is just twenty-seven years since "Drink" was originally produced at the Princess Theatre, and Mr. Warner made his striking success in the part of Coupeau. Since then he has toured the world with the play, and always with the same gratifying results. Nor, apparently, is the popularity of the piece exhausted, inasmuch as it, or, rather, an abridged form of it, has just been presented at the London Coliseum. The new version will be limited to two scenes.

The Funny Side of Being a Producer of Plays

WHO says there's no fun in the day's work? Wilton Lackaye, in his roomy, old-fashioned dressing room at the Academy of Music one afternoon last week, welcomed his guest, dropped into a chair and wiped away a merry tear. He had just come off the stage from a long, hard morning's rehearsal of his new play—a dramatization of "Les Misérables." In half an hour he must be on again for a matinée of "The Pit," and beyond that lay the evening performance; but all this counted as naught for this big, genial actor, who is plentifully blessed with the best of all assets—exuberant vitality. He went off into a gale of laughter again, as he held up a little brown paper-covered brochure he had in his hand.

"Many a play has come my way," he declared, "but—just listen to this. The author has sent it to me to produce, and as here it is, copyrighted, published, and on sale; there is no fear of being indelicate over it. He calls it 'Robert and Cornelia,' a pathetic society tragedy," went on the actor, glancing at the cover, "and he takes the first plunge into a vortex of fashion. Behold his first scene:

"'An up-to-date drawing room, with an evening party going on. Enter Olive attired in evening dress. Enter Harry, also in evening dress.'

"Then comes dialogue—and even that's in evening dress.

"Says Harry, referring apparently to their hostess:

"'How awkwardly sedate; how suggestive of enforced hospitality.'

"'Probably she is not well,' suggests Olive. 'The excitement and confusion attendant upon such occasions has impaired her demeanor.'

"Now you'll admit," said Mr. Lackaye, as he turned over the pages, "that for a starter that's rather 'elegant.' But wait. This author has a regular Paris emporium of domestic and imported speech, full of stunning outfits for any and all occasions. Every phrase could be stretched on a frame in the shop window and marked 'nobby.' Look here:

"'Chaste as a Phoenix,' somebody is calling his heroine; 'immaculate as an angel's thought. She seemed like a statue, carved by a master hand from some huge fairy lily.'

"Or this, while we are still at the party:

"'Charmingly punctilious,' throws off Miss Olive, 'and scrupulous almost to a fault, such priceless traits, together with an envied decorum, are unquestionably responsible for her strange conduct this evening.'

"Here are some lovely afternoon costumes for simpler thoughts:

"'Why this ridiculous quibbling and tautology?' the heroine inquires haughtily of the hero.

"'Because,' he returns severely, 'my close observation has enabled me to discern what otherwise I might not have noticed.'

"Some of this you simply can't help acting," said Mr. Lackaye, as he rose to his feet to get more unction to his readings. "It appears that in the course of the plot Cornelia in a moment of sweet madness cuts her friend Della's throat. Cornelia's 'gentleman friend' subsequently dies, and Della's affianced has the excessive indelicacy to make overtures to his dead lady's murderess.

"'Let us fly!' says he.

"Whereupon Della: 'Can a tour of the world cleanse my heart and hand of this vile pollution? I should see the dainty and petite spirit of Della prancing in the sunny skies of the South and the sweet face of Robert in the icebergs of the North. What delight could there be for me in the aurora of the arctic regions, or the golden sunsets of the tropics? Take my life,' she begs.

"Then, say the stage directions, 'she struggles with him, trying to make him strangle her.'

"A difficult bit of business that," said Mr. Lackaye, throttling the book with both hands and rolling his eyes wildly. "But it appears Mr. Randall tears himself loose and rises to the occasion.

"'Your bitter tirade breaks upon the drum of my auricle like the euphonious pattering of Summer rain. You are dealing with a gentleman,'—Mr. Lackaye became superb—'I do not want your life.'

"And now read the directions: 'He continues to look upon her fixedly, and the curtain falls upon a sad scene.'"

Mr. Lackaye tossed the book on his dressing table and began to get ready for his matinée. But he couldn't keep away from the thing, and every moment or two he made little dashes into the pages, rubbing in grease paint with one hand and acting "thirteen to the dozen" with the other.

"Just gather these nosegays of speech. When he once takes up with a metaphor he sticks to it through thick and thin. How's this from hero to heroine:

"'Cornelia, why do you act like this? Has my excessive devotion proved an emetic to your soul, and hence the ejection of your love for me? Where is that ladyhood for which I so highly prized you?'

"All the reply he gets to that is:

"'Robert, I think you are too premature.'

"Whereupon the hero weeps:

"'To-morrow I sail for Europe. (Eurip, Mr. Lackaye made it.) I refused to accompany my friends, but now I must do so. I can no longer bear to look upon the girl who has so cruelly Hobsonized my sweetest hopes in the channel of despair.'"

Mr. Lackaye's feelings here completely overcame him. "Let's get to the end," he gasped when he could speak, as he fluttered over the pages.

"H'm, Cornelia seems to be marrying Randall, after all. Here's a drawing room ceremony and a minister. Let's see:

"'Cornelia draws Harry aside. "Harry," says she, "one last favor. I ask you to go to the nearest drug store and get me—" (she whispers in his ear and presses her handkerchief into his hand.)

"'Harry goes out, returns with the handkerchief—empty. Then, just as the minister is about to perform the ceremony, Cornelia catches sight of a knife sticking in one of the bridal flower pots. The florist's man has been careless. She seizes the knife, plunges it into her heart, yells "Omega," and falls to the carpet.'

"'And now,' say the directions, 'all is confusion and despair. The minister bows his head in prayer, and says in a low, sad voice:

"'"She is dead. An undefiled bride of the unavoidable."'

"'The curtain falls on a sad picture.'

"Oh, these playwrights, these playwrights," laughed Mr. Lackaye. "The queer things they say and the queer things they do! And the wails they send up because they claim they can't get all their plays read. It is all amazing enough when you consider how few people even among those who write clever books can produce anything like a clever play. There seems to be an absurd idea that a dramatic instinct is like a gift for whistling tunes—all you have to do is to hear an air and set about reproducing it. It always reminds me of the confident youth who was asked if he could play the violin. His reply was: "Oh, I don't know, I guess so; I've never tried."

"One of the drollest of them all is the budding dramatist with his innocent wish to copyright history. Every now and then I meet a man on the street who stops me with an important air of secrecy and a mysterious 'May I speak with you a moment?'

"He gets me into a doorway, looks at me impressively a second, then makes a funnel of his hands and breathes into my ear, 'A play!' I express polite curiosity. Then he glances nervously around, looks me stealthily in the eye and just forms with his lips, 'Cromwell.'

"'Ah,' say I, 'have you it done?'

"'N-n-n-o,' he admits; 'but—'

"'Scenario?'

"'Not exactly, but—but, what do you think of the idea? Immense, isn't it? I suppose the first thing I ought to think of is a copyright.'

"And, by Thespis, if you happen six years later to produce a play about Cromwell, be sure that man will spring up to curse you for a flagrant plagiarist.

"I don't believe there are many good plays lying around unused. If there are, it oughtn't to discourage the unsuccessful playwright in the least. Let him save his Jeremiads when one play doesn't get anywhere, and keep on writing them by the half dozen. Get a stock on hand. The moment you produce one success you can unload whole trunkfuls with aplomb. After a dramatist's first hit people love to talk about the progress he is showing in his succeeding plays. Nine times out of ten these 'succeeding plays' were sorrowfully tucked away one by one in an indexed cabinet before the successful piece was even thought of.

"Also, I believe, American playwrights are getting all the encouragement they need or deserve. See how little material we have had from England this season. And if we had four times as much—what then? Some people seem to think it a terrible thing for Charles Frohman to go over to London and buy plays from Pinero. There is a perfectly good answer for these patriotic folk: When they want their watches fixed, do they go to established jewelers or give them to traveling watch menders learning their trade from house to house?

"Successful books will go on being turned into successful plays—provided always they have real dramatic stuff in them. Dramatization of the novel or history is a perfectly legitimate task for the playwright. He is both artist and artisan. If he hasn't the story of his own in mind, what better can he do than to try his artisanship upon a story already made to his hand?

"But he must remember that the standards of taste for novels and for plays are different. A situation that can be treated admirably in a story frequently slips down twenty points toward vulgarity when you put it on the stage. Take 'The Octopus,' for example. The final picture of the book, in which the wicked wheat magnate standing on top of one of his grain elevators, misses his footing and is buried under tons of his own wheat, is immensely effective in the book.

"But put it on the stage, and in spite of all you can do for it, the same situation becomes as cheaply melodramatic as the time-honored rolling mill in which the villain trips over a bolt and falls into the machinery.

"Another thing that distinguishes the play from the novel:

"Few psychological propositions can be discussed on the stage. An author once came to me with a play in which the hero did all manner of singular things, which the author explained went along with personal magnetism.

"'Ah,' said I, 'personal magnetism. What is it? How do you express it dramatically?'

"'Well,' said the author, 'everybody knows it is one of those indescribable qualities you can't analyze.'

"'Exactly,' said I, 'and if you can't analyze it you can't synthesize it, and if you can't synthesize it, you can't act it. I don't see how I am to project over the footlights a character who is doing all sorts of things charged up to an emotion that can't be analyzed.'

"The simple fact is that there is nothing in the world in acting except muscle. Psychology stops in the dressing room and at rehearsal. Think out your part to your heart's content in private, but the moment you get on the stage, remember you have only your face, fingers, and other muscular attachments to convey your inner emotions to your audience. Therefore I repeat, feeling alone is not enough. Any countryman may be able to feel the part. Dr. Furniss doubtless knew more of the inner meanings of Shakespeare than all the rest of us put together; but could he, with nothing but his body, his voice, and the lines have gotten his conceptions into the minds of a theatre full of people?

"Not that I believe in finished technique alone. Feeling—hysteria, is a valuable asset to any actor; but the time to give it full rein is at rehearsal. You learn how to drive your horse in the morning try-outs. In the evening your hysteria is well enough to have on hand, but you must keep it firmly under control. Its function is to give body and conviction to your work. All kinds of actors—lawyers, preachers, and players—must convince their hearers first of all that they are themselves convinced.

"You can't lose yourself completely in an illusion, yet you can feel the illusion of supreme artistic importance; for instance, when in some big scene you have to jump into a river, you know all the time perfectly well that what you are really going to jump into is neither more nor less than a feather bed; but—and here's the point—you ought to be in such a state of artistic exaltation that if a river were suddenly brought alongside, you would jump in with all cheerfulness rather than spoil the play.

"For I believe the broader hysteria-touched phases of emotion—the kind of thing that makes people sit up whether it be in Avenue A, the Lambs, or the Century Club—are the most lastingly significant for the stage. Mere technique, however delightful to the intellect, cannot be permanently and widely satisfying.

"'Plenty of room at the top' is a true enough saying," said Mr. Lackaye, "but it has a forgotten corollary, namely, that there's very little company up there."

Some Rialto Gleanings

Bits of Gossip from Here and There.

THE musical piece which is expected to hold the stage of the Lyric through the Summer opens in three weeks in Philadelphia. It is by Gustav Kerker and R. H. Burnside, and its title, formerly "The Bungalow," has just been changed to "The Tourists." Richard Golden will play the leading rôle.

⁂

There is likely to be rejoicing in the lobbies at the news that Raymond Hitchcock is on his way back to comic opera. Some time in May he is to appear in the title rôle of a new musical piece by Frederick Ranken, Stanislaus Stange, and Reginald De Koven, called "The Student King." The piece will have its first production in Boston.

⁂

Grace Elliston of "The Lion and the Mouse" company will not go to London to play in the English production of Charles Klein's play, which opens at the Shaftesbury Theatre May 21. Edmund Breese and Richard Bennett of the Lyceum company will go over shortly to join the English cast. Miss Elliston, however, is said to have plainly expressed her wish to stay in New York, and she is therefore likely to be the Shirley Rossmore of the Lyceum company for some months to come.

George Fawcett, who has been playing all season in "The Squaw Man," is to take Mr. Breese's place in the rôle of John Burkett Ryder.

Julia Marlowe and E. H. Sothern have purchased from Dirce St. Cyr, d'Annunzio's pastoral play, "The Daughter of Iorio," which was produced in Paris at the Théâtre Antoine. The play will be produced next year in America and London. This piece, which deals mainly with the superstition of the Italian peasants, was written for Mme. Duse, but its first performance was in France. It was later given in Italy by the Italian actress, Emma Gramatica. Henry St. Ives, an American, has made the blank verse translation which Miss Marlowe and Mr. Sothern will use. The piece is soon to be published in book form.

Miss St. Cyr is now on her way to Italy to make arrangements with d'Annunzio for the two new plays, "Piu che Amore" and "I Difendenti," on which he is now at work.

Fuller Mellish has resigned from Richard Mansfield's company to accept an engagement in the Odette Tyler stock company, which is to open May 1 at the Belasco Theatre, in Washington, for the Summer. Next season Mr. Mellish is to be seen in support of Viola Allen.

⁂

Ruth Allen, who plays the part of Alice Newton, the strenuous college girl in "The Strength of the Weak," is a San Francisco girl who had never been out of California until she came East with Miss Roberts. Up to that time she had been playing small parts in the Alcazar stock company in the coast city. "The trip to New York gave me my first experience with sleeping cars and long-distance doings," said Miss Allen the other night. "After we reached New York I spent the first two days just wandering up and down wondering how there could be such an enormous city and such crowds of people so far from home. Which shows that my horizon needed widening very much indeed."

⁂

Henry Woodruff personally owns most of the "properties" used in the first and last acts of "Brown of Harvard" at the Princess Theatre. These include the Harvard flags and other college emblems, the sofa cushions, the books, the photographs and posters, the china and bric-à-brac, golf sticks, boxing gloves, fencing foils, and other articles which help give the stage scene representing a Cambridge student's quarters its realistic semblance and atmosphere.

While many of these were among the decorations in Mr. Woodruff's room at Ware Hall while he was at Harvard, others have been acquired recently. The Harvard Club of this city recently presented Mr. Woodruff with the Harvard emblem (shaped like a shield,) and early in the run the Harvard class of 1906 gave him a Harvard pennant which is prominently displayed in the boathouse scene in the third act.

Other pennants that add a touch of color and atmosphere to the first scene are one each, of Columbia University, Bellevue Medical College, and of Hamilton Institute, presented to Mr. Woodruff by parties of students from these colleges who have seen "Brown of Harvard."

In the last ten years, George Ade has been an industrious traveler. He will return shortly from Europe—his seventh trip to that part of the world—his other excursions comprising visits to all of this country's colonial possessions and two tours of Japan. While such of his plays as "The College Widow" and "The County Chairman" have been the result of expert observation in his native Indiana, "The Sultan of Sulu" was born of his visit to the Philippines, when the islanders were resenting benevolent assimilation. "The Sho Gun" owed its being to his second trip to the Orient. What the dramatist's rambles in Egypt may suggest remains to be seen. Before he had the luxury of signing his name even to newspaper articles he wrote a series of letters from Europe called "What a Man Sees When He Goes Away from Home."

Another newspaper commission sent him to Europe to establish a correspondence system in all the Old World capitals, his duties taking him to places little visited by travelers of limited time. In Belgrade he found every journalist in jail for lèse majesté, so he put the press censor on his employer's pay roll. The most tangible result of Ade's travels may be found in his Summer home at Brook, Ind., which contains a rare collection of Japanese armor, tapestry, and bric-à-brac. Having nearly "seen it all," he turns to Japan with increasing fondness.

THE LAUGH WENT ROUND.

Wilton Lackaye's stage version of Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," is now being rehearsed and will be first performed in Hartford, Conn., some time in May.

When Mr. Lackaye had just finished the piece a friend asked him over the dinner table one night if he had found a manager to produce it.

"Produce it?" was the actor's rejoinder. "Why, my dear fellow, I haven't found one who can pronounce it."

⁂

ONE VIEW OF ACTORS.

William H. Crane spends his Summers at Cohasset, Mass, where he has a cottage. On one occasion Mr. Crane came up against a particularly iron-headed Selectman over a question of the boundary of a piece of road that ran by the actor's new estate. Carefully and clearly Mr. Crane expounded his side of the matter, with much muster of records and surveys. As he went on the old man grew more and more restless.

"Gosh!" he said at last, "of course, I knew you stage fellers could git up talk and scenes, but I never s'posed you could git up facts."

Ellen Terry's Anniversary

Messages and Gifts for the Famous Actress.

ELLEN TERRY yesterday celebrated the completion of her fiftieth year of work on the stage. Though she was engaged in the evening in "Captain Brassbounds' Conversion" at the Court Theatre, she was able to satisfy her desire to appear in a Shakespearean part on the anniversary day, playing Francisca, the Nun, in "Measure for Measure," at the Adelphi Theatre in the afternoon. On Friday evening Miss Terry appeared in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" at His Majesty's.

Included in The Tatler's souvenir of the occasion were special messages from Sir Charles Wyndham, George Alexander, Cyril Maude, Lewis Waller, Oscar Asche, J. L. Toole, and others, as well as Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, M. Sardou, and M. Coquelin. Bernhardt's message was as follows:

"C'est une grande joie pour moi de voir ma belle et illustré amie, Ellen Terry, entrer vivante dans l'immortalité. J'espère que la même joie me sera reservée bientôt."

A. W. Pinero offers this tribute:

"Many of the famous actresses whose triumphs are recorded in history or preserved in tradition have excelled only in one part. Ellen Terry has acted at least three superlatively—Ophelia, Portia, Beatrice. In her performance of these characters her beautiful natural gifts aided supreme art, and the result was perfection. Indisputably, therefore, she is to be ranked with the greatest who have trod the boards at any time and in any country, and no honor that is paid her can exceed the due recognition of her achievements."

The Queen's gift in recognition of the jubilee takes the form of a handsome diamond ornament, with a scroll lining the locket as follows: "For Ellen Terry on her jubilee, with best wishes from Alexandra."

Looking further into the future than her admirers will care to contemplate, Miss Terry, in a page of reminiscence and reflection in The Tatler, says that she has one great desire with regard to her retirement from the stage, and that is that her final appearance may be made in a Shakespearean character. She has already played eleven "grown-up" Shakespearean parts, including Ophelia, Viola, Beatrice, Juliet, Desdemona, Queen Katharine, Imogen, Katherine, (in "Katherine and Petruchio,") Lady Anne, Lady Macbeth, and Portia, not to mention Prince Arthur, Puck, and Titania.

⁂

Obeyed Orders.

Mrs. Nagsby (calling impatiently)—Nora, drop everything at once and come to me.

Nora—Yes, Ma'am.

Mrs. Naggsby—Now, what's the baby crying for?

Nora—'Cause I dropped him, Ma'am.

PLAY WHICH H. B. IRVING WILL BRING TO AMERICA

WHEN H. B. Irving comes to America next season—he is to be seen here early in the Winter at the New Amsterdam Theatre—he will bring with him, probably as his pièce de résistance, his own version of André Picard's "Jeunesse," one of the successful plays of the year in Paris. Mr. Irving's version, produced in London under the title "Mauricette," appears from all accounts to present a tolerably familiar theme, handled with considerable skill and maintained for the most part in an atmosphere of agreeable comedy. "Very interesting, very ingenious, but also very French," is the way The Telegraph reviewer rounds off an estimate of the play. "In especial the first act is one of the brightest and neatest pieces of work which has been seen on the stage for some time," he says, adding that it is so good that it makes the other acts relatively dull in comparison. For the theme that youth must wed with youth, and that age in its dalliance with youth only makes itself ridiculous, leads up to a perfectly obvious and perfectly logical conclusion, and we know from the outset that Roger Dautran will have to face the melancholy lesson that is usually connected with a career that has reached the sere and yellow leaf. He is an amiable, quick-witted, very characteristic Frenchman, this Roger Dautran. He has been married for at least twenty years, and has always got on perfectly well with his wife, albeit that the union can hardly be described as one of hearts. The mistake which Roger Dautran makes is that he believes himself to be younger than his years warrant, and therefore accepts philandering as a career for the middle-aged.

At the opening of the play we see him a little bored with his home, constantly finding excuses for dining out, arranging for so-called meetings with his colleagues, when in reality he is only intending to visit a restaurant; perfectly civil to his wife, rather callous, with charming manners, and the instincts of a butterfly. Naturally enough, Mme. Dautran is not quite so satisfied with things as they are as her volatile husband. She misses some of that serenity which might have surrounded a domestic hearth if only there had been children in the home. She believes that all that is wanted to make Roger Dautran a more domesticated husband is the presence of youth, and that a daughter who by this time would have been nearly 18 years would have solved the whole of the family problem. Destiny offers her a companion, a girl of 18, a bright, unconventional little Bohémienne, Mauricette, who suggests herself as a sort of lady help or friend just at the very moment when such a presence seems to the wife the one thing necessary. And Roger Dautran, the moment he sees her, abandons all his intentions of dining out. Expecting to find a grim old maid, something a little crabbed and elderly, he is suddenly confronted by a radiant vision of young beauty, and surrenders on the spot.

He is not the only one who submits to Mauricette's spell. There is a young doctor, Paul Aubert, a serious student, who had been befriended by Roger Dautran in his youth, and had become an intimate ally of the family. He, too, recognizes in the stranger something which hitherto he had not seen, an ideal fit for man's worship. Others besides in their various ways recognize her unique charm, especially a raffish Frenchman, Chavry, whose proposals are so dishonorable that they lead at once to a crisis. Nor could under any circumstances the crisis be much longer delayed. We have seen long since that Roger Dautran's amiable benevolence has a suspiciously sentimental air, and that Paul Aubert is in deadly earnest in his desire to make Mauricette his wife. What is to be done? Poor Mme. Dautran's schemes have gone sadly astray from her original intention. She meant to make everything happy in her home; she has, on the contrary, given her husband fresh opportunity for philandering, and embroiled the relations between him and his young protégé, Paul Aubert. There is, of course, only one issue. The doctor must claim Mauricette as his wife, however keen or however plausible may be the objections to this project urged by the infatuated Roger Dautran. The solution of marriage is the only one that is applicable to the particular problem. At the end of the second act Mauricette herself recognizes that instead of bringing felicity and harmony she has brought discord, and the sooner she accepts the advances of the young doctor the better it will be for the peace of all concerned.

So we get to the third act, where the various threads of the intrigue are gathered together, and the dénouement reached. The third act is less interesting than the two that have preceded it, because the issue is no longer doubtful. We know, of course, that in some fashion or other Roger Dautran must be convinced that his infatuation for Mauricette is foolish and absurd, and the end of the play, as the French title sufficiently indicates, is clearly to point the moral that May must wed with May, and that December, or shall we say October?—must be left in the cold. The precise method, however, which the dramatist takes in order to drive his salutary lesson home is not, perhaps, the most happy that could be devised, according to this reviewer. He makes Roger Dautran fall ill, and after a judicious interval brings him to the home where Paul and Mauricette are commencing their married existence. He comes in an old and broken man. Mauricette sees his face, and in an instant recognizes that he belongs no more to her life. "Paul! I want Paul!" she cries, almost frightened by the haggard looks of her elderly admirer, and Paul comes in to find that the love of his wife is now assured to him, and that Roger Dautran has learned his lesson. It is not of the slightest use for the hero to pour forth a series of sophistical arguments to prove that age has nothing whatever to do with the question of love. On the contrary, it has everything to do with it. Youth must go to youth; such is nature's own law. Mauricette must find her happiness in the arms of Paul, while Roger Dautran must needs find such felicity as he can yet enjoy in the devoted affection of a wife who has borne with all his extravagances and eccentricities for twenty years.

"It does not need three acts to show that a young girl will choose a young and handsome lover rather than an aged and battered lover when they start level," writes Mr. Walkley in The Times. "We prefer to find the more interesting idea that woman is not the gay adventurer that man is, and that her passions are under the control of her other desires, especially of that for a home and an assured position. Waifs from Bohemia would naturally value the comfortable security of such things more than women to whom they were familiar. But the issue is, after all, a little obscured in the play. If our interpretation is right, it is a pity that the physical breakdown of Dautran in the last act should put an unfairly strong argument into the scales on the side of the home. Perhaps Mr. Irving made him older than the author intended; Dautran's appearance suggested senile decay, and we could not accept, any more than Mauricette could, his undertaking to grow younger again. His performance, as a whole, was admirable; he struck us as being a little too alert, not quite bored enough, at the beginning of the play; but thereafter all the many shades of a closely studied character—his growing interest in the girl, his determination not to confess to himself what he knows to be true, finally his open surrender to love and rage—were finely expressed. Miss Dorothea Baird as Mauricette repeated her success as Trilby. Too tall and stately for the innocent ragamuffin of Act I., she is sweet, tender, and patient to perfection in the later parts of the play. Mr. Leslie Faber—excepting a trick of slurring his words—makes a proper sturdy and solemn doctor, and Miss Marion Terry will draw tears from all eyes when she is a little more at home in the pathetic part of Andrée."

IN THE ORGAN LOFT.

J. CHRISTOPHER MARKS of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue, last Sunday took charge of the music at the St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Pittsburg, where he was organist previous to his engagement in New York. St. Andrew's has built a new church and sent for its old organist to play for the opening service on his old organ. Mr. Marks arranged for special musical features the cantata, "The Inheritance Divine," by Harry Rowe Shelley; "Hail, Gladdening Light," by George C. Martin, and the Magnificat in D was by Mr. Marks. Mrs. Marks was also a special guest, taking one of the contralto parts in the double quartet choir. Edwin Breyer, formerly organist of St. Mark's Church, Cleveland, Ohio, took the organ at the Church of the Heavenly Rest for the day.

* * *

The interesting Easter musical service given at St. George's Church last Sunday evening is to be rearranged and put into permanent form for publication. As given it was an arrangement of texts from various Scriptural sources of scenes from the Resurrection and Ascension of the Saviour and set to music by Mr. Homer Norris, the organist of St. George's. It opened with a prophetic prologue arranged as a recitative for Mr. Burleigh, with solo parts for the other voices following, the chorus assisting.

The text when ready for publication will be taken from the Gospel of St. John and the prophecy of Isaiah. To make the service more complete, there will be a narrative part to be read in connection with the music by the clergyman. Mr. Norris goes into camp in the Summer and this will be the musical work he has laid out for the holiday season. The church will close its musical services about the last of June. The service as it already is is dignified, beautiful, and effective.

* * *

The following programme will be given at the Church of the Incarnation, (Madison Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street,) at the special musical service at 4 o'clock to-day:

Instrumental prelude to "The Daughter of Jairus" .... Stainer

Instrumental postlude, "Andante Religioso" .... Thome

At the morning service a Te Deum in D, written by W. R. Hedden, will be given for the first time. Schubert's "Great Is Jehovah" will be sung, and the postlude will be "Epithalamium," composed by Mr. Woodward of the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn.

* * *

For the prelude at St. Bartholomew's this morning Mr. Stokovski will give a "gavotte" by Martini. There will be a soprano duet and chorus for the offertory anthem, Mendelssohn, "I Waited for the Lord." For the 4 o'clock service the organ prelude will be "Andante," Mendelssohn, and the postlude, "Prelude," Rachmaninow. The anthem will be "The Heavens Are Telling," Haydn, with chorus and trio. The offertory anthem will be "Angel Bands in Strains Sweet Sounding," Saint-Saëns, and the vesper hymn, "At Even Ere the Sun Was Set," Scheffler.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Music Teachers' National Association will take place at Oberlin, Ohio, from June 26 to 29. The first half hour in the afternoons and the whole of Wednesday and Thursday evenings, June 27 and 28, will be occupied by music. Two half days will be devoted to the study of music in colleges and schools. There will also be papers on the special work of the conservatory, on culture-courses, on historical reading for teachers, on the use of the memory in musical work, on European musical associations, &c., with speakers like Frank Damrosch, Edward Dickinson, Thomas W. Surrette, O. G. Sonneck, H. D. Sleper, R. L. Baldwin, and many others. Prof. Stanley of Ann Arbor will give an illustrated lecture on a famous opera of the seventeenth century. The officers of the association are now Waldo S. Pratt, Hartford, President; Charles H. Farnsworth, New York, Vice President; George W. Andrews, Oberlin, Secretary; Walter Spry, Chicago, Treasurer; Charles W. Morrison, Oberlin, Chairman Executive Committee; George C. Gow, Poughkeepsie, Chairman Programme Committee; Arthur L. Manchester, Spartanburg, S. C., Chairman Educational Board.

As a finale to his twenty-eighth semi-annual tour, John Philip Sousa will give a "Climax Concert" at the Hippodrome on Sunday evening, May 6. The programme is entitled "Programme of the Nations," and will present pieces from England, Germany, Italy, France, Russia, Hungary, Norway, Austria, Bohemia, and America.

* * *

What is called the first German Musical Festival will be given in Carnegie Hall to-night by the singers of the following German singing societies: Harmonie of New York; Franz Schubert, New York; Liederkranz, Elizabeth; Mozart, New York; Concordia, Brooklyn, and Einigkeit, Stapleton. Carl Hein will conduct, and the soloists will be Anita Rio, soprano; Emil Fischer, bass, and August Fraemcke, pianist. Among the pieces performed will be Heinrich Zoellner's overture, "Under the Star-Spangled Banner," for the first time. Mr. Fraemcke will play a fantasie for piano (title not given on the programme) by Liszt, and Mr. Fischer will sing a bass air from "The Seasons" and the bass solo in the War Song from Bruch's "Cross of Fire." Miss Rio will sing three songs.

* * *

Final negotiations for the Rosenthal tour have been completed by Henry Wolfsohn. The reappearance of the Roumanian pianist will be made at Carnegie Hall, New York, early in November, after which he will visit all the principal cities from coast to coast. He is eager for the tour. He is sincerely fond of America and Americans. The hospitality he finds here and the appreciation of artistic worth everywhere in evidence appeal to him. Americans were among the first to recognize his early talent, and he is anxious that they should have the benefit of his maturity.

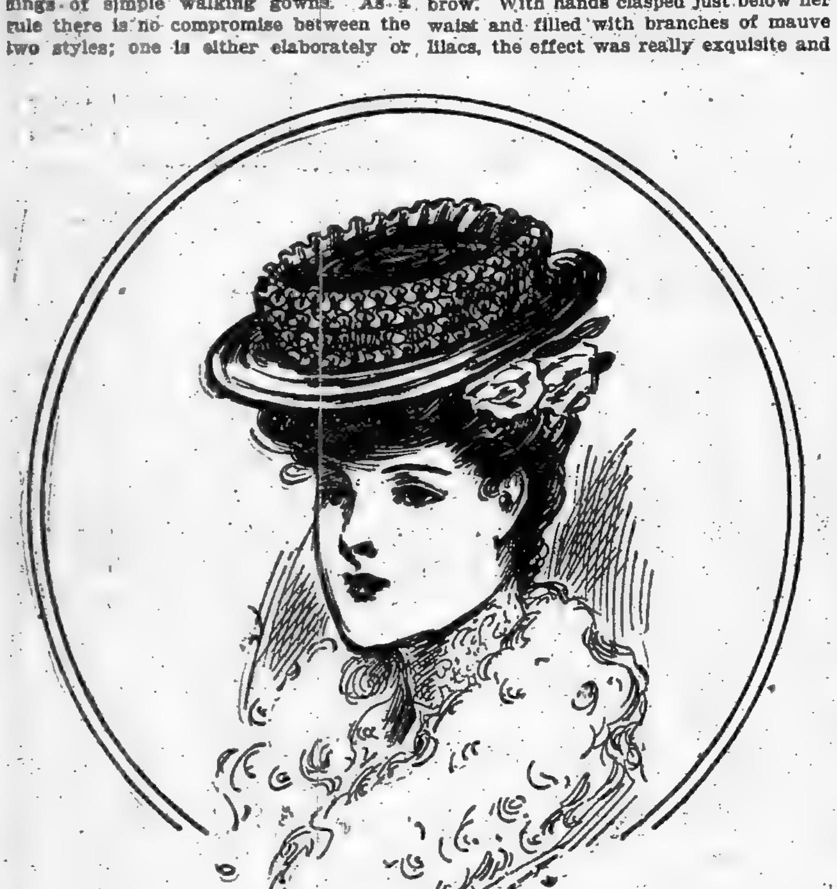
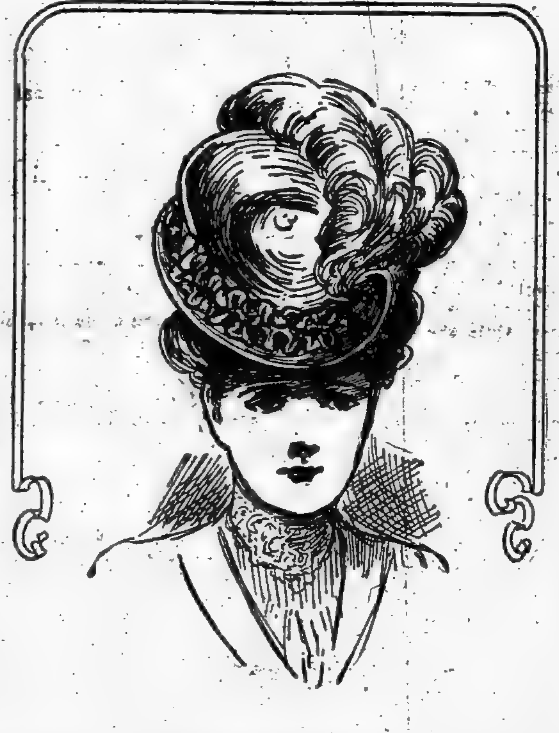
Bridal and Other Gowns

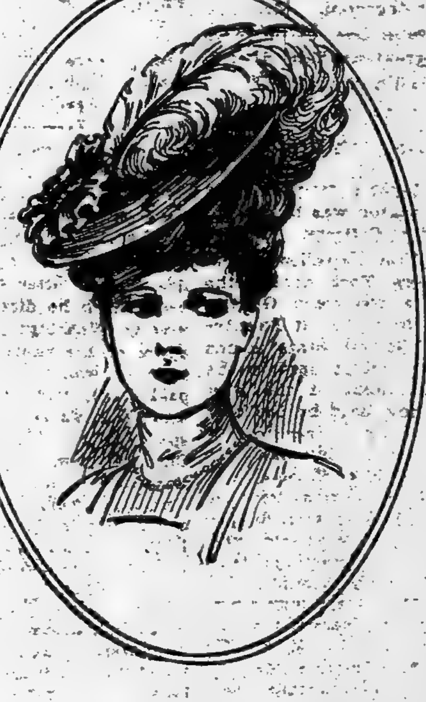
THE costumes worn by the Spring brides and their attendants still hold chief attention, sartorially speaking. Second only in interest are the new frocks worn by the guests, for with few exceptions women don the pretty gowns for weddings. There is always a good showing, however, at even the smartest weddings of simple walking gowns. As a rule there is no compromise between the two styles; one is either elaborately or very simply gowned. Many young girls prefer the abbreviated walking skirts and plain coats topped by simple hats for afternoon as well as midday weddings.

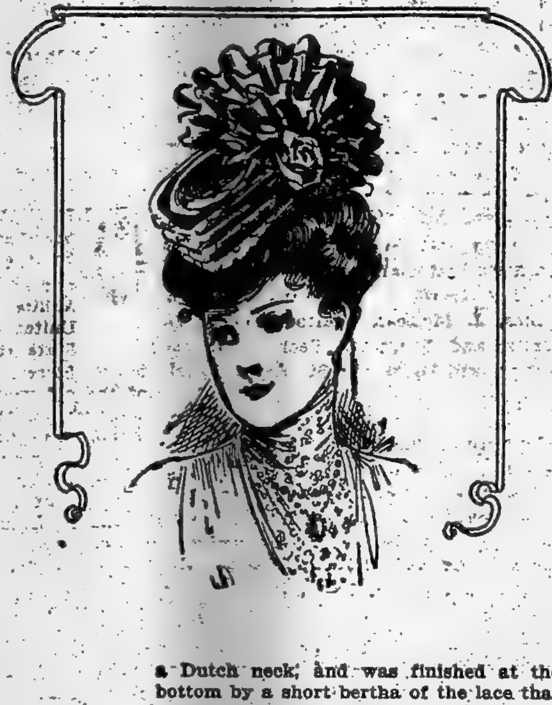


So far the materials noted in evidence at these affairs are in voiles, and fine cloths or soft velvets of pale shades for the elaborate costumes of matrons and elderly women.

In hats there is, as has previously been remarked, a welcome change from the outré of a year ago to more modest and less trying shapes, although there is still much to be desired. One thing to be seriously deplored, however, is the maltreating of the peacock feather. Left in its natural state, there is no more beautiful feather than this brilliant "eyed" feather, with its wonderful blending and shading of hues. A few wise women wear them in their natural state, but the greater majority of those with peacock-trimmed hats—and many have been noted at fashionable weddings and on the avenue—are wearing faded out or dyed peacock feathers that are a travesty on their original state. There is some slight excuse for this when the feathers are colored or altered to match the hat, but none otherwise. Those dyed black are not so objectionable as those in the faded tan and green colorings, while the faded blues and lavenders are especially atrocious. So popular have these feathers become among women of fashion that they will soon lose their prestige, for already the general public are adopting them. The woman who can have fifty to a hundred or more hats a year does not need to exercise the same care in the selection of her chapeaus as does the woman who can have a dozen only, or perhaps even only half that number.







While there is a certain commonplaceness about ostrich feathers, unless they are of unusual width and beauty, no better investment for both beauty and wear can be made than in these plumes. The bird of paradise aigrettes are for the woman who can afford them; they cost more than ostrich plumes and do not last at all.

Quantities of flowers are seen on hats, and often odd combinations, not only of flowers but of colors, are noted. At a recent wedding a small toque had three kinds of flowers in as many pronounced colors massed at the left side and back. Rising above the hat were fine white flowers; next to these came shaded pink rose buds, while small sprays of delicate mauve lilacs were crushed against the hair. It really looked very pretty, as the flowers were fine and of good quality.

Thank Heaven for something novel in wedding attendants' costumes. One of unusual chic and beauty was worn by the maid of honor at the wedding of Miss Esther Walden-Tomlinson and Clarence P. Wyckoff at St. Thomas's Church. Miss Antoinette Erhardt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joel B. Erhardt, was the fortunate wearer. Seldom at any wedding of this or recent years has a costume even approaching it in chic been seen.

This gown was an exact copy of a model originated by one of the famous French modistes. It was yellow silk with touches of brown, white, and mauve, the last color appearing in the armful of lilacs she carried.

In detail, the costume had a plain, full skirt that just swept the floor and was simply gathered at the top. It was of golden yellow radium silk. If the silk had not been a rich golden hue it would under the artificial light of the church have faded into a cream, as have, most unfortunately, several other wedding attendants' gowns in yellow.

This yellow skirt was absolutely plain and was topped by a fitted bodice of white lace having a creamy tinge, the lace being shirred and plaited over white silk. Two narrow shirred puffs of the yellow silk, not quite two inches broad, outlined a yoke and also went around the bodice below the bust line. The scant elbow sleeves were done in two sets of scant puffs, each followed by a flat, narrow plaited ruffle of lace, and, between the bottom of each puff and the top of each ruffle was a narrow puffing of the golden silk, the same width and the same style as those on the corsage. A moderately wide girdle of deep brown silk, laid in folds, encircled the waist, this giving just the right touch that none but French taste would have the intuition to select.

Topping this gown was in more senses than one the crowning creation of the toilet—a large, dark-brown hat exactly matching the sash, with its crown swathed in dull golden tissue partially veiled with brown tulle and having two large, wide brown ostrich plumes starting from the slightly raised left side; these, after rising above the high, round crown, drooped at the back nearly to the hair. A cachepeigne of brown tulle filled the upturned back of the hat. This hat had a rather wide, round brim, turned up at the back only, there being, of course, a slight slant at the left back toward the front, and the hat was tilted well down over the brow. With hands clasped just below her waist and filled with branches of mauve lilacs, the effect was really exquisite and evoked the admiration of the guests. As Miss Erhardt has hair of a deep golden brown or light bronze color and her eyes and complexion are of the sort that go best with it, the effect was picturesque in the extreme.

The bride, now Mrs. Wyckoff, wore a white liberty satin gown very girlishly made, with a bodice that fitted the slight figure without folds or puffings. It was cut slightly square in the neck and a guimpe of delicate point applique was inserted, and two bands of insertion to match some two inches wide and about two inches apart went around the bodice below the guimpe.

The very full skirt was gathered at the waist line and had an extremely full, round train. Her veil was a double one of tulle caught with a high diadem of orange blossoms. The veil over the face was almost as long as that in the back. She was so far the most girlish appearing bride of the Spring, and an exceedingly pretty one, too.

One of the guests at this wedding, and who is to be the maid of honor at the wedding of her sister this coming week, was Miss Natalie Morrison, in a costume of the most bright but soft pink, far too soft and light to be termed cerise. It was a chiffon voile, made in princess style. It was fitted at the waist line and for about four inches above and also to below the hip line by the material being laid in lengthwise plaits about three-quarters of an inch broad. They were released a little above the knees. The skirt portion was finished by a deep hem, and was trimmed in lengthwise effect with strips of inch-wide velvet ribbon matching the color of the gown. These strips were put on in groups of three, the groups being ten or twelve inches apart, and the three strips forming each group being three-quarters of an inch or an inch apart. The centre strip of each group of three extended up as far as the knees, and the others were some two inches shorter, the upper end of each strip being cut in a point.

Just below the bust line the plaits were also released, and gave a graceful and necessary fullness. There was a yoke, or short guimpe, of white lace, followed by a yoke band, or shaped section, of white satin, varying from about 3 to 4½ inches in width. This satin was delicately braided in pink silk soutache braid. The plaited and puffed elbow sleeves were also finished with turned-back cuffs of the satin, braided with the soutache.

Topping this costume, which suited Miss Morrison's blonde fairness, was a round, flat hat, with a low, round crown, of fancy cream-colored straw. This hat was raised very much at the left by a bandeau, and against this bandeau was fastened a full pale-pink ostrich tip that swept down over her hair to and back of the ear. A twist of pink velvet ribbon was wound around the crown and made in a little, flat bow that rested on the brim at the right front.

Miss Lillian Morrison, who is to be married May 3 to William J. Tingue, Jr., was also at this wedding, and wore a brilliant light blue cloth trimmed in a rather novel fashion with little side plaitings of silk the same shade as the cloth. These plaitings were carried over the hips and ran down both the back and the front of the skirt. The square-cut Eton topping the skirt had the same narrow plaitings running up and down each side of the back and the front. Around the neck and extending down each shoulder seam and ending in a pointed tab effect above each elbow sleeve was a shaded piece of the cloth some three inches wide, braided in fine blue silk braid several shades darker than the cloth. Topping this costume there was a cream colored straw hat having a large single rose, a large and very full one in rose pink on the brim at the left, and sprays of pale green fern vine extended in many tendrils from the rose over the back and side of the hat.

Mrs. Katharine Corse Ingersoll, who married Robert Taylor Varnum, brother of Gen. James Varnum, wore a pale gray chiffon voile frock combined with embroidered chiffon of the same color and with white lace. She was preceded up the aisle at Grace Church chantry by her little daughter, Miss Anita Ingersoll, a child of about ten years. The latter wore a white embroidery Anglaise gown with elbow sleeves of embroidered ruffles. The little skirt was made of two flounces. She had a rose pink ribbon sash and wore a round white hat with rose colored ribbon wound around its crown and tied in a bow with ends. Her flower basket was filled with pink roses and tied with pink ribbons.

The bride's gown swept the floor all around with of course a deeper dip in the back than elsewhere, and was close fitting at the waist and hips, with a few plaits or gathers to hold it flat. It had a deep hem and perhaps two inches above the hem, which had the effect of a deep tuck or fold, a three or four inch fold of the chiffon voile was stitched on like a deep tuck. The bodice had a short white lace guimpe and stock overlapped by narrow plaitings of gray silk. Strapping of the voile ran lengthwise on the bodice as well as crosswise to form a finish where the bodice overlapped the guimpe. In the centre of the bodice back, extending from the top of the girdle to a point an inch below the gray crosswise ornamentation that finished the edge of the bodice, was a bit of white lace over white. This lace was perhaps three inches wide by seven long, and narrow silk plaitings or some fancy arrangement of bands that looked like plaiting framed it. The girdle was a moderately wide-shaped one, with strappings and plaitings of the material and silk.

The elbow sleeves were rather small and had puffs of gray chiffon beautifully embroidered in lighter shades of gray. These puffs were longer from the shoulder down the arm than they were broad, and were separated, also lengthwise, by fancy strappings. At the elbows or just below the fine knife plaitings of white lace formed a finish.

The hat worn was of medium size only, perfectly round, with a straight brim about three inches high of satin finished coarse straw. Folds of gray liberty or radium ribbon were wound around the crown and arranged in half chou, half bow fashion at the left side near the back, and from them rose several full gray ostrich tips that after rising well above the hat drooped to below the ears, and in the back almost touched her coiffure. Where the hat was raised in the back by the bandeau it was filled in with ribbon or tulle.

A charming hat seen at this wedding was of cream white chip, trimmed with white and red currants and currant leaves, also with currant red liberty ribbon and tulle. The hat was like a sailor, only the brim was wider and the crown lower. It had a bandeau that raised it at the back quite high, and the brim at the back was also rolled slightly over toward the crown. This brim was faced to within an inch of the edge with currant red velvet, and in the back it was filled in with ruchings of tulle of the same shade with a fringe effect at the bottom of red currants and their leaves.

A full wreath of clusters of white and red currants and leaves was arranged around the crown, most of it lying on the brim, and most of the fruit being white. Chous of liberty ribbon in red were arranged at the right side of the hat and from them a currant red aigrette rose and slanted backward.

Mrs. James W. Gerard was in one of the smartest costumes noted at the Varnum-Ingersoll nuptials. She wore a princess frock of narrow black-and-white striped cloth, the material being very fine and light. The gown fitted like a glove, its many seams and narrow underlying plaits sheathing it from the waist down over the hips. These plaits, by their releases, gave the necessary spring and fullness about the knees and feet. This robe, although pressed flat, closed invisibly in the back, but in the centre back was a row of six quite large button molds covered with the cloth. These were perhaps an inch across and an inch apart, and began an inch or so below the yoke, outlining the guimpe and ending two or three inches above the waist line. They gave a decidedly distinctive touch to the gown. The robe also had a little guimpe and stock of white lace, and outlining it was a collar piece or yoke in white, braided or embroidered in black, with fine lines of red, and the elbow sleeves were similarly finished. Topping this was a decidedly smart, small hat; this, if the writer remembers correctly, was black, with a stiff black aigrette and a black tulle cachepeigne.

To depart from bridal and afternoon gowns for a little, the pink chiffon velvet gown worn by Mrs. Lester del Garcia the evening she gave her large bridge whist party in the East Room suite of the Waldorf-Astoria was as simple as it was beautiful. The shade of pink velvet was that especially soft rose pink seen in the heart of La France roses, and having a silvery sheen. The low, round-necked bodice was gathered at the top and also above the deep pointed girdle of silver tissue; over the full velvet folds fell a flat bertha of old Huguenot point lace having the cream tint of age. The sleeves were full puffs of the velvet, with the old lace falling over them. In the centre of the corsage front, just below the edge, was a large silver tissue rose.

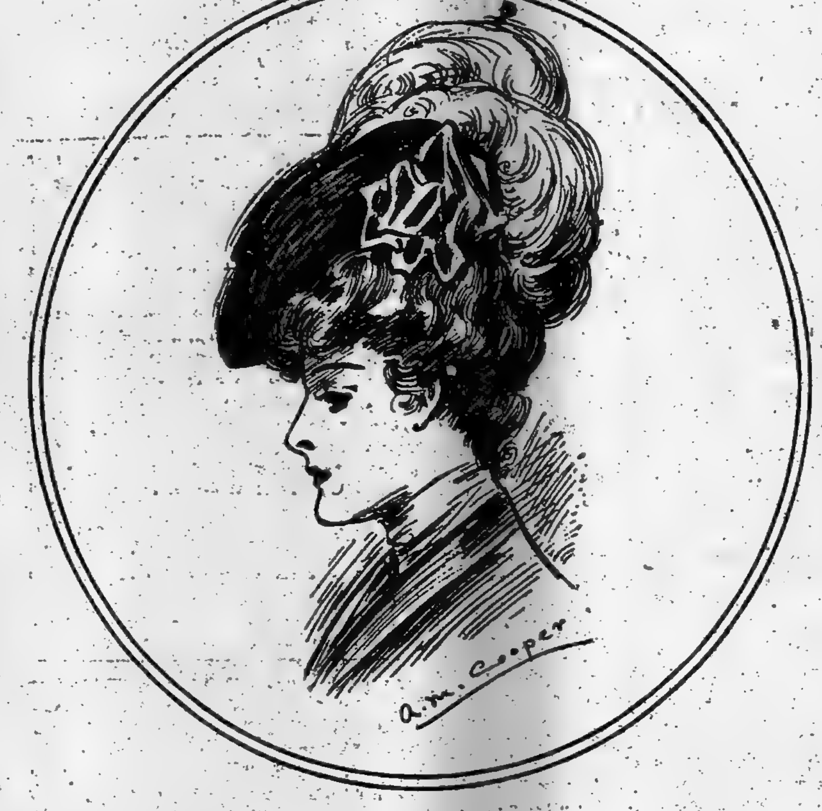
A handsome dinner gown seen at the Waldorf the same evening Mrs. del Garcia gave her card party was worn by a distinguished-looking young woman, whose black hair was more than half white, and who was of the proud, stately type of beauty.

The gown was of black net over silver-gray radium silk, and the net was striped in curving lines with dull silver sequins. Each sequin was very small and its own width from that next it. The stripes were five inches apart, and each stripe formed sloping points eight inches apart. The gown was princess, and had as a finish at the bottom a double box ruching of black chiffon and net. At the top it was cut square, a little lower than a Dutch neck, but not at all décolleté, and several narrow folds of silver tissue were laid under the edge next to the skin. The metal stripes were about two inches apart on the draperies, drawn in almost surplice fashion across the fronts to below the bust line. At the bust line, or rather just below, these draperies crossed and, sloping downward, went under the arms and around to the back, where at the waist line they were draped in a loose knot and formed two sash ends, widening from eight to twelve inches at the bottom. These ends came almost to the top of the box ruching, and the entire scarf or sash was edged with a line of the sequins. The elbow sleeves were puffs of the sequined net over the silver colored silk, and ended at the elbow in fine plaitings of silver gauze over long black gloves. On the top of each sleeve was a small bow with ends edged and sprinkled with sequins, the bows being of the net.



A. M. Cooper

The hat worn with this dinner gown was a rather small, flat hat of fine silver gray crinoline, the back filled in under the brim with pale gray tulle. A plaiting of black tulle went around the crown, and one of the new, long, sweeping, flat feathered aigrette plumes, started from the left front and, slanting upward and outward, stood well out beyond the back of the hat.

Miss Martha Howard Prentice Strong, now Mrs. Harold M. Turner, made an unusually handsome bride in her soft white satin draperies and point lace veil. The gown was made with a full, long train and a deep girdle. The bodice had a point lace yoke and bertha and sleeves of draped point. Her veil was a very voluminous one of Brussels with a border, and was worn back from her face and far enough from the sides to show her golden-brown coiffure.

Her cousin, Miss Kate de Forest Prentice, was her maid of honor. She was in white lace applique over white satin. The frock was practically a tight-fitting one, with puffed elbow sleeves and a deep, full bertha frill of the lace. Her round white Neapolitan hat was a round shape with an unbent brim. It was raised from the back with a bandeau, and so it slanted over the face, but not to an excessive degree. The crown was wreathed with a willow ostrich plume in the softest shade of pink, and at the left side was a large, stiff aigrette in the same shade, slanting upward and backward. She carried a cluster of pale-pink roses.

The hats of the bridesmaids, who were the Misses Martha Pitkin of Boston, Miss Rhoda Sargent of New Haven, and the Misses Ruth Rossiter Hubbell and Mildred Harbeck of New York, were beautiful and artistic, and along the lines of the so-called garden hats. They were of white Neapolitan straw, with the wide brims bent in all sorts of indentations. Clusters of shaded pink roses and foliage were arranged near the front in these flutes or indentations, and rose pink velvet ribbon was tied around the crown with loose ends hanging from the right side near the back in one of the indentations. Loose loops of the shaded velvet ribbon in inch widths drooped from under the brims—which in the back were bent against the hair—down over the coiffures nearly to the neck. All carried clusters of pink roses.

Miss Ruth Badgley, daughter of Capt. Howard G. Badgley and Mrs. Badgley, was married on Monday afternoon in the Church of the Heavenly Rest to Prof. William Kent Shepard of the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University. The bride and groom are both famous as amateur golfers.

Miss Badgley's wedding gown was a princess robe of white chiffon velvet, very clinging, and, with a round, not long, train, and was perfectly plain from the bust line to the hem. It was an unusual gown, and an unusually beautiful one, owing to its corsage arrangement of lace and the short, unlined point lace sleeve. The yoke was of unlined point lace, with a Dutch neck, and was finished at the bottom by a short bertha of the lace that was drawn down below the bust over the velvet bodice. The velvet ended just above the bust line. The sleeves were each two short point lace ruffles set on transparent chiffon or net, and ended several inches above the elbows, long white gloves coming up over the elbows. The flesh showed through the lace of the yoke, and the short sleeves give an uncommonly youthful and springlike effect, that not every bride could stand, but which suited Miss Badgley's blonde fairness.

The veil, a long, narrow scarf of old point lace, worn also by the bride's aunt, Mrs. Charles Badgley, at her own wedding, was arranged in an individual fashion, and quite unlike any bridal veil the writer has ever seen. In the first place, the bride's light golden brown hair was done in the most graceful fashion, in soft, fluffy effect, and part of it was dropped the merest trifle at the left side of the forehead—a droop not in the least suggestive of the soubrette or shopgirl type of drooping pompadour. The veil was fastened on carelessly, and one corner of the scarf also drooped in a point a mere trifle over the fluffy curls of the coiffure. From the front just this little point of lace and a glimpse of a scant frill caught down here and there against the pompadour was all of the veil that could be seen.

The bride's mother, Mrs. H. G. Badgley, was in a light golden tan-colored cloth, with a lace guimpe and sleeve trimmings, and small, flat bows of green satin arranged at the proper points on the corsage and sleeves. Her hat was a flat, oval toque, the color of the gown, with touches of green.

Mrs. Charlotte A. Lyon, grandmother of the bride, and well known in the D. A. R. circle, was in black net over white silk. The net was the dotted variety, and was broken by horizontal bands of black lace arranged in a double picket point pattern, the points bordering each edge. There were several of these point bands on the skirt.

* * *

Miss Daisy Stedman, the maid of honor of Miss Badgley, was in a white organdie flowered with pink roses. The bodice had a white lace guimpe, and an insertion of heavy white lace was let in the lower half of the bodice midway between the bust and the waist. The sleeves were puffs of organdie. The full skirt also had a curved insertion some six inches wide of the heavy white lace let in perhaps sixteen inches from the bottom, and two little plaitings of the organdie some three inches wide appeared below the lace insertion. One plaiting was close to the bottom of the skirt and the other six or eight inches above it.

Miss Stedman's hat was a large white affair wreathed with pink ostrich plumes, some of which started from the rear of the crown and met in the front, where a single half-opened pink rosebud was placed.

Personal and Otherwise.

MRS. DANIEL OLIVER TOWL, whose picture is seen in the Supplement, was Miss Inez Enid French, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Gallatin French, and her marriage to Daniel Oliver Towl of Brooklyn was quietly celebrated at her home on Wednesday. She departed from the usual custom of having small boys or girls as ribbon bearers, and instead had four women, two matrons and two maids, her only attendant being her sister, Mrs. Albert Lester Stearns.

Mrs. Keith Donaldson, who is a daughter of Edward Willis Hunter, formerly of Memphis, Tenn., was another of Wednesday's brides. The ceremony took place in St. Thomas's Church, and the unusual decoration of the pews was her own idea. Instead of having the clusters of flowers at the tops of the pews, bunches of yellow daffodils were fastened flatly against the body of each pew midway between the seat portion and the floor, and the result was decidedly pretty as well as novel. She had among her wedding attendants Miss Margaret Baxter, a sister of the former Mrs. Hugh Tevis, now Mrs. Hart McKee.

At the dinner given for the bridal party gold cigarette cases and vanity boxes with the initials of the bride and bridegroom were presented to the attendants.

Mrs. Donaldson is rather tall, very slight, and with golden-brown hair and dark-blue eyes with dark lashes and a very white skin.

Mrs. William Halliburton Bridgham was Mrs. Honorine Vail, whose marriage took place very quietly yesterday at the residence of her sister-in-law, Miss Mary L. Vail. Mrs. Bridgham was Miss Honorine Gargulio, and her ancestry is Greek and Italian. She met her first husband, Robert M. Vail, in Constantinople years ago, and they were married there. Soon afterward they came to New York to live. Mr. Vail died about three years ago. Mrs. Bridgham has for years made her home with her sister-in-law, Miss Vail. Mrs. Charles Stebbins is also her sister-in-law.

Mrs. Bridgham is a linguist, a highly cultivated woman, and extremely popular in society. She is of the Oriental type, of middle height, with a full figure, large black eyes, black hair, and a creamy skin.

Mr. Bridgham is a grandson of the first Mayor of Providence. His mother was Miss Fales of Boston. He derives his middle name from Judge Haliburton of Nova Scotia, who wrote "Sam Slick, the Yankee Clockmaker," and a number of other humorous works much the vogue in the time of our grandfathers. His brother, Samuel W. Bridgham, married some years since Miss Fanny Schermerhorn. The honeymoon is to be spent at Mr. Bridgham's Massachusetts farm, and in June the two will sail for Europe to spend some months in travel.

* * *

William Armstrong Greer, whose engagement to Miss Louise Noël was announced some time ago, is a son of Bishop Coadjutor David H. Greer, formerly rector of St. Bartholomew's Church. His mother was Miss Caroline A. Keith. His brother, Lawrence Greer, married Miss Georgiana Oakes, and one of his sisters, Miss Mary C. Greer, married Thomas S. McLane. He has one unmarried sister, Miss Daisy Greer. Several months ago, in company with Horace C. Du Val and Warren S. Crane, he opened the brokerage firm of Du Val, Greer & Co. Miss Noël is a sister of Mrs. J. Herbert Johnston and Mrs. Henri Gourd, and daughter of the late Auguste Noël and of Mrs. Noël, who was Miss Emilie Raberg. Another sister is Miss Josephine Noël. Auguste Noël is her brother.

Miss Maud Stanley, sister of Lord Stanley of Alderly, is especially interested in the Soho Club for working girls, of which she is the Secretary. These girls are asked to bring their "beaus" to the club, and a dance is given for them several times a year. There is said to have been a considerable increase in the number of marriages among these working girls since this liberal plan was adopted.

Lady Arabella Romilly is one of the many Englishwomen of title who has strange fads and fancies. One of these is her needlework. With her sewing frame and her needle she produces some wonderful screens, panels, and portières. With the use of the frame she makes pictures, working in the draperies and the background with the finest wools and with silks, and then paints on fabric the face, the hair, and the hands and arms.

Lady Romilly also writes both prose and poetry, and has made a collection of old-fashioned village pottery known to rustics as "joanies." She admires quaint and odd jewels and has a collection of them. One of her sisters is Lady Elgin, wife of the new British Colonial Secretary, and Lady Dora Rodakowski.

WITH the Maying comes the end of the season. From now on there are no more dances or large dinners, or even bridge parties of consequence, except the few that are to be given for charity, and notably the one arranged by Mrs. W. Lanman Bull. At City Island the shipbuilders are busy, and the yachts are being freshened in their Winter quarters at Erie Basin and other moorings, ready for the cruising and the racing. With May come the two coaching parades. The first will be on Wednesday, when the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Club, with Mrs. Arthur Iselin on the box in the lead, and the second on Saturday, the annual affair given by the Coaching Club. This year there will be no Belmont Park races for an aftermath. The season at the park begins on May 10. In the meantime, Alfred Vanderbilt and Robert L. Gerry are tooling the coach between New York and Ardsley. The first day of the Pioneer was more wintry than springlike, but the guests of Center Hitchcock braved the elements. The coach has been taken each day for the coming week. Yesterday Worthington Whitehouse was the host and Robert L. Gerry the whip. The Vigilant will start on May 7 as an evening coach to the Riding and Driving Club, and on the 10th the Venture will make a first trip to the races at Belmont Park. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt and their family are at the Towers, Ardsley, but Mrs. Vanderbilt has been in town several times in the week.

Last week the weddings were numerous, and there were several small dances and notable entertainments. Among these were the fancy dress ball at Delmonico's on Friday and Mrs. John Hone's small dance on Thursday. Amateur theatricals are still in much vogue, and the emigrant party at the Carnegie Hall was a novelty and a success. Miss Amy Baker had a large audience at her annual recital on Friday. At the Berkeley Lyceum was the entertainment for the benefit of the Pascal Institute, and at the Manhattan another for the Bide a Wee Home for Animals. The most notable charity affair was the one arranged on the spur of the moment by Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and others at the Hippodrome for the benefit of the San Francisco sufferers. Ogden Mills went to San Francisco on Tuesday, following E. H. Harriman. Word has been received from Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin and from Hermann Oelrichs. Mr. and Mrs. Francis Carolan were in town during the week, and Francis Burton Harrison left San Francisco about the time of the earthquake. Society at the Golden Gate and in New York is so intimately connected that the disaster had its effect on entertaining and on the plans for the Summer.

* * *

Mrs. Ogden Mills and the Misses Mills sailed last week for England. Mrs. Mills will go on the Continent, after a short stay in London. Miss Dorothy Whitney, Mrs. Bend, and Miss Bend also sailed, and among others who went abroad were the Marquis and Marquise de Breteuil, who were over here for a short visit; Mr. and Mrs. Lanfear Norrie, Mr. and Mrs. Cortlandt Fields Bishop, Mrs. William N. Cowles, sister of the President, who is to be a guest of Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid in London; Mrs. George Von L. Meyer and the Misses Meyer, the wife and daughters of the American Ambassador to Russia; Mrs. Arthur Wellman and the Countess of Yarmouth. Miss Fanny Reed, sister of the late Mrs. Paran Stevens, who has been here this Winter, sailed on Thursday for Havre and Paris.

* * *

The Coaching Club on Saturday will have its parade in the afternoon, starting, as last year, from the neighborhood of the Metropolitan Club. Col. Jay, as in former years, will be in the lead. Among those who have promised to enter the parade are James Henry Smith, Alfred Vanderbilt, Robert L. Gerry, George O. G. Jennings, C. Ledyard Blair, Reginald Rives, and George G. Haven, Jr. The annual drive will be to Commodore Gerry's place, the old Livingston manor on Lake Delaware. The trip will take two days, and the first night's stop will be at Kingston, where the party will sleep on the Electra, the Gerry yacht. Commodore and Mrs. Gerry and the Misses Gerry sail week after next for Europe.

Summer plans are more or less at sea. Princes and Dukes and Duchesses have been promised for Newport, but whether these happy auguries will be realised is another question. From present indications the Newport season will be much more brilliant this Summer than it was last. So far there are no new entertainers, but several familiar cottagers and villa owners will return. The accession of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Gallatin and Mr. and Mrs. Goelet Gallatin to the Newport colony has been already noted. Miss Pell, who came out this past Winter, will visit her relatives, and there will be much entertaining for her. Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones have been giving a succession of house parties at their plantation in the South, but they will open their cottage at Newport in July. They will not get into their new house until next year. As usual the Frederick Vanderbilt villa will be closed, but Mrs. Vanderbilt and Miss Gladys Vanderbilt will occupy the Breakers, and the two Goelet families will be at their Summer homes. Mrs. Astor sails from Liverpool on July 28. Mrs. John Jacob Astor is in New York. She did not go abroad last week.

Mrs. Rhinelander Stewart, Miss Stewart, and Miss Chapin have been the recipients of much hospitality the past two weeks. Mrs. Rhinelander Stewart has been in New York off and on during the Winter and Spring, but she has not as yet given up her cottage with the odd name in South Dakota. Mr. Tailer's name is mentioned as one of the probable whips of the parade on Saturday. This will be the first time Mr. Tailer has for some years taken a prominent part in coaching, although he has always been a guest on one or the other coaches each first Saturday in May. He is one of the most expert whips in this country.

The last of the April weddings will take place to-morrow. At St. Patrick's Cathedral Miss Beatrice Kinney, daughter of Francis S. Kinney, will be married to Harry La Montagne. The superstitions of May have been routed most effectively. Each year there are more May brides, and so far none of them has had cause to regret the date of the wedding day. On Saturday Miss Rosalie Coe Campbell, daughter of Mrs. Herbert Parsons, will be married to Henry Slack at Calvary Church. Miss Martha Feltus Townsend, daughter of Mrs. James Rodman Townsend, will be maid of honor. The bridesmaids selected are Miss Marguerite Hicks Slack, a sister of the bridegroom-elect; Miss Isabella Wetherill, daughter of Mrs. Bloomfield Wetherill; Miss Gladys Jacquelin Smith, daughter of Mrs. Laroche Smith, a cousin of the bride; Miss Dorothy Pierrepont Edwards, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Philadelphia was well represented last week at the Donaldson-Hunter wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Knight and a large party coming over for the ceremony and reception. The first of the two Delafield weddings took place yesterday. The ceremony was followed by a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Maturin Livingston Delafield. The bride was Miss Harriet Coleman Delafield and the bridegroom Jarvis Pomeroy Carter. The marriage of William Hailburton Bridgham and Mrs. Honorine Vail took place at the home of Miss Mary Vail. Mr. and Mrs. Bridgham are to pass a part of their honeymoon in Connecticut, and then are going abroad for the rest of the Summer. In Paris took place the wedding of Spencer Eddy and Miss Spreckels. It had been originally planned to have a large church ceremonial in London, but the bride-elect became ill, and the wedding was quietly celebrated in Paris instead. London has this Spring been cheated out of two American weddings, both of which had promised to be functions of considerable note.

But although much of London society, like sheep, has followed in the wake of the King and Queen, who are now on the Continent, after their yachting trip, there has been much doing. Mrs. Adair has been giving a mixture of dinners, some purely social and others political. She has nearly completed her new home near Windsor, which she has renamed Adair Place. She has let Glenveigh to Lord Eglinton. Mrs. Adair gave a children's fancy party after Easter. It was in the afternoon, and many fashionables, including Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, came in to see the costumes. Lady Curzon's two little children were dressed as Crusaders.

Monte Carlo still remains popular, but the villa owners are leaving Cannes for Paris. Among those recently in the gay capital were Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Miss Swan, Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, and Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Sloane. Mr. and Mrs. Twombly are homeward bound. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gould sailed last Wednesday from Southampton. The Duke of Marlborough has been at Nice, but the Duchess of Marlborough remained in England, and has been most active in getting up a private fund for the California sufferers. Lady Cheylesmore was suffering from the influenza and a bad throat after Easter, and was unable to entertain at her villa at Cannes, which she and her mother, Mrs. French, have just purchased. Louis Boissevain, who has been at Monte Carlo a greater part of the Spring, is on his way home. He will not, however, arrive in time for the coaching parade, in which for years he has taken part. Mrs. Bradley Martin and Lady Craven have also left Monte Carlo, and Mrs. Moreton Frewen, who was at Cannes, has returned to London. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt are in Paris, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel and Harry Symes Lehr are en route to Athens, and Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel are remaining at Cannes, while Mr. Drexel cruises about the coast in his yacht.

Prince Arthur of Connaught is in Canada, en route to England, from his tour in the East. Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Bloodgood and the Misses Bloodgood have gone to Toronto, where they will participate in some of the entertaining done there for the Prince.

The First Life Guards have been ordered to Windsor. Among the members is John Jacob Astor, second son of William Waldorf Astor, who has been received "on probation." The regiment is a smart one, with the Duke of Teck, Lord Gifford, Lord Hugh Grosvenor, Lord Newry, Lord Galway's son, and Lord De Ramsay's son as members.

A Washington wedding of interest last week was that of Charles O'Donnell Lee and Miss Annie McCauley. Among Mr. Lee's attendants were Walter Tuckerman, Charles Horsey of Knoxville, Md., and his cousin, Columbus O'Donnell Lee of Baltimore. Miss Mathilde Townsend was maid of honor. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father Lee of St. Matthew's, a relative of the bridegroom. Mr. Lee is a brother of Joseph Lee, Minister to Ecuador, and a great-nephew of the late Mrs. Adrian Iselin of this city.

The Social Whirl

ONE of the enjoyable dances of the post-Lenten season was that given by the Petty Officers' Association of the First Battalion Naval Militia of New York aboard the United States steamship Granite State at the foot of East Twenty-fourth Street. The Granite State is one of the old wooden warships used in the civil war under the name of the New Hampshire, and is now used by the battalion as an armory. It was transformed into a floating ballroom for this dance by the use of flags, shields, flowers, and hundreds of tiny electric bulbs, together with trophies of the Spanish war. Supper was served on the gun deck at midnight. Allen Waltz, Thomas Cummings, and Herbert Cromb formed the committee in charge. Some of those present were Capt. B. Usher and Lieut. F. Underwood of the Twenty-second Regiment, N. G., N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Augustine Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Ferguson, Mrs. Arthur Starkey Wilson, Miss Molly Cole, Miss Leonore Birnbohm, Miss Florence Wilson, Miss N. Goodman, Miss Mary Hale, and Mrs. L. Hale. The members of the Petty Officers' Association are Lincoln Moss, H. Walz, William Cregie, Dr. Arthur Wilson, W. F. Leigh, H. J. Herkins, M. Morreller, E. H. Storkwell, Herbert Crouch, T. P. Cummings, P. J. Dunbar, Milton Sanford, David Boyle, H. Powley, R. S. Case, J. G. Payne, J. H. Mitchel, A. J. Wilson, A. Eefert, J. Diercks, W. Seybell, E. Moran, E. Fairchilds, and W. Hillier.

The favors were small drums filled with chocolates and miniature tents containing ices. On each table there were a number of candles, shaded with red, white, and blue. The opening address was made by the President, Mrs. James Griswold Wentz. She read a letter from President Roosevelt, which he dictated to her while she was in Washington last week. In it he spoke of the value of the work of disinterested women, saying that it was not paid work, and therefore without price. Mrs. Wentz's address was followed by a speech on "Patriotism" by the Rev. Charles Snow, an address by Dr. Robert Erskine Ely, a few words by Miss Helen Yarick Boswell, an appeal for the support of the club in "Legislation Against Child Labor," by Dr. Samuel McE. THE WORLD OF ART AND ARTISTS

San Francisco's Opportunity

She Can Build to Defy Conflagrations and Laugh at Earthquakes, Rearrange Her City Plan and Gain in Health and Beauty.

SAN FRANCISCO'S ruin has brought with it opportunities the twentieth century did not seem to hold, chances for heroism in a hundred ways, an occasion for brotherly love and generosity on a colossal scale, the moment for a display of civic energy and courage which may well be envied by less fortunate communities. The response of New York, so prompt and overwhelming, shows the sentiment latent in a race much scoffed at for its apparent lack of ideals. It is as if the city by the Eastern Gate of the Union, greatest of commonwealths on this coast of the Atlantic, had felt profoundly the plight of the great city at the Western Gate, realizing with a sudden shock what might happen to it if a similar convulsion should rock its deep-laid giant buildings, break up its water supply, set the Red Cock crowing over its lofty pinnacles, and drive its teeming thousands through the dangerous passes of its streets.

But because of its disaster, San Francisco has an opportunity no ruin less sweeping could have offered. The fire has made tabula rasa of its oldest section, and offers a chance to its citizens to take advantage of whatever the students of civics have determined to be best for the welfare and comfort of thickly populated places. There is no hesitation as to the question of rebuilding, although it is certain that this point on the Pacific has been a special point for earthquakes in the past, nor can there be two opinions regarding the recurrence of such convulsions there in the future. San Francisco knows this, and yet rebuilds—whether wisely or not is a question beside the mark. Like the ants which set to work at once to put order in the heap destroyed by some agency whose origin they cannot guess, so human beings, attached to one spot by interest and sentiment, fall to with an energy inherent in the race to repair their shattered homes and raise anew their churches and markets, their hotels and offices leveled to the ground.

* * *

The place itself is ideal, lying between the ocean and the magnificent bay in which Sir Francis Drake rejoiced when he beheld it first. Some way must be found to reduce the danger to the new city to a minimum. But has San Francisco found it? That is the question. Will the new buildings prove just as perilous as the old when the next subterranean shock occurs? Will the citizens, fleeing from their houses and offices, have to pass through the same bombardment of bricks and stones? Will the fires, that by all reasonable calculations must occur in consequence of such a jarring of the earth, find just as much material to feed on? And must San Francisco pass again through the same ordeal?

Yes—unless wiser counsels prevail than usually govern a people eager to replace a devastated town.

It is easier to rebuild a city on old lines than to devise new and get property owners to accept of novelties. The old streets are there, the foundations and main walls of the buildings; here and there one that has escaped.

Take the matter of locating about a square the most important civic buildings, an economical and convenient arrangement which also permits the finest effects in city architecture. Can San Francisco break away from the old lines and establish these buildings on a comprehensive plan which brings with it convenience and beauty?

Take the matter of escape from the unhygienic, inconvenient and ugly layout of buildings in blocks, on lines forced by a senseless system of streets at right angles, under the like of which New York suffers, a system regardless of coolness in Summer and warmth in Winter, taking no heed of the direction of prevailing winds and the course of the sun, and compelling the indecent obtrusion of garbage and rubbish on the finest streets and avenues. Will San Francisco study the advantages and beauty of the layout of streets and avenues in radiants from parks, first practiced long ago in little Annapolis, and then copied to such advantage in Washington?

Yet this way of laying out a city gives parks at regular intervals, variety in townscape effects, areas of differing shape for buildings, which may be picturesque, broad avenues with lines of trees and bridlepaths, beside paved sections, vantage grounds for fountains and monuments, vistas in all directions toward ocean and bay. Will San Francisco have the wisdom to seize time by the forelock and do now thoroughly what the next generation will have to do patchily and at huge expense?

* * *

And the material in which the new city is to rise—have the San Franciscans realized what results have been obtained by engineers like Coignet and Hennebique, followed by others in Austria, Belgium and the United States in the use of concrete reinforced by a minimum of embedded iron? Buildings of great height are now going up in this material in all cities which are really non-burnable. A solid rank of such structures presents an impassable barrier to conflagrations. A town made of reinforced concrete cannot be shaken down, nor can it burn, though fires were started in each building on purpose. Tough and indestructible, it is a material on which an earthquake can wreak little damage. There are no bricks or stone walls to kill those within or without. The roofs and chimneys, beams, arches, pillars, and floors are alike solid and tough and unburnable.

If San Francisco thoroughly realizes what can be done in reinforced concrete, and will build of it throughout, no matter what great corporations and vested interests are opposed, it can afford to laugh at earthquakes, for such structures will not tumble down, and a fire starting in any one building can do no more than destroy the burnable furniture on the spot.

Let us hope that San Francisco will not make the old mistake by rebuilding without a well-matured plan, and, science having now provided a wonderful improvement on the concrete house known for thousands of years about the Mediterranean, a house evolved as it were for the benefit of earthquake-shaken lands, that it will study deeply the manifold merits of reinforced concrete, and rise again, if not unshakable, at any rate unburnable.

OUR ILLUSTRATIONS TO-DAY

Of Paintings Old and New and of Painters in Their Studios.

MME. VIGEE LE BRUN was an energetic, businesslike Frenchwoman, who rattled round the world painting portraits of no mean quality and left us a gossippy book of memoirs which reveal her character as her pictures do not. We have had lately in New York a squabble between dealer and buyer over a portrait of the Marquise de Saffray which was sold in the David King collection. Now the Dowdeswells of London claim to have discovered a half-length by Mme. le Brun of her much-spoiled and often-painted daughter, who insisted on marrying, contrary to her mother's wish, a sallow but romantic Italian named Nigris, who was secretary to Count Czernicheff at St. Petersburg. This was during their long stay in Russia, where the clever, industrious mother painted a prodigious number of likenesses in the imperial family and the Court circle. We reproduce this picture in the Pictorial Supplement.

The young woman with great pearl drops at her ears is not unlike the little girl in the famous portraits of mother and daughter in the Louvre; indeed, it is not unlike the face of Mme. le Brun herself. The mother states that after this disappointing marriage, "the whole charm of my life seemed to be irretrievably destroyed. I even felt no joy in loving my daughter." Mme. le Brun was the child of a painter and her husband was an art dealer collaterally descended from Charles le Brun, (1619-1690,) the first Director of the Gobelins, who painted great pictures in a classic vein, triumphs of Roman Generals, slaughters of the innocents, &c., and made grand cartoons for tapestries. The picture in London seems to bear out the enthusiastic description of the girl left by her mother—"her large blue eyes sparkling with spirit, her slightly tiptilted nose, her pretty mouth, magnificent teeth, &c."

Some recent pictures by New York artists are given on the tinted page. "Is He in Earnest?" at the Katz Galleries, Columbus Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street, is a small figure by Irving R. Wiles, painted swiftly but with delightful expression. It is a young girl studying an open letter with the profound interest such a missive demands. In the original the touch is light—as the subject demands. By Gari Melchers is the "real boy," with his hobbyhorse, a young Master Stedman. An excellent portrait is that of his sister, Miss Nettie Phillips, by J. Campbell Phillips, who is showing some canvases at the Knoedler Galleries. Still another is the little son of Mr. Richard Mansfield, the actor, painted by Miss Louise Heustis, and from the studio of Sidney Starr comes the likeness of the little daughter of Mr. De Lancey Nicoll.

Photographs of three notable artists in their studios are among to-day's illustrations. In another column Mr. Frederick Stuart Church has a good deal to say concerning the painting of ideal, fairy, and humorous pictures which tell a story. A second photograph shows Mr. William M. Chase standing in a characteristic attitude before his easel. A third shows one of the younger sculptors, Mr. E. C. Triebel, in his atelier on Macdougal Alley, where he has been modeling the monuments for Merida, the capital of Yucatan, for which he has a commission, one of them the monument of Porfirio Diaz. Another photograph shows a group of young men belonging to the Art Students' League engaged in a charivari during the recent gambols of the Society of Fakirs. They represent the Fakir Band indulging in a grand outburst of music, quite in keeping with the caricatures of prominent pictures in the last exhibition of the Society of American Artists.

Current Matters of Art

THE large family group by Benjamin West, founder and second President of the Royal Academy, which was sold last week to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts by T. J. Blakeslee of New York, is a capital example of the group pictures original in Holland. It is also interesting as an unusually successful work in this line by an American who was best known for his large classical compositions, Biblical scenes, and battle views. It is reproduced on this page. Nine persons of different ages are sitting or standing about a table on which lie maps and charts, books and a beaker of classical shape having figures in high relief. To the left sits Mr. Adrian Hope, a London merchant of note, descended from Dutch forbears of the van der Hoop family. His gesture of the left hand implies that he is a scholar and an admirer of art. Opposite sits his wife, looking straight from the picture, a very handsome old lady. To the left in profile sits his daughter-in-law and behind her, with his face nearly profile, stands his son Henry. The five Henry Hope children are grouped effectively. The youngest, a boy, leans across his mother's lap and turns his face toward the spectator. A charming girl of 12 or 13 stands by the right shoulder of her grandmother, and her father, stretching his hand behind his mother's head, places it on this daughter's shoulder. The smaller girl, who stands next to the left, raises a veil in one high hand and her brother, leaning slightly over her head, catches this raised left hand lightly below the wrist. The eldest son stands beside his grandfather to the rear. In the background between curtains one sees a fleet of ships under sail, to indicate the calling of this prosperous merchant. The picture has darkened with time, but the faces are still vivid. The little artifices which the good Quaker painter has used to obtain variety of movement and gesture may have excited resentment among the critics of 1802, when it appeared at the Academy, but now they seem naive and interesting. The painting comes from the Sydenham branch of the family. It is peculiarly fitting that an American museum should have such a good example of Benjamin West.

A club is about to be started in New York to remove the prejudice against copies of old masters, a prejudice which has gone so far in this country that museums, and, indeed, many collectors, prefer to go without celebrated paintings if they cannot have the originals. Mrs. James H. Canfield, whose address is Graham Court, Seventh Avenue and 116th Street, is the leading spirit in the movement. Messrs. William M. Chase, George H. Story, and Ben Foster, Miss Clara MacChesney and others are interested. An exhibition of copies of famous paintings will be visible until May 5 at the Lenox Avenue Unitarian Church, corner of 121st Street. The title proposed is the Velasquez Club.

Mr. Bolton Coit Brown, who has one of the ateliers in the old Tenth Street Studio Building, sends out a circular regarding a Summer school which he proposes to conduct at Woodstock, Ulster County, near the base of Overlook Mountain in the Catskills. Woodstock is reached by rail via Kingston and West Hurley, with five miles in stage from that station. "I offer expert instruction in the theory and the practice of the fine arts of Drawing, Painting, Designing, Composition, and Harmonious Coloring," writes Mr. Brown. He has a studio near his cottage in Woodstock, where the work of students can be criticised.

Hachette of Paris has printed in two volumes profusely illustrated d'Allemagne's "Cartes à Jouer du Quatorzième au Vingtième Siècle," in which the history of playing cards in Europe is treated at great length. Playing cards appear to have entered Europe through Venice early in the fifteenth century; they immediately became the rage, although Church and State tried every means to stop their progress. M. d'Allemagne believes in a still earlier date for their arrival. In France a duty was laid on cards in the sixteenth century, removed about 1650, reimposed in 1701 to 1719, renewed in 1754, and taken off at the Revolution. Since 1798 it has been in force again. The author treats of the artistic side of cards and gives many examples in color of old and later packs, tells of the trades and craft guilds which fabricated them and the engravers who made famous packs for celebrated persons, such as that which records the marriage of Visconti of Milan and the daughter of Amadeus of Savoy in 1427, having the shields of the two families on the "lovers" card. Cards are supposed to have their origin in India, but, like chess, the "game of Kings," their early steps are very uncertain.

May will see a notable moving day among the art dealers on Fifth Avenue. The old firm of William Schaus is leaving Madison Square for larger and much better lighted galleries on the east side of Fifth Avenue above the Tiffany establishment. The Ehrich Galleries leave West Thirty-third Street and open new quarters just above Fortieth Street, on the same side of Fifth Avenue. The gallery of William Macbeth, which has been below the level of the street near Twenty-seventh Street, is about to rise to loftier levels, having taken the top floor of a building on the west side of Fifth Avenue, below Fortieth Street. So the art dealers are approaching each other and lining the avenue from Fortieth to Twenty-eighth Street, Wunderlich & Co. being now the furthest south of all the galleries.

After suffering from a century of ill-disguised contempt the memory of Fragonard has been rehabilitated by art historians and his pictures have been sold at great prices to amateurs. Now he is to have his monument. He died one hundred years ago. A committee is raising a fund in Paris, and Auguste Maillard is modeling a bust of Fragonard to stand in some public park.

The Scrip for May has an instructive essay with illustrations on civic architecture in Hindustan, which was delivered as an address by Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke in Boston March 10. Mr. Frank Weitenkampf of the Lenox Library contributes to the same number a paper on illustrations by Howard Pyle, W. T. Smedley, and Arthur I. Keller.

F. S. Church Believes in Seeking the Purest Types of American Girlhood—Glad to Make Children Happy with Beasts and Birds, Nymphs and Spirits.

MOST beloved of all the New York artists by the artists and art students is Frederick Stewart Church, N. A., a painter who has pursued the quiet tenor of an uneventful life without striving to reach popularity of any sort, but has simply lived up to his obligations with the utmost unselfishness. In his successive studios on Fifteenth and Forty-fourth Streets, and now in the Carnegie Hall, he has remained the same genial, courteous, and industrious craftsman, watching younger men rise to greater fame without a sign of jealousy or repining, content with such meed of praise and success he has earned during the past thirty years.

When L'Art was appearing in Paris a French writer picked Frederick S. Church out as an example of an original American painter entirely unaffected by old masters and modern professors, one who played upon a gentle pipe the most naive of pastoral lays. On this writer, surfeited by the technical fireworks of modern French painters, which are cleverly painted but usually devoid of any certain meaning, the ingenuous talent of Frederick Church exercised a peculiar charm. He wrote admiringly in L'Art of the man who dared to tell a story and even to crack a joke in paint, and Church was famous. But owing to conditions beyond his control the painter did not follow up this success by travel abroad, and needless to say did not change his methods or vary from the line of work in which he had gained some laurels—he hardly himself knew how.

* * *

In the Pictorial Supplement is a portrait of Mr. Church and the studio at the Carnegie where he concocts those ideal and symbolical and story-telling pictures made so familiar by reproductions in woodcut and halftone. Here we see partially painted an order for a "Siren," who sits on the dune holding a white harp that ends in a gull's head; and another in which Cupid steers the plow and the colt of Pegasus pulls it—a gentle satire on the power of love to make even poets labor. Yonder is an exception to the light key of color which this artist usually prefers. A pretty girl with green robe and a rose in her hair wanders by the shore fondling black leopards, whose seagreen eyes match her dress and whose dim leopard-spots are almost invisible under their sable fur. "Cupid at the North Pole" is an amusing figure in Canadian Winter garments respectfully surrounded by polar bears.

"My best public," said Mr. Church, as he stuffed a fresh pipe, "consists of women and children and of men who have not lost their capacity for simple enjoyments. Some of the artists object to my humorous pictures, on the ground that art is too sacred to permit of such trivial things. They may be right, but that is my way of art. I see things that way, and suppose I could not do as well if I tried to follow their advice."

"Such rollicking pictures are not wanted at our regular exhibitions," continued the artist, "but they please children greatly and for my part I am only too glad to be able to please children. I am not stuck up. Children are good enough for me. The real question I dare not answer is whether I am good enough for the children."

* * *

"Why, yes; I was among the early workers for the Art Students' League, and to the Academy schools I have devoted an amount of time and energy which I can never retrieve."

"What is your opinion regarding the Academy schools and Columbia University?"

"Personally I was unconvinced; but I do not have time or inclination to examine these matters, and merely recorded a vote the other way."

"And how about the merger of Academy and Society?"

"Well, I bow to the decision of men better qualified than I am to judge the question. I'm a hopeless conservative, you know."

"You were against it?"

"I do not see sufficient demand for it; but then I am in favor of two smaller exhibitions rather than one big one."

"You have few rivals now in pictures that tell a story."

"True. But it would be a mistake to suppose that I do not admire brilliant brushwork. It is this way: I paint for those who love fiction in every form. The English painters, Landseer and Briton Rivière, are just now, and especially over here, underrated, if not despised, by our artists. But I say that pictures which give so much pleasure and even in reproduction afford so many people delight, are worth considering. I tell a story and believe in making the story as attractive as possible. The beautiful young girl is naturally loved by young and old. I strive to paint her as I see her. Even in portraits—"

"So you are a portraitist, too?"

Mr. Church bowed gravely. "Even I dare that far. As I was saying, even in portraits I like to bring out the most beautiful, telling points, and also introduce objects that relate to the sitter and add color and interest. So in a portrait of a daughter of Mr. Grant B. Schley, no less than seven dogs are added—St. Bernard, Great Dane, Boston bull terriers, &c. I love to idealize, though I know well enough how easy it is to weaken a picture by oversweetness."

"And all these beasts and birds, do you still study them from the life?"

"Without laying claim to anything brilliant in technique, I can truly say that with the human as well as the beast figures I take infinite pains. What I most labor to attain is beauty in the faces of my female figures. Here is the "Fog Phantoms," so much admired by Mr. Freer of Detroit. It was years before I could satisfy myself regarding that face."

The picture in question is one of the most beautiful and poetic this artist has made. It was reproduced in a splendid and now rare woodcut by F. S. King. The white chargers of the fog are moving over the breakers inland. Weird forms toss their white draperies in front of the fairy steeds and muffled figures follow. In the centre a wee, lovely face, half triumphant, half afraid, makes the point toward which the eyes naturally turn.

"Yes, I am constantly seeking to improve my faces, hands, feet. Only occasionally do I paint from the nude; but I am always using the model. I search for the sweetest, purest types of American girlhood and young womanhood."

"You do much illustrating?"

"Not now. Nor in my pictures do I often follow a line in poetry, or make conventional figures. Almost every subject which has proved successful has been suggested by something in nature. Yes, I am a constant visitor to the Zoo. That grand Siberian tiger I intend to paint amid the snow—where he really belongs."

"And religious pictures?"

"None of importance since the 'Madonna of the Seagulls,' which was sold in the Evans collection and is now owned by Mr. Scripps of Detroit."

The picture in question has a pair of flights of white seagulls in the background, which form a cross in the heavens. Angels kneel to right and left of the seated Madonna and other gulls are standing in different natural attitudes on the wet strand in the immediate foreground.

"In consequence of seeing one of my pictures at the St. Louis fair, Col. John Jacob Astor bought recently one of my most rollicking fairy tales, called 'Woodland Vaudeville,' in which white and black bears and lambs dance, animals play on instruments, and nymphs with rabbits in their laps look on and applaud. So you see that most of my humorous pictures never get into the exhibitions. It is just as well, for I know they hurt the delicate sensibilities of a number of my artist friends." And Mr. Church grinned broadly, but without malice.

Talk of the Studios

The annual meeting of the National Academy of Design will take place on May 9, when the final business pertaining to the merger of the Society of American Artists with the Academy will be perfected. The society, which has been a rival art organization to the Academy for twenty-eight years, will then cease to exist as a body of artists. The name will be retained, however, as it is the desire of many members of the society to prevent the use of the title by any other art associations.

Exhibits for the forthcoming annual exhibition of the American Water Color Society were received Friday and Saturday at the American Fine Arts Building. A private view for the press and profession will be held in the Fine Arts Galleries on Wednesday evening, May 2, from 8 until 11 o'clock. The exhibition will open to the public on Thursday, May 3. This will be the last public exhibition in the Fine Arts for the present season. Now that the water colorists have ample space in which to display their work, an effort is being made to have the coming show of an elaborate and varied character. Space will be reserved for etchings, and well-known American artists abroad will contribute.

In an upper storeroom of the Metropolitan Museum of Art are more than a score of models for a statue of Gen. Alexander Macomb, to be erected in Detroit. These models have been entered in a competition by American sculptors and await the judgment of a commission of experts. Owing to the illness of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, a member of this commission, the meeting of the experts has been delayed. The decision was to have been made in Detroit, but at the request of Mr. Saint-Gaudens the various models submitted in the competition were sent to New York.

Pupils of the Karl von Rydingsvärd school of wood carving at 96 Fifth Avenue held an exhibition of their work on Friday, April 27. Many interesting examples of pupils' work in this art were shown, including figure and scroll pieces, tables, and chests of various design. Mr. von Rydingsvärd is one of the pioneers in teaching this craft in America.

THE WEATHERCOCK.

I am
The village weathercock.
When
The winds are gently humming
I catch
The meaning of their talk,
And tell
The people what is coming!
I can't foresee
What is to be.
I can't make rain or shine
To order!
I look for news
And point my views,
I merely am the weather man's Recorder!

* * *

When
The people go to church—
Hear
The far-off bells a-ringing—
I never
Leave them in the lurch.
They see
Just how my tail is swinging.
What will they wear?
Why, I don't care.
Dressmaking with me is not a
Passion,
But, I observe
That, as I swerve,
I can dictate the very latest
Fashion!

Years
Go by and leave me there,
On
The village tavern gable,
Watched by every loving pair—
Weather-
Cock of Love's own fable.
To and fro
These mortals go,
A solemn—merry—sobbing
Mixture.
Young grows old
And hot grows cold;
But through it all the weathercock's
A fixture.

WILLING TO PAY THE DAMAGES.

THE cable dispatches a short time ago told of a religious revival among the Welsh miners, and related many instances of men being so carried away by their religious enthusiasm that they refused to work. Several years ago a revival meeting was being held in a little village in the northern part of the County of Cornwall, England. The leader of the meeting was a prosperous miller, named Samuel Knight. Whenever the miller offered a prayer he invariably gave utterance to some form of speech that would cause his audience to break out in laughter. On one occasion while exhorting the sinners present to turn from their evil ways he exclaimed:

"O God, come down among us! Come down through the roof and I will pay for the mending of it!"

The laughter that followed broke up the meeting.

FRENCH PREMIER WARNS STRIKERS AS TO MAY 1

Says Government Is Prepared to Insure Order.

NO WEAKNESS TO BE SHOWN

Paris Assuming a Military Aspect—Races Abandoned and National Museums Closed.

PARIS, April 29.—Premier Sarrien, in a speech delivered here to-day, gave warning to the disorderly element that the Government purposed dealing firmly with any outbreaks on May 1.

"The first duty of a Government worthy of the name," said M. Sarrien, "is to insure order in the streets and freedom to work without interruption. We are resolved to apply the law without passion and without weakness to all disturbers of the peace, whoever they may be, whatever names they assume, or whatever the end they seek.

"A country like France can prosper and develop commerce, increase wealth, and ameliorate the lot of the members of its social fabric only through order, peace, and work. Violence can only benefit the forces of reaction and discredit the noblest cause."

The city is assuming a distinctly military aspect. Military patrols have not yet been established, but soldiers off duty throng the boulevards, suggesting the days of the Boulanger excitement. Special trains continue to bring in reinforcements. These are quartered principally in the Champs de Mars, the Government tobacco manufactories, and the old dungeon at Vincennes.

The military Governor of Paris has taken the suggestive action of requisitioning the extensive building of the Tivoli Vauxhall for military uses. This building ordinarily is used for meetings of the revolutionary party.

Crowds to-day visited the Champs de Mars to witness the cavalry and infantry drills. Several persons distributing anti-military pamphlets were arrested during the day. The office of the Confederation of Labor was closed, but a number of the trades unions met at the Labor Exchange.

Seven thousand workmen of the municipal gas works to-day reached the important decision not to strike, thus allaying the fears that the city would be without light. After a meeting of printers to-day a disturbance between strikers and non-strikers took place, in the course of which a non-striker shot and seriously wounded a striker.

The striking jewelers to-day created disorders outside the establishments that are continuing to operate by endeavoring to induce the men who remain at work to join the strike. A number of foreign workmen gathered in a hall in Gaiete Street and passed a resolution not to work on May 1, and it appears probable that the cabmen also will remain idle that day. The races were abandoned to-day on account of the police staff being engaged in Paris and the national museums also were closed.

There were two attempts against the Western Railroad property this morning, both within a short distance of the scene of the bomb explosion at the Argenteuil Bridge. Shortly after midnight a gang of suspicious-looking men approached the Colombes Viaduct. The sentry heard drilling and rattled his rifle, and the men rapidly retreated cross-country. Later drill holes were found, but no explosives. About the same time the driver of a locomotive discovered that the track had been blocked with large stones about a mile from Argenteuil. Slight damage was done his engine.

Minister of the Interior Clemenceau is positive that the military and police precautions taken will insure quiet.

"The measures we have taken," he said to-day, "will easily insure the maintenance of order throughout every section of the city. Our reports satisfy us that the day will pass without serious incidents."

MAY CALL EXTRA SESSION.

Senator Malby Says Necessary Work Cannot Be Done Without It.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 29.—Senator George R. Malby, who was one of the few legislators who remained in town over Sunday, says he believes that an extra session of the Legislature will have to be called. He says that there are several very important measures pending which cannot be put through, even though the present session were extended.

"I think the Governor will call an extra session," he said. "There are several important bills still in Committee of the Whole."

"Which of them do you consider the most important?" he was asked.

"The Good Roads bill, which is still in committee," was the reply.

"How about the reapportionment?" was the next question.

"That is in committee and might be included in the business of an extra session if one is called," said the Senator.

"Then you think that an extra session is necessary?"

"I cannot see any other way out of the dilemma," was the reply. "We certainly cannot get the important and necessary legislation through by the time set for the adjournment."

Senator Jotham P. Allds differs with Senator Malby. He contends that every bill of any importance, including the Good Roads and Reapportionment bills, are on third reading, and that they will be passed before the final adjournment.

"The members will wake up to the importance of getting these principal measures through, and they will make quick work of them," he said. "The Good Roads and perhaps the Reapportionment bill will be passed on Monday night."

FLUNG FROM MOTOR CYCLE.

Edward K. Wallace Mortally Injured, It Is Believed.

Edward K. Wallace, the 18-year-old son of Edward C. Wallace, a wealthy iron manufacturer, who lives at 787 Fifth Avenue and has an office at 66 Broadway, was thrown from his motor cycle on Jerome Avenue at 200th Street yesterday morning, and was taken apparently mortally injured to the Fordham Hospital. Caleb E. Bragg, a Yale student who was on his way to New Haven in a touring car with a party of friends, took Wallace to the hospital.

Bragg saw the motor cycle hit a stone and the rider strike on his head thirty feet from the machine. He was going at a high rate of speed, and had passed the Bragg car by about a hundred yards when the cycle was seen to buck and hurl the rider over the handle bars.

Bragg stopped his machine and with his friends hurried to Wallace's assistance. They hurried with him to the Fordham Hospital. There for an hour the young man remained unconscious, despite all efforts to revive him. Finally he came to sufficiently to whisper his name and address, and sank into a coma immediately after.

The boy's parents were notified of the accident, and Dr. Joseph A. Blake of 601 Madison Avenue was summoned in consultation with Dr. Higgins, a hospital physician. They said that Wallace's skull was fractured.

Meanwhile Bragg and his companions, after leaving their names and addresses, had gone on to New Haven. Unless Wallace recovers enough to make a statement as to just how the accident happened, the story told by Bragg will be accepted by Coroner Dolan. According to Bragg, the motor cycle must have struck an obstacle that Wallace did not see. The machine, after its rider was thrown, fell in the road, and the wheels continued to spin until the power was shut off.

Last night the young man's father went to the hospital with Dr. Brewer, and he, assisted by Drs. Dolan and Higgins of the hospital, performed an operation upon young Wallace. After the operation it was said that the outcome was doubtful.

FORGED $100,000 IN BONDS.

Broker Jumps from Moving Train to Elude Pursuers and Escapes.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, April 29.—The forgery of $100,000 worth of improvement bonds of Wood County, Ohio, was brought to light to-day. At the same time the mysterious disappearance of Arthur L. Rich, a prominent broker, became known to the general public. It is believed he is now on the way to Honduras, having eluded pursuit by jumping from the window of a Pullman car at Dayton, Ohio.

Brokers who were associated with Rich in several large business deals have taken up $65,000 worth of spurious bonds that were pledged with the banks as collateral for loans, and have secured these institutions against loss. It is also known that Rich personally placed $25,000 worth of bonds with other banks, but the names of the institutions could not be learned to-day. Rich's defalcations became known last Monday to his close business associates, P. S. Briggs & Co. and C. H. Wooley, who had engaged in a deal with him to take over the gas, water, and electric plant of Beloit, Wis.

Mr. Briggs offered $2,000 of the bonds at the Fifth National Bank as collateral. President Hirsch, who had seen the genuine bonds, at once pronounced those offered by Briggs as worthless. The next morning Briggs had Rich in his office, seized him by the throat, and made him promise to take up the forged bonds.

On Monday evening Briggs and Attorney Charles Shaw saw Rich board a train for Buffalo. Rich locked himself in a stateroom. They boarded the train and posted themselves outside the door.

When the train reached Springfield, Ohio, Shaw ordered a porter to unlock the door. The stateroom was empty. It is believed Rich left the train at Dayton, Ohio, the first stop after leaving Cincinnati.

On Wednesday morning Rich was seen here again, boarding a train for Louisville, on his way to New Orleans. Mr. Briggs took up the forged bonds at Janesville, Wis., and in this city. Mrs. Rich has admitted that the bonds were forged, but it is not known how the forgeries were accomplished.

PARK ROWERS UPSET.

Are Easily Rescued, Though—Night Rowing Not Barred Now.

Park Commissioner Butler decided recently that boating on the lake in Central Park was not dangerous, and that consequently the boats would be operated again. Yesterday a rowboat capsized with two boys in it. Both could swim, so they escaped drowning.

The boys were William Flynn of 328 East Eighty-first Street and Hall Sweeney of 88 East End Avenue. They hired a boat in Central Park yesterday, and in attempting to change seats after rowing on the lake one of them tumbled overboard. The other boy, in trying to save his companion, upset the boat. Both boys sank. Hundreds who had witnessed the accident from the banks of the lake concluded that the boys had been drowned. The boys reappeared, however, and kept afloat by swimming until several boats went to their rescue. Then while crowds of women on the lake banks were shouting hysterically for the police the boys were dragged out of the water by three men. The boys were taken ashore, and went home hatless and water-soaked.

Last Summer Park Commissioner Pallas prohibited boating on the lake at night. Yesterday the announcement was made that Park Commissioner Butler had issued an order revoking that of the late Mr. Pallas, and allowed boats to be hired out until 10 o'clock at night. The park police said they had heard nothing official about such an order, and consequently they would put a stop to night boating if it was attempted to-night.

Mrs. E. R. Thomas Ill at the St. Regis.

Mrs. E. R. Thomas, wife of the horseman, is ill in the St. Regis Hotel, where the Thomas family has been quartered while alterations are being made to their house at 17 West Fifty-seventh Street. It was denied at the hotel last night that an operation had been performed on Mrs. Thomas. The clerk said she hoped to be out in a few days.

DOWIE IN TABERNACLE DEFIES HIS ENEMIES

Too Weak to Stand, He Is Yet Full of Fight.

SAYS HE HAS DONE NO WRONG

While Deposed Prophet Speaks Voliva Conducts a Rival Meeting in Zion College Building.

CHICAGO, April 29.—Standing with great effort before an audience of 2,500 persons in Zion Tabernacle this afternoon, John Alexander Dowie charged his enemies, if any were present, to make their accusations before the whole congregation.

The followers of Voliva, the new leader in Zion City's affairs, however, were at that moment attending a rival meeting set for the same hour at the Zion College building. There 5,000 of the city's inhabitants were gathered, together with the Zion choir, now divested of its ecclesiastical garb, and the Zion band and orchestra.

Those who listened to the words of Dowie were for the most part visitors brought in by electric cars and railroad trains. In front of the platform and in the choir loft were probably 150 faithful Dowieites.

Dowie was borne bodily by two stalwart negro attendants from an ante room to the platform and deposited before the elaborate altar. He was attired in a new apostolic robe of white, gold, and purple. On his head was a turban of marvelous pattern, embroidered in purple and gold. He delivered his address seated before the altar. Only occasionally, when roused to an unusual pitch of earnestness, did he rise.

Mrs. Dowie, who has severed her allegiance with Voliva, sat in a wicker chair among Dowie's followers in the congregation. Except for ex-Mayor R. D. Harper, Dowie was alone on the platform. Dowie announced the hymns and led in prayer in a firm voice. He prefaced his sermon by a spirited denial of the charges that have been brought against him by Voliva and others.

"They say I've taken the people's money—do you believe it?" he asked. Answers of "yes" and "no" came from different parts of the audience. A man who said "yes" was singled out by Dowie. Pointing a trembling finger at the man, Dowie asked him to stand up and "tell what money I took and when." The man sat still. A guard was ordered to compel the man to stand, but he sat silent.

Then it was that Dowie arose and demanded that any of those present who had anything to charge against him should confront him. There was no response.

Dowie paid a tribute to Mrs. Dowie. "My wife has some noble qualities," he said, "but she was misled and imposed upon. They used her until they were through with her and then cast her aside. My son played tricks on me which he ought not to have done, but he, too, was deceived."

Dowie made his first appearance since his return to Zion City yesterday in the Tabernacle at 6:30 o'clock this morning, when he conducted a prayer and praise service. About 100 were present.

Voliva held a similar meeting at that hour, and it was largely attended. Dowie has taken up his abode in Shiloh House, where he intends to remain in retirement until after the decision of the court in his injunction suit against Voliva.

BUYS ANOTHER NEWSPAPER.

Pittsburg Steel Man and Politician Now Owns Three.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 30.—Announcement will be made this morning in The Pittsburg Gazette and The Pittsburg Times of the purchase of the latter paper by George T. Oliver, the steel manufacturer and Republican politician, who is also the owner of the former paper as well as The Chronicle-Telegraph, an evening paper. The Times was purchased from the estate of the late Senator C. L. Magee, and it is understood that the price paid was $750,000, not including The Times Building, which will be taken over by a local real estate firm.

It is said that Mr. Oliver's object in purchasing The Times was merely as a business venture and the desire to own the only morning Republican newspaper in the city. With to-morrow's issue The Times will cease to exist as an individual paper, and will be merged with the Gazette, the latter appearing under the name of The Times-Gazette on Tuesday morning.

M. E. Gable, the largest minority stockholder of The Times, and its managing editor, is hurrying here from San Francisco. He was not advised of the sale. It is rumored that he will start a new morning paper to take the place of The Times.

TO BUILD BIG SUGAR PLANT.

Factory on Nipe Bay Will Crush 5,000 Tons of Cane Daily.

Interests affiliated with the United Fruit Company—the Banana Trust—are placing contracts here for the construction and equipment of what it is said will be the largest cane sugar factory in the world. The project is being undertaken in the name of the Nipe Bay Company, a $7,000,000 concern of which Andrew W. Preston, President of the United Fruit Company, is the head.

About 130,000 acres of land bordering on Nipe Bay, on the northern coast of Cuba, have been bought, and nearly $5,000,000 will be spent. It is planned to handle 5,000 tons of sugar cane daily. This will mean the dumping on the conveying apparatus of a ton of cane every seventeen second day and night in the grinding season. Nearly 8,000 tons of steel will be used in the building of the sugar house.

The machinery will be entirely of American manufacture. Fully 100 miles of railroad will be constructed on the property.

CARS CRASH IN WESTCHESTER

At Least 20 Hurt, Two Women Seriously, at a Switching Point.

A crowded trolley car of the Westchester Line crashed at full speed into a standing Williamsbridge trolley car at Tremont Avenue and 179th Street just after 10 o'clock last night. The Westchester car smashed its own front platform and the rear platform of the Williamsbridge car, broke every pane of glass in both cars, flung its passengers off their feet, pinned the conductor of the Williamsbridge car between the door at the rear platform and the dashboard, and severely injured Mrs. William J. Carson, of 2,308 Grand Avenue, who was a passenger on the Williamsbridge car. She received possible internal injuries.

At least twenty other passengers on the Westchester car were slightly injured, but refused medical assistance. Even Mrs. Carson insisted on going home. Miss Ellen Lindeman of 833 Bushwick Avenue, Brooklyn, was more severely injured than most of the others, but she refused medical aid. A seven-year-old girl named Huber, living at 509 East 102d Street, was also slighty injured. Traffic was suspended for half an hour while the cars were being pulled apart.

The collision was on the east-bound track. The Westchester car had just returned from a trip to Westchester Village. At One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Street and Tremont Avenue there is a switch used to send the Westchester cars back to Westchester Village on the east track. The Westchester car took the switch at full speed.

On the track, not far from the switch, lay the Williamsbridge car awaiting the signal to start.

In the crash of the falling glass came screams from the women. Ambulance calls were turned in to Fordham Hospital, and Dr. Heintz responded.

The two cars nearly telescoped each other.

ROOSEVELT AFTER 1908.

To Keep on Battling for Economic Reforms—May Enter Cabinet.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—President Roosevelt will not retire from public life when his Administration ends, and it does not seem likely that he will have any difficulty in finding a place wherein to continue his labors. He intends to keep on battling for the rest of his life for the economic reforms on which his heart is set, and of which his demand for railroad rate regulation and suggestions for an inheritance tax are only the first steps.

A report is current here that if the next Presidential election turns out to the President's liking he would be invited to become Secretary of State, the Panama Canal being transferred to the jurisdiction of the State Department. No work would be more satisfactory to the President than bringing to a successful finish the great enterprise which was begun under him. Such an arrangement, it is said, is likely to be made if Secretary Taft, or any other person who stands as flatly as he does for all the Roosevelt policies, should become President. Mr. Roosevelt's influence in such an Administration would not be much less than that of the new President himself.

MUENTER NOT YET FOUND.

Harvard Instructor, Wanted for Wife Murder, Still at Large.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 29.—Erich Muenter, the Harvard instructor in German who is wanted by the Cambridge police in connection with the recent death of his wife, is still to be found. It was learned by the police to-day, however, that Muenter visited his mother and a sister in Monravia, Cal., a town about twenty-five miles from Los Angeles, shortly after he left Chicago on April 20.

Miss Bertha Muenter, a sister of the instructor, arrived in Cambridge from Chicago to-day, and went direct to the Muenter home, at 107 Oxford Street. She rang the bell and the call was answered by two police Inspectors, who were in possession of the house, and a student, F. E. Bryant, who had rooms in the house.

The Inspectors informed Miss Muenter of the charge of murder preferred against her brother, and it is said that the young woman became hysterical. She was taken to the home of Mrs. Derrick, the neighbor who accompanied Mr. Muenter to Chicago with the body of his wife and the infant child, and no one but physicians have been allowed to see her.

MANY MINERS WOUNDED.

Windber Union and Non-Union Men Clash at Paint Creek.

JOHNSTOWN, Penn., April 29.—Union and non-union miners clashed again last night at Paint Creek Mines near Windber, where, a week ago, a mob had to be dispersed by a volley from the muskets of the deputies. As a result of last night's riot two men are dying in the hospital at Windber, a third is probably fatally stabbed, several others sustained various injuries, and seven men are under arrest for inciting to riot.

Since the last trouble the saloons at Windber have been kept closed, and last night the men visited the saloons at Paint Creek. A union and non-union man got into a quarrel and soon blows were struck. The battle lasted for half an hour, and when the crowd dispersed men were lying along the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks for a distance of fifty yards, bleeding from stabs and bullet wounds.

The Sheriff at Windber was notified, and with twenty-one deputies arrived after the riot was over. They arrested the leaders, and had the wounded taken to the Windber Hospital.

ENGINE RAN THROUGH FLAME.

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 29.—The fire at the Bay Way Refining Company's plant at Elizabethport burned fiercely from midnight until 5 o'clock this morning. The large receiving station, the power house, the office building, and the large wharf and warehouse on the wharf were destroyed. Six oil tanks blew up, but eighteen metal tanks remained standing. The burning oil flowed into Staten Island Sound, but the tide was running out, thus saving the water front at Elizabeth.

The engineer of the Bay Way Refining Company, soon after the fire started, set the steam pipes going and pumped oil from six tanks into oil cars, which were hauled away to a place of safety by a locomotive whose engineer made a sensational run through sheets of flame. The total loss is estimated at $100,000; insurance about $75,000.

HOW STANFORD FELL IN HEAPS OF RUINS

Almost Utter Destruction of the University Buildings.

ROCKED AS IN A GALE AT SEA

The Shock Was One of the Severest on Record—Railroad Tunnels Now Corkscrew Shaped.

From a Staff Correspondent.

PALO ALTO, Cal., April 29.—To realize thoroughly the terrific force of the earthquake of April 18 one must visit this place, which is supposed to be only four miles from the centre of disturbance.

It is this place that was chosen as the site of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, to the establishment and endowment of which one of the largest fortunes ever amassed in America was almost all devoted. The university buildings cover an enormous area, and for its size the institution has been regarded as the most finely equipped and perfectly designed in the world. The buildings, all of red sandstone and of "mission" design, were constructed specially with the view to withstanding earthquakes. The main quadrangle alone has a circumference of one mile, while in the grounds are dozens of buildings devoted to various departments and to the general use of the university.

A few yards from the Palo Alto station is the main entrance to the university grounds. It is—or rather was—a massive gateway of stone which cost $25,000. It is now a ruin, and the great dragons which surmounted it lie smashed to pieces on the ground. From this gateway leads an avenue of palms a mile long, ending in an immense memorial arch. This is an even worse wreck than the gateway, almost the entire top, with its finely carved frieze, having been demolished.

Before examining the university buildings, when I arrived yesterday, I made a detour, in order to see the monuments in the grounds. The exquisite white marble memorial to Henry Lathrop, Mrs. Stanford's brother, has been demolished, while a few yards away the mausoleum of the Stanford family shows not a crack.

The first building reached was the museum, a big structure with an elaborate façade. It has been frightfully damaged, the whole roof of the art gallery having fallen in and part of the roof of the other wing. Statues on the façade were thrown to the ground, while the figure of Gutenberg, which stood before the entrance, is now represented by the pedestal and a pair of shoes.

Of another building, devoted to the department of chemistry, the entire centre is a wreck. Even the main flight of steps of solid stone has been torn away as though mined and blown up.

Roble Hall, the female students' dormitory, is in little better shape. It is a three-story building, and the roof fell in, demolishing every floor. Some girls were sleeping in the building, and it seems miraculous that none was killed. It is said that half a dozen girls fell clear from the top story to the basement.

I next examined the gymnasium, just completed, and which never had been used. It is said to have been the finest building of its kind in existence, with many marble statues on the façade, and inside were immense baths and every conceivable convenience. It is an absolute ruin, not even the shell remaining. There is nothing to do there but to clear away the mountain of débris and build anew.

A similar disaster befell another big new building, the library, which was also just completed and was about to be dedicated. This structure was surmounted by a beautiful gilded dome, and in design was more elaborate than any other of the university buildings, with the exception of the chapel. Every penny spent on it is lost, and the work must be done all over again.

The building devoted to zoology and physiology was not much damaged, the injury being confined to the façade. It was here that one of the most extraordinary phenomena connected with the earthquake occurred. A statue of Carrara marble fell from a niche through the hard cement pavement, and was dug out of the ground without a crack or scratch upon it. Workmen had just recovered the figure when I arrived.

I visited the home of the President of the university, Dr. David Starr Jordan, and went through the house, in which the plaster was peeled from every wall as cleanly as an orange skin.

President Jordan and his family were at home at the time of the earthquake, and describe the sensation as similar to being at sea in a heavy gale. Dr. Jordan is a well-known authority on seismic phenomena, and has experienced many earthquakes in this and other countries. He believes the shock of April 18 was not only one of the severest, but also one of longest in duration on record.

Passing the old assembly hall and library, which was not much damaged, I reached the main quadrangle, which from the outside shows little of the effects of the earthquake. Inside, however, is the scene of the greatest disaster the university has suffered. The memorial chapel, the pride of the institution and one of the most exquisitely finished of modern buildings in the world, has been damaged terribly. The interior of this chapel was almost entirely covered with mosaics, and every window was a gem of stained glass. Elaborate carving was everywhere. The rarest marbles were brought from various countries, and the delicacy of their design prevented the whole from becoming overornate. One fault there was in the architecture of the exterior, and this fault, as President Jordan remarked to me, caused the ruin of the building. The structure, which was built in "mission" style, was surmounted by a Gothic spire, and this spire crashed through the roof and demolished the larger part of the interior. The chapel, however, has not been damaged beyond hope of repair. Though the mosaics of the nave and chancel were badly cracked, they can be restored, and some of the windows are intact. An immense heap of débris in the chancel still buries most of the heroic-sized marble statues of the prophets and apostles which stood on either side of the altar, but the chances are they are all ruined.

In the midst of the desolation, President Jordan remains optimistic for the future of the university. Only a handful of students remains, and no work will be done until after the Summer vacation, but President Jordan hopes that by that time temporary repairs will have been completed and that soon afterward the work of reconstruction will have been begun.

In the meantime, careful examinations will be made of the various buildings and an attempt made to render the new structures as nearly earthquake-proof as possible. It is difficult, however, to see what lessons can be learned or inferences drawn. On returning I passed through avenues lined with homes of the professors and fraternity buildings. While the university was carefully designed to withstand earthquakes, no such attempt was made in the case of these houses, and not half a dozen of the latter have been damaged.

Indeed, the recent earthquake seems to have been one of the most "freakish" ever experienced. An official of the Southern Pacific Railroad tells me the narrow-gauge railway to Santa Cruz has been so badly damaged that it will be months before trains will again be run. There are many tunnels on this line, and in various instances these tunnels, formerly straight lines, are now corkscrew-shaped. A gentleman living near San José woke up to find his prized flower garden turned into a lake of mud, from which a dozen geysers were spouting gracefully.

BACK TO THE WHITE HOUSE.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt Return from Their Short Cruise.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—President and Mrs. Roosevelt, who left here yesterday for a cruise down the Potomac on the Sylph, returned at 8:30 o'clock this evening. The first part of the day furnished ideal weather for the outing, but clouds gathered in the afternoon, and a light rain was falling during the last hour or two of the trip.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt entered the carriage in waiting, and were driven directly to the White House.

CAR HITS AN AUTOMOBILE.

Throws Out William D. Gaston and His Wife in Brooklyn.

A trolley car of the Fifth Avenue line in Brooklyn struck an automobile yesterday afternoon at Eighteenth Street. The car, which was in charge of Motorman William Dodde of 5,504 Fifth Avenue, hit the automobile as it was crossing in front of it.

William D. Gaston of 235 Seventy-second Street, Brooklyn, the owner of the machine, was driving it, and he and his wife, Mrs. Louise Gaston, 60 years old, were thrown out. Mrs. Gaston's injuries were attended to by an ambulance surgeon. Then she went home. Two wheels of the automobile were smashed and it was otherwise damaged.

VATICAN'S PLAN ACCEPTED.

ROME, April 29.—The plan devised by the Vatican for the division of the $7,000,000 paid by the United States for the friar lands in the Philippines, has been accepted by the Dominicans and substantially agreed to by the other religious orders.

The Vatican will retain the principal. A portion of the interest, in the form of an allowance, will be given annually to the Philippine dioceses, and the remainder to the religious orders in the islands to be divided by them according to the agreement.

FINED ONE CENT.

This for Crossing the Park Grass—Court Prison Yawned Even Then.

Robert H. Fowler, 22 years old, of 60 East Sixty-eighth Street, was a prisoner before Magistrate Walsh in the Yorkville Court yesterday. He was charged by Policeman Powers with having crossed the grass in Central Park Saturday afternoon, although the policeman had warned him to keep off.

The young man said that he had a permit from the Department of Parks to go on the grass, but that he did not have it with him at the time. He exhibited the permit to the Magistrate, and he was fined 1 cent. Fowler had only a five-dollar bill. This the clerk could not change, and Fowler was in danger of being taken to the court prison until a reporter gave him a cent.

FLEE FROM FLOOD OF MUD.

Washed Down from Vesuvius, It Forces 800 Persons to Quit Homes.

NAPLES, April 29.—The weather to-day in the region of Mount Vesuvius was good. Reports that are coming in show that the damage done by the torrents of mud washed from the mountainside by the heavy rainfall of last week was great.

The mud, mixed with which were cinders and basaltic stones, invaded all places and killed many animals. At Pacciano, a town of 800 inhabitants, the flood obstructed the doors of houses so that the people were obliged to escape through the windows.

The Duchess of Aosta to-day braved the dangers and went to Ottajano in order to ascertain the extent of the damage done by the mud.

King Edward and Queen Alexandra have been unable to make their desired visit to the royal observatory on Vesuvius.

FROM ATLANTA TO THE SEA.

The Rev. Father Sherman Will Follow His Father's Line of March.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 29.—The Rev. Father Thomas Sherman, a son of Gen. W. T. Sherman and a priest in the Roman Catholic Church, arrived at Fort Oglethorpe to-day. He will start out to-morrow, accompanied by a detail of the Twelfth Cavalry, following the routes of his father's famous march to the sea.

The detail of the Twelfth Cavalry will accompany him as far as Atlanta, and at Fort McPherson another detail will be assigned to conduct him to the sea.

The bodies of the victims were found buried under his shop and in his garden.

PLAN A BOND ISSUE TO REBUILD CITY

San Francisco to Ask Congress to Guarantee $200,000,000.

MORTGAGE ON WHOLE TOWN

More Shelter for the Homeless—Army Stops Loot of Supplies—Money Famine Relief in Sight.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 29.—Although to-day was the second Sunday since the earthquake and fire of April 18, it was the first day of rest San Francisco has experienced since the conflagration wiped out half of the city and made 200,000 persons homeless.

Last Sunday conditions were too much disturbed to permit of rest for the body or peace for the mind. Last week saw the passing of the acme of grief and desolation, and the dawn of order and rehabilitation. Stock was taken of the losses and plans were conceived for the future.

To-day found every one confident of rapid progress from now on in rebuilding the city.

All possible work of a municipal character was suspended to-day, and the tired officers, who for nearly two weeks have labored incessantly, with little sleep, to bring a semblance of order out of chaotic conditions, took advantage of the lull to secure greatly needed rest and pay some attention to pressing personal needs.

Probably the most important development of the day was the promulgation by Gen. Greely of his plan for the distribution of relief supplies. Reports of theft, deception, misappropriation, waste, and extravagance have been received constantly since provisions and clothing began pouring in to succor the afflicted, and it is now believed that misuse of supplies will hereafter be impossible. In the first days after the fire there was little check kept of foodstuffs, the main idea being to provide against want, and many abuses arose.

But even when the lines were more tightly drawn unscrupulous persons took advantage of the general distress, and it was realized that the salvation of the situation rested with the army.

According to the plans of Gen. Greely, the unburned part of the city will be divided into seven districts in charge of army officers, who will assume control of all the relief stations now established. Responsible civilians will be installed under salary at the sub-stations for clerical work and daily records and checks will be kept.

As the period of extreme distress has passed, the issuance of rations will at the earliest possible moment be confined to helpless women and chidren, and refused to able men. Luxuries will be confined to infants and invalids. Rigid economy is enjoined on every officer engaged in relief work. In each of the seven districts there will be 100 stations. The amount of food to be allowed each person, with latitude for certain conditions, is specified. The allowance, in a measure, is based on the army ration.

At a meeting to-day of James D. Phelan, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and some prominent lawyers and bankers, a plan was broached for financing the city, which it is hoped will meet with the indorsement of the General Committee. As it is estimated that the city has suffered a loss of $200,000,000 by fire, it is said that there is not sufficient money in San Francisco to reconstruct the city, and that the people must look elsewhere for funds to rehabilitate their destroyed fortunes.

Mr. Phelan said that if the money were borrowed through ordinary channels the rate of interest would add a burden that could not be borne under the conditions. The plan of Mr. Phelan is to frame legislation to present to Congress, asking the United States to indorse the proposed bonds of San Francisco. With this guarantee of the Government, the city would be able to go into the financial markets of the world and borrow the needed money at a low rate of interest on bonds to run for fifty years and secured by a mortgage on the best portion of the city.

Mr. Phelan asserted that such legislation would not be new to Congress. It was by such measures that the Central Pacific and the Union Pacific Railroads were built, and, more recently, by like legislation, railways in the Philippines became assured to the people of the islands.

Mr. Phelan, who is Chairman of the Municipal Finance Committee, to-day said:

"The demands on the Finance Committee are very great, and we do not see how we can meet them if the conditions continue. There is no money in circulation. The banks are closed because they dare not open their heated vaults, and when they do open them they will probably pay out slowly, as they realize upon their assets. They expect next week to cash the checks of well-known customers to the extent of $500 each.

"That measure will help in a small degree the resumption of business. There is sufficient food supply in sight for the present, but the great problem for us is how to provide for the absolutely destitute, for the sick, the old, the children, and all other dependent persons.

"The means of support of the hospitals, orphanages, religious and charitable associations of all kinds, are absolutely cut off. The local Red Cross estimates that $1,000 a day is necessary for the hospitals. To set these institutions on their feet will be work of years, because the local people are unequal to the task of supporting such institutions and at the same time meeting the demands of their households and business, the necessary rebuilding of stores and homes, and ordinary taxations for public purposes.

"We are formulating a plan to present to our committee by which money or credit can be secured for the rehabilitation of our workers in the institutions and the rebuilding of our city.

"Everybody is willing to work and to make necessary sacrifices, if the tools are put into their hands, to re-establish the social, economic, and commercial conditions which prevailed before the fire.

"The idea in our minds is to get large sums of money at low rates of interest, secured by the improvements which we will erect. Such moneys would be amply secured, and, as in the case of Chicago, give us a new city and give to all the means of resuming their ordinary vocations in life with the promise of an abundant reward for their steadfastness, within a period of less than five years.

"Everybody is hopeful and courageous, and the prosperous communities of the United States will, we are sure, answer our call for help. Their spontaneous and generous aid has deeply touched the hearts of our peope."

The work of furnishing the necessaries of life to the homeless and needy continues with more system and with unabated energy. To-morrow the Red Cross expects to have an individual ticket system in operation, and this will aid the army in preventing abuses.

The number of persons without substantial shelter has been reduced to a minimum. The housing committee reported to-day that applications for accommodations have ceased. The work of this committee has been lessened by departures of many people to other parts of the State.

Religious services were held in the open air in many places to-day, and in churches that were pronounced safe for immediate use throngs gathered to listen to sermons.

The disposition of the people to make the best of the recent disaster was aided to-day by the resumption of Sunday afternoon concerts in Golden Gate Park. These concerts have always been a favorite Sunday recreation in San Francisco, and in addition to an excellent programme given in the park, a volunteer band discoursed music for a short time to-day in the "tented city" at Jefferson Square.

There were some extensions in the electric car service to-day, and people in the remote suburbs to-morrow will be afforded quick transportation to the water front and points in the burned area, where they may be obliged to labor.

City officers were highly elated to-day to find the contents of the municipal treasury intact. The vaults were a part of the City Hall that escaped the fire. An expert opened the doors this morning and found gold, silver, and securities scattered over the floor, but safe and unharmed. The vault contained $5,800,000 in currency, $300,000 in securities of the German Savings Bank, and $12,000,000 of unsold city bonds.

Shipping is beginning to resume its normal course. There were a number of departures of steamers to-day and several arrivals.

The steamer Imur arrived from Victoria, B. C., with 500 tons of provisions, given by the people of British Columbia. The cargo was admitted duty free.

BURKE WILL REBUILD.

To Sell Irish Estate and Reconstruct Damaged Buildings.

LONDON, April 29.—Richard Burke, Master of the Tipperary Hunt, who married Miss Donoghue, an American woman, is giving up hunting and will sell his establishment.

It is Burke's intention to go to San Francisco to supervise the reconstruction of his damaged property there. He is part owner in many buildings in San Francisco.

THE TELEGRAPH TIE-UP AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE

On Wednesday One Wire to the East, with Interruptions.

THREE RESPONDED NEXT DAY

18 on Friday, but All Ended at a Pole by the Waterside—Instruments for Only a Few—Real Communication Saturday Night.

From a Staff Correspondent.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 29.—For the first time in its history San Francisco was absolutely without telegraphic communication with the outside world for three hours on the morning of April 18. Following the earthquake, which occurred at 5:13, and for three hours thereafter, not a single Western Union wire of a score or more usually in operation was in service. But meanwhile a few brief bulletins of the disaster had been sent out from the Postal building in San Francisco before it fell a prey to the flames that cut off that connection.

Closely through every hour of the day and night messages are speeding to most remote sections of the globe, and to have their workings stopped for a minute is an event in telegraphic history. Quick to realize the havoc that could be wrought by so mighty a tremblor as that which preceded the big fire Harry Jeffs, the wire chief of the Western Union, who lives in Oakland, lost no time in reaching the Mole for the purpose of testing the scores of wires which leave the water at that point.

It took the expert but a few moments to ascertain that communication in San Francisco beyond the ferry building was entirely cut off. Not an instrument responded to his efforts. Turning his attention to wires extending from the end of the pier to various stations leading out of the State Jeffs found that they, too, had been hopelessly killed by the great shake.

The seriousness of the situation called for quick action, for aside from the great monetary loss to the company resulting from even a short interruption to the service was the seriousness of being entirely cut off from the outside world. Taking an engine, the wire chief started out from the Mole, and, climbing the poles at intervals along the way, tested the wires to locate the break.

In this way he covered the entire pier until he reached the shore at West Oakland. Here, at a pole almost at the land's end, after calling on each dead wire separately, he at last received a response from Sacramento, and he knew he had at last found a point of severed communication.

Perched on a thirty-foot pole, Jeffs gave the capital the first story of the disaster sent out over a Western Union wire at 8:30 o'clock in the morning. In succession, by means of relays, Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Denver, and other places heard of the calamity that had befallen the metropolis of the Pacific.

For eighteen hours Jeffs stuck to his lofty perch, trying with the patience of Job to straighten out the tangle in the mass of wires, with a small set of testing instruments he had obtained at the pier. This was an heroic task, for the mighty sway of the temblor had brought the wires together, tying them up in great confusion.

By Wednesday afternoon the break between the pole at the land end in West Oakland, and the pier had been closed with one through wire. The following day, Thursday, three more wires were restored, and Friday eighteen were in full working order from the pole at which the break was first located.

This did not mean a restoration of the Western Union service by any means, for with the burning of the company's building in San Francisco, all the instruments, batteries, and other appurtenances were lost completely, and the company was therefore as badly off as if its wires had not been restored. But from his operating office on the pole Jeffs was instructed to call upon all nearby towns and cities to rush every instrument that could be spared to this city.

Supt. Frank Lamb, who was in Goldfield, was communicated with, and St. Paul, Helena, and other Western distributing points were ordered to rush telegraphic supplies. Louis McKissick, electrician of the Western Union, was communicated with in Chicago, and within three hours McKissick had six carloads of electric instruments, batteries, dynamos, and other necessities started westward, with himself in charge.

This train arrived Saturday night, April 21, and before one could realize it the Western Union had an entirely new office in operation in West Oakland. At first when there was only one working wire the chief had prevailed upon a woman who occupied a one-story cottage almost at the water's edge to allow him to place an instrument in her parlor. As other wires were put in commission from Jeffs's pole they engaged other rooms, and finally induced the good-natured woman to surrender the place entirely. The first wires made ready for use were at once burdened with Government and Associated Press dispatches.

But the place was too small, and within a few hours the company was forced to engage the dining room of an old hotel a block away on Seventh Street. In these cramped quarters the Western Union has handled business three times that of ordinary times.

Those unfamiliar with a big telegraphic service can hardly appreciate what a mighty work was accomplished in installing wires, switchboards, and all appurtenances necessary to operate eighteen wires in the short time of four days.

In addition to installing an entirely new plant, the company has erected a large corrugated iron and wooden building in West Oakland, and this will constitute the main operating department for some months.

When the big earthquake shook the wires into confusion the Pacific cable operator was in communication with Honolulu. The sensitive instruments failed to respond for a short time, but within fifteen minutes after the quake the service was completely restored.

The Dowager-Queen of Italy purchases a METROSTYLE PIANOLA

Salle Aeolian, 32 Avenue de l'Opera.
PARIS, April 6, 1906.

THE AEOLIAN COMPANY, New York.

Recently our representative Mr. Dubois was at Rome and had the pleasure of giving a concert to H. M. the Dowager-Queen of Italy in her Palace. The audience was composed of the Dowager-Queen and her guests and we are glad to say the concert was a great success.

Her Majesty greatly admired the instrument, especially the Metrostyle device, which she found "as precious and ingenious as it is simple." She was very much surprised at the effects obtained, and contrary to custom she rose from her seat and went on to the platform to listen to the "Suite" by d'Albert,—which, as you will see from the enclosed programme, was the first number of the concert. She stood immediately behind our representative until the end of the second number, when she asked for full information about the instrument.

She stayed until the end of the concert and warmly congratulated Mr. Dubois for the way in which the programme had been rendered and also for the wonderful capacity of the Pianola.

As a result of this concert,—which took place at the end of February, we received last week an order for a Metrostyle Pianola from the Gentleman-in-waiting to Her Majesty the Dowager-Queen of Italy, for the use of the Queen. The instrument has been sent direct from Paris.

The Eternal Feminine Uppermost Amid Misery—Blowing Up a Palace—A Real Government.

THIRD LETTER.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

OAKLAND, Cal., April 23.—We are so accustomed to dismay and disaster that nothing surprises us any more. Even the earthquake shocks we have learned to take with a sort of equanimity. A shock which a few days ago would have sent the whole community scurrying in wild terror to the streets is now taken with a tolerable degree of composure. For we have had smaller shocks at varying intervals ever since the big one of Wednesday morning.

All time values have left us—none of us knows quite how long it is since last Wednesday morning. There have been no time limitations for us.

There was very little sleep for any of us, for how could we sleep with the rain pouring down in wild sheets and floods of water? We ourselves are sheltered, but we think of the people near us, lying on the rain-soaked ground, with the storm beating mercilessly down upon them. We think of the delicate women and children huddled in tents at the Presidio, no floor to the tents, with mattresses spread on the wet ground. The great ocean beach is strewn with tents, and the poor people in them are passing the night with the pitiless beating of the storm overhead, and the great roar of the ocean, as it surges high upon the beach. Those of us with homes spend hours of the night thinking of our friends who are homeless.

The morning hours are full of activity. Soldiers from all over the coast are arriving, and their coming brings a sense of safety. Much is said about the cold-blooded shooting of citizens by the militia. But many of us have known that in this has lain our safety. It is right that a life now and then should be sacrificed for the safety of the community.

Immense wagons are going by full of provisions for the various encampments. Some one says cheerfully, "Enough to last us for three days." We brighten up. Three days, according to our present time measurement, is an endless period. San Francisco and Oakland are living only from day to day.

Exodus from the City.

Another great hegira from the ruined city is setting in. The people who fled to the Presidio and to the ocean shore are no longer afraid to come through the city, and with their belongings they are taking refuge with us, still further swelling the tide of refugees. We make our way through Oakland to the dock, where the creek boat will bring the people across. And surely never in the history of the world has such a strange sight been seen, such a unique and pathetic cavalcade.

All sorts of vehicles have been impressed into service. Market Street yesterday was only a pathway over débris, ashes, and wreckage generally. At the point of the bayonet, men were made to work, a hundred of them at a time, and by this morning there was a rough roadway. It was not a safe roadway for a minute of the time, for the tottering walls of the big buildings threatened destruction at any moment. But the big crowd that had lived through the earthquake, that had passed through the fire, took yet one more chance in reaching a place of safety across the bay in Oakland. It was a motley crowd that passed off the boat into what seemed to them a new world and a new future. They had nothing to begin on, but they had life. They did not want to look back on the dreadful experience nor the dead city there; they hated it with an intensity that made one shiver. Strange things had they seen there, and in low voices, with hate and aversion in their eyes, they told you of the powers of hell.

How good every one is, how generous, how noble! We have found out for ourselves that there is a universal brotherhood—never, never again will we doubt it.

A Pauper in Diamonds.

A woman drives from the boat a goat harnessed to a little goat wagon, in which are all her worldly possessions. Close beside her walks a woman whom we saw at the opera. She wears all her diamonds, having nothing to carry them in, and they look like a mockery, with her set face and staring eyes. She hasn't had a drink of water for hours, and she is faint from exhaustion. Her jewels seem to mock her in her misery.

Many of the men are pulling wagons and little runabouts. In one sits a woman with a month-old baby, and beside her is a little girl with her doll. The husband and father has drawn them many miles from the Presidio.

"I will look up to the hills from which cometh my strength," the woman keeps whispering over and over.

A man comes along carrying a parrot, and he begs piteously for water for the parrot.

For answer a soldier wrings the bird's neck. "We have women and children to care for," he says.

A beautiful victoria with a crest on the door comes into view. It is drawn by a woman and a man, and in it sits a woman evidently in the last stages of exhaustion. They have come many miles by the sea wall, over a long and tiresome way. As the fire drew near them a coachman in a neighboring house said: "Take this carriage, if it will be of any use to you. If you don't take it, it will burn up."

They filled the victoria with provisions—we saw eggs and milk in it—and started ahead of the fire. Their adventures would fill a book. One of the women fainted by the wayside, so the other two pulled her along, and up by the lake they are living now in the victoria. This is only a typical scene—the whole caravan is full of such stories.

The women tell us how frightful the nights have been to them. Candles were only allowed to burn until 10 o'clock, and the refugees must pass the rest of the night in utter darkness. The women beg first of all for water with which to wash their hands and faces and those of their poor little babies. Since Tuesday, nearly a week, they have had scarcely any water. A man would be promptly shot who washed his face.

Dynamite Had No Terrors.

The men tell us how familiar they have grown with scenes of horror. No one was afraid of dynamite. Men watched houses go straight up in the air fifteen feet, then collapse in a heap of ruins. They grew indifferent to it. They brought dynamite in their automobiles, and handed it to the officers quite as if they were handling sticks of wood.

They told us pathetic stories of how the people kept Sunday in ruined San Francisco. It was always such a gay San Francisco, the Paris of America, with its parks, its French restaurants, its ocean beach. Yesterday the people knelt about the ruined churches, knelt in the débris of a great earthquake and a frightful fire, while the ministers prayed for help. There were services on the beach, the only music the roar of the ocean.

There was an ever-increasing line around the bread wagons. Ministers of the Gospel stood quietly in line. One of San Francisco's leading millionaires brought a little tin pail in which to carry away his two little loaves of bread. Some girls of the smart set, who had been beautiful belles at the opera on Tuesday evening, stood in line to get their share of bread to take home to their little brothers and sisters.

But nobody thinks it is charity. I suppose away off in the distant future a sense of humor will come back to us, and some things will seem funny and amusing. We visited a man with his arm bandaged, and we said: "Were you hurt by the earthquake?" Suddenly his wife snapped up: "No, he wasn't; the matter with him is he never can remember. After the earthquake, I sent him for my hat. Of course he forgot the front steps were gone, so he fell into the cellar instead." And she gave him a withering look.

The Eternal Feminine.

In the vestibule of a church they were giving away clothes. One shivering woman was being fitted out. "Here, dear," said the woman in charge, "here is a nice, good, warm waist." "Oh, I couldn't wear it," she answered. "You know, I'm in mourning."

Another girl near by said: "Yes, please, I want a waist. I want pink and white, you know; they're my favorite colors."

Quite suddenly the smile died on our lips. A little mother came up. "I want clothes for my baby; it's cold," she said.

They took the baby from her, and a man near by said to another: "The child is dead." And we turned and fled.

We went down to Broadway to look for friends. Some people are so dazed they will make no effort to reach the homes of their friends. On the corner was a dapper youth whom we have long known.

"Everybody works but father," he was humming.

"You'll work, too," said a soldier, who was making up a hollow square of 100 men.

Our dapper friend began excuses, but there was a little, sharp prick of a bayonet. It is wonderful what a powerful argument these bayonets have been.

When next we saw him he was covered with dust and mortar.

On our way home we met a little family of five children, the oldest a bright little boy of eleven. Their little arms were full of provisions. The boy carried a box of bread and other things, and all the little ones, even to the baby, carried packages.

"We were burned out," said the boy with pride, as though in these days it was an honor to be burned out. "Mother is sick and father is taking care of her, but we won't be hungry."

I don't know what city sent those special provisions, but I wish the people of that city could have seen the five happy little children taking them home, saying, in childish glee, "We won't be hungry."

On Broadway we met one of the friends for whom we had been looking. Not long ago we had been to a reception at her home, one of the most magnificent of the palatial San Francisco homes. We hardly knew her, with the queer little sailor hat and the quaint old cape she wore.

"Yes," she said, seeing us look at them, "they're Mary's. Mary was the only one who had any money, and Mary has brought us over to you."

Blowing Up a Palace.

When we had taken her home and made her comfortable she cried:

"We did not think the fire would reach us, till a man came and told us all to get out, that they were going to dynamite the house. It was so big, you know. All the others ran out, Mary taking the children. But I ran quickly through the house for a last good-bye. There were all the old family pictures on the wall—our father's and mother's, you know; there was the children's nursery; in my room were the clothes I had worn to the opera, and on my dressing table my jewels. I was afraid of robbers, so I didn't take them, and then I ran down stairs and in the dining room were all my wedding presents. I put the latch on the door as I passed out. I was locking up for the last time the door of a happy home.

"'All out? That's good,' said a man. We went along the street and waited. Then the house went up in the air, and there was a great collapse—our home was gone.

"But that was not so dreadful as the night in the park. We were packed so closely, there was not room for one to move. Chinese, Japanese, Spanish, Italians, everybody, some sitting up, some stretched out exhausted; and so near we could almost touch the two long lines of ghastly dead bodies. And all night they slept side by side, the living and the dead—and the sky was alive with the glare of the fire, and it roared nearer and nearer all night long."

And then we made her stop. There are some things one must mercifully forget or one will go mad.

We leave her comfortable in our home and then take our way once more into the streets, doing our utmost to aid our neighbors in relief work, till our nerves can endure it no longer, and we go home.

On our way home we can see this great, surging multitude of people. You cannot get through the streets. Crowds pour up and down the streets, and the street cars can hardly push their way through the great, moving throng. As we come home we pass by some large school buildings, the basements full of clothes, with hundreds of needy people to be supplied.

A long lines of tired people—mothers and fathers, with children, with baskets, with bundles—extends far down the street.

Preparations are being made to house them for the night, and here also a temporary hospital is being established. The big hospital with a thousand cots is ready this evening. A doctor passes out with a baby in his arms. The poor baby has the measles, and the crowd falls away as the doctor passes through. A nurse comes by; she also has a baby and is running for help. Some one says the baby has membranous croup, the result of last night's exposure.

A Real Government.

To us "the Government" has always been a faraway thing—it was there, of course, and it meant law and order. We needed it, of course, but it was away off there in Washington, hazy and intangible.

Now "the Government" is something living, alive, real, strong. It is here to take care of us with great protecting arms. We are its faraway Western children—all the more dearly loved because we are so helpless so far away. It is "the Government" that we see in these great piles of flour. It is "the Government" that is represented by these stacks of bread. These long trains loaded with provisions bringing comfort to us mean "the Government."

These soldiers in blue, everywhere among us, mean for us a real, tangible Government. We are far away from all the rest of the world; a great calamity has fallen upon us; we are for the most part houseless and homeless, but we go to sleep in peace, for we are children of "the Government." M. E. C.

THE RICH OF YESTERDAY IN BREAD LINE OF TO-DAY

Sunday in Oakland Sees All Class Barriers Leveled.

HAND OF FEAR STILL HEAVY

But San Francisco's Sister City Shares with the Homeless Multitude—Refugees Continue to Come.

Special to The New York Times.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 29.—A hundred thousand strangers are here to be cared for. The fear of the earthquake still is heavy upon them, as the tremors occur at intervals. Across the bay, in the ash heaps of San Francisco, lie many Oakland fortunes. Our people are suddenly poor, but we share with this great homeless multitude as best we may.

Life is picturesque even in its sadness. Great camps afford shelter for thousands. Government stores supply them. Big teams haul from the station the provisions which mean life to all these people. The great stacks of foodstuffs, guarded by soldiers, bring renewed hope to them. Their faith in the Government is steadfast.

The city is a military encampment, with soldiers in evidence everywhere—picturesque in uniforms of blue and khaki. In great numbers they come, and great is our need of them. Crowds are still pouring into the city from outlying towns, shattered by the earthquake.

Life is a great scene of bustling activity. The business men are looking about and beginning anew. Signs of the biggest railroad and marine corporations on the coast are on small windows.

Every home is crowded with refugees. Life is along primitive lines. No one has any money. There are no chimneys, and one may see many people cooking in yards on brick ovens or in little stoves.

At the depot of supplies is gathered what we now know as the bread line. The depot itself is the bread wagon, and the bread line is the most heartbreaking picture of all. It extends for blocks, and in it you will find the millionaires of yesterday, artists, mothers leading children by the hand, all taking rations from the Government.

Some of the horror of the calamity finds a reflection in the deep despair of their faces. The big schoolhouses are places of shelter, and in the basements are clothes for the multitude. All day an eager throng has been about the doors, begging for clothes. Many have no shoes on, and mothers plead pitifully for covering for their babies. The people take only what they need.

The fire has written frightful stories on many faces. To-day a sweet-faced woman told us how a falling beam had killed her sister in the earthquake, and how she had dragged her dead body, helped now and then by wayfarers, out to a place of safety, and finally to the ferry.

Great emergencies have arisen to-day, and they are being met. The maternity home has been established. San Francisco's childrn will at least be born under shelter. Already the home is crowded.

Every day seems to bring its share of horror. One of the most heart-rending features of the great catastrophe is upon us in what appears to be a great loss of children. Distracted mothers call for their little ones, and will not be comforted. You hear sinister rumors that children have been stolen. Oregon's Governor asks that no more children without relatives be sent to that State. Hundreds of children seem to be irrevocably lost. In the big earthquake, in the rapid flight before the fire, families were separated. A large home for homeless children was established here to-day.

Thousands of people are in the big camps here and in the Presidio crying for work. Hundreds of girls who have been in the shops beg pitifully for places. Clerks are willing to work with their hands. Oakland to-day is organizing a great labor bureau.

Great open-air meetings are being held in the encampments this afternoon. All class lines have been swept away. There is only the great human cry of human need. Thousands of homeless people turn their hearts to the same God in a despairing cry for help.

Conditions are the same in the great camps across the bay in Golden Gate Park and the Presidio. Hundred of people venture on the outer edge of the ruins and swarm on Nob Hill. They wander among the late seats of the mighty.

The wreck of the Stanford home still stands, and crowds surge through it and sit in its deserted halls. But they do not go down among the burned acres of the city. Neither are Oakland people permitted to go across there to-day. It is too awful, too appalling. There is not a sign of life among the great granite boulders. The burned city is sublime in the loneliness of its desolation. It is right that to-day at least it should sit alone in its awful majesty.

Only on Market Street is there a sign of life. On a deserted car track a caravan silently pushes its way to the bay. The Sunday skies look down on supreme desolation.

Against the sombre gloom of San Francisco destruction beats the spirit of our people, purified, made nobler. Courage and hope are in the ascendancy. Together we have faced death. Side by side we must face the new life, and all that is noble rises to the test.

The sun set on a city in ruins, but it also sets on the greatest picture of universal brotherhood that the world has known.

Staten Island's Relief Fund.

At both morning and evening services in all the churches on Staten Island yesterday special prayers were offered in behalf of the San Francisco sufferers. In most of the Methodist churches and in all the Catholic churches special collections were taken for the San Francisco relief fund. It is thought that about $2,000 was contributed.

Stole 10,000 Blank Cartridges.

Four boys were arrested by the East 104th Street police last night charged with breaking into a store and stealing among other things, 10,000 blank cartridges. They were exploding the cartridges in toy revolvers, on the street car tracks, and by as many other methods as they could think of, when they were caught. They were all locked up charged with burglary. The police are looking for eight others.

"MAN WITH THE HOE" LOST.

Confirmation Secured of Its Destruction in Crocker Home.

From a Staff Correspondent.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 29.—The report that Millet's painting "The Man with the Hoe" was destroyed in the San Francisco fire is now confirmed, after having been denied.

It was supposed for some time that the picture was one of those lent for exhibition at the Bohemian Club and that it had been saved with other works of art in that building, but it turns out that "The Man with the Hoe" was in the residence of its owner, William Crocker, and was burned there. It is said that Mr. Crocker valued the picture at $125,000.

Many other valuable paintings were destroyed in the fire, though "The Man with the Hoe" was the only work of the first rank in the city. The taste of San Francisco art collectors ran in the direction of the productions of the modern French school, and in the Stanford, Crocker, and Spreckels houses were some good Corots, Diazs, Daubignys, and Fortunys.

Most of the paintings belonging to the Bohemian Club were saved, but the property of some of the members was lost; notably a valuable collection of miscellaneous works of art belonging to E. M. Greenway.

Far more serious than the loss of art objects in the estimation of San Franciscans is the loss of a large number of valuable public and private libraries.

While the Bohemian Club's pictures were saved, its library, the finest belonging to a social club in the United States, was entirely destroyed.

The Academy of Sciences lost not only its library but its magnificent geological collection, which included a number of unique specimens.

The main building of the San Francisco Free Public Library, with 130,000 books, was a total loss, and two of the six branches were destroyed. The main library contained a complete set of California newspaper files, beginning in 1846, when the first paper was published in Monterey, and a number of extremely rare pamphlets dealing with the history of the State.

Other libraries destroyed include the Mercantile, Pioneer, San Francisco Law, and Mechanics' Institute collections.

A conservative estimate of the total value of the books lost is $3,000,000.

SOME CASH FROM BANKS

Will Partly Relieve Present Distress, Which Is Acute.

From a Staff Correspondent.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 29.—At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the San Francisco Clearing House, held yesterday, it was determined to allow depositors of the banks to draw out small sums at a bank to be opened Tuesday morning in the United States Mint. Not more than $500 will be given to any individual or firm.

It is hoped that this step will help to relieve the suffering of a large number of formerly well-to-do persons, which is now perhaps more acute than the suffering of the poor refugees.

Yesterday at the Western Union office here I saw a woman drive up in a large motor car and beg that a telegram on which the messenger boy had asked the delivery fee of 25 cents be handed to her. She said she had not a penny and didn't know when she would have any money, but that as soon as she had any she would pay for the telegram. It was handed to her and the manager told me there were hundreds of similar cases.

The determination of the banks in the Clearing House Association to give relief does not, however, apply to the savings banks, which may not be opened for three weeks. Nothing will be done until the vaults are all opened and the books and accounts are available. The savings banks have so many thousands of depositors that they necessarily cannot be familiar with the condition of the accounts of more than a small percentage. The commercial banks, on the other hand, are well acquainted with the financial status of most of their customers. There is some talk of the savings banks making small emergency payments, and it is hoped that this will be done, as the condition of a great number of respectable and thrifty people is pitiable.

At the time when almost every class in the community has shown a desire to do everything possible to relieve the suffering, there is one class of which certain members have stood conspicuously aloof. I refer to the wholesale provision merchants, who, since the disaster, have been demanding cash payments from grocers and other food dealers. In consequence, retailers have been obliged to ask for cash even from old customers, and in many cases these are unable to pay.

FEWER TROOPS TO BE SENT.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Only two regiments of troops, comprising in all about 1,350 men, will be sent to San Francisco to reinforce those now there, instead of the 2,500 men, as originally proposed by Gen. Greely and sanctioned by the War Department.

The troops to go are the First Cavalry from Fort Clark and Fort Sam Houston, Texas, and the infantry regiment from Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo. A telegram asking that only the reduced number be sent was received at the War Department to-day, and orders to that effect were promptly issued. The remainder of the troops originally directed to proceed to San Francisco have been ordered not to move until further orders.

The War Department officials decline to discuss the reasons for Gen. Greely's request, but the impression given is that it is probably due to a wish of the Citizens' Committee of San Francisco not to have the Government incur the expense due to their transportation so that the money may be available for relief work instead.

The transportation charge for the men probably would have aggregated more than $100,000, which can be spent in buying rations and other necessities for the stricken people.

APRIL 1906

NEW YORK'S AID FUND INCREASED BY $125,000

Sunday Benefits for San Francisco Generously Patronized.

LARGE CHURCH COLLECTIONS

The Hippodrome Performance Nets $7,000—The Local Fund Is Now More Than $3,200,000.

Through collections taken up in churches and through religious organizations and benefit performances at theatres last night about $125,000 was added to the San Francisco relief fund in this city. This makes the grand total of this city's contribution for the aid of the earthquake sufferers somewhat more than $3,200,000.

In all the Catholic churches in Archbishop Farley's diocese the collections taken up yesterday were set aside for the relief fund. Returns from the various parishes will not be received for several days, but it is expected that something like $100,000 was contributed by all the churches where special collections were taken up yesterday.

In addition to this, collections were taken up yesterday by the Volunteers of America at a mass meeting held under the auspices of that organization at the Knickerbocker Theatre. Last night it was announced that the total amount raised at this meeting was $7,630. Of this $2,500 was given by Miss Helen Gould, who already has made three gifts of a like amount to relief funds being raised by other organizations. The Young Men's Christian Association organizations collected about $1,000.

There were seven theatrical benefit performances for the earthquake sufferers last night. In the aggregate they netted some $15,000 for the relief fund. In every case the benefits were given to crowded houses.

The largest of these benefits was at the Hippodrome where Mme. Schumann-Heink, Victor Herbert's orchestra, Joe Weber and his company, and a lot of vaudeville artists had drawn an audience that filled even the aisles. The receipts, as announced at the box office, reached $7,000.

At the Casino, where Mrs. Fiske, Margaret Anglin, De Wolf Hopper, Adele Ritchie, and others took part in the benefit performance given under the auspices of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., another audience that crowded the house from pit to gallery had assembled. The receipts from the sale of tickets alone was $3,800, while $500 more was realized from the sale of flowers and programmes. The chorus from "The Social Whirl," which is being played at the Casino, and a committee from the Professional Women's League, had charge of the sale of programmes and flowers. Mrs. Oelrichs and Mrs. Vanderbilt attended the performance, occupying one of the boxes.

At the Academy of Music, where Lillian Russell was one of the volunteer performers, a crowded house brought $2,700 for the relief fund. Ted Marks set aside half of the receipts of his Sunday concert at the American Theatre. The audience was the biggest that ever attended one of these concerts in the seven years of Mr. Marks's experience at the American. Of the receipts $454 will go to the San Francisco relief fund. Benefits were given before large audiences at the old Thalia on the Bowery, Miner's Eighth Avenue, and the Bijou Theatre in Brooklyn.

Mme. Sembrich has postponed her departure for Europe, in order to give a song recital at Carnegie Hall on Monday afternoon, May 7, in aid of the orchestra and chorus of the Metropolitan Opera House, who suffered great loss through the earthquake and fire. The musicians, almost without exception, lost their instruments, and many members of the chorus are destitute.

Thompson & Dundy had a crowd at Luna Park, and thus added $2,000 to the relief fund.

The National Mothers and Daughters' San Francisco Orphans' Relief Fund Committee sent out an appeal yesterday for funds. The organization, which is composed of some well-known women, has undertaken the care of children made orphans or left destitute through the San Francisco disaster. Contributions should be sent to the committee, care of the Astor National Bank, 18 West Thirty-fourth Street.

A bridge whist tournament for the San Francisco relief fund will be held at Sherry's on Friday afternoon, May 11, under the auspices of Miss Kate Wheelock and Mr. J. B. Elwell. There is a long list of distinguished patronesses.

TO HELP THE Y. M. C. A.

New York Audience Gives for the San Francisco Workers.

Collections for the San Francisco Young Men's Christian Association were made yesterday afternoon at the meeting of the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association at the Majestic Theatre. William M. Kingsley, President of the branch, said that the San Francisco association had only recently completed its building at a cost of $500,000, and that now it was in ruins. The officers, he said, had saved only the clothes they stood up in. The audience gave $722, which included two one-hundred-dollar bills. There were no expenses connected with the meeting, as the Majestic Theatre was lent without rent, the Seventh Regiment Band charged nothing for its services, and even the posters and tickets were supplied free of charge.

Ex-Mayor Seth Low presided. He reminded the Young Men's Christian Association men that the work of furnishing homes for San Franciscans would necessarily last for months.

The Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, pastor of the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn, was the next speaker. He said in part:

"We owe a great debt of gratitude to the press. A great deal has been said of late about the press, the universal servant, but I was never so proud of American journalism and American journalists as on this occasion. As I read the accounts of the disaster in our leading newspapers, I was convinced that in emergencies we could rely for help and inspiration on the journalistic craft of this country. Every man who sent bulletins from the post of danger was sending messages of mercy, and I should have deemed it a privilege to be counted among those men who helped us in this emergency.

"Yet when all has been said nothing can impress on us the magnitude of this disaster—350,000 people cast out of their homes! There is a gleam of comfort in the small loss of life. But if it has not so many dead, San Francisco has 350,000 living, and I say in the name of common humanity we must shelter and succor them."

Four of the band of the Seventh Regiment were in the earthquake. Justus Pfeifenschneider, Max Beier, Fred See, and N. Deyerborg are members of the Metropolitan Opera Company's orchestra, and were bidden by Mr. Kingsley to stand and show themselves to the house. John W. Hutchinson, now 85 years of age, a member of the Hutchinson family well known concertgoers forty years ago, also volunteered his services. He came on the stage bowed with age, with flowing white hair and beard, but still active. He sat at the piano and sang a composition of his own, "The Fatherhood of God, the Brotherhood of Man," with Mrs. Hutchinson joining in the chorus.

VOLUNTEERS RAISE $7,630.

Helen Gould Gives $2,500 to Rebuild the San Francisco Quarters.

The Volunteers of America held a mass meeting at the Knickerbocker Theatre yesterday afternoon to raise funds for the rehabilitation of the Volunteer work on the Pacific Coast. The organization lost all its property in San Francisco in the earthquake and fire. Though the audience was very small, the amount raised was more than $7,630. Gen. Ballington Booth before the collection was taken asked for only $3,000, and was overjoyed at the result.

Gen. Booth, who presided, announced from the platform that of the $7,630 Miss Helen Gould had given $2,500, and another friend of the Volunteers, whose name was not given out, had given $2,500. The other large contributors were the Chicago posts of the Volunteers, who pledged $800, the Pittsburg posts, who gave $200, and one Brooklyn post, which sent $125.

Mrs. Ballington Booth made an appeal to the audience to give.

"In rising to speak," she said, "I feel that this is not an occasion for talk. This is an occasion for action. The only reason for this little concourse is to give an opportunity to everybody to express in a practical way his sympathy for our stricken comrades in the Far West.

"We have now come to a point where the religion of every church and every religious organization will be put to the test. In this age of push and hustle when it so largely seems to be the prevailing maxim in life that the loss of one is the gain of another, the pessimist often has occasion to ask his sneering question: 'Where is all your beautiful Christian love and faith?'

"But let the pessimist sneer now, and we can give him an answer."

Gen. Ballington Booth announced that many of the regimental centres of the organization in different parts of the country had not yet been heard from, but that the rebuilding of the destroyed Volunteer headquarters in San Francisco and the continuation of the work there was an assured fact.

Charles E. Hughes, District Attorney Jerome, Gen. Grant, and the Rev. Dr. David J. Burrell, who were to have addressed the meeting, all sent letters of regret pleading previous engagements.

LUNA PARK OPENS.

And Swells the San Francisco Relief Fund by Some $2,000.

Several thousand persons — nobody stopped to count them—went to Coney Island yesterday afternoon. More than 10,000 went into Luna Park, which took in $2,000. The receipts will be given by Thompson & Dundy to the San Francisco sufferers.

When the gates were opened the crowd swarmed into an entirely new Luna Park. Beautiful flower beds have been set all around the park, the boxes have been moved back from the water, new circus rings have been put in, the dining rooms altered, and changes made in the scenic effects, which give the place a wholly new appearance. The only attraction reminiscent of last season is the Trip to the Moon, which will probably last as long as Fred Thompson is alive. Even this has been transformed.

The larger shows are not yet completed, but visitors were allowed to inspect what work had been done on them. Fred Thompson had down a party of visitors, to whom he explained his newest "creations." "The Great Train Robbery" is his latest conception. The Port Arthur and the Circle swings of last year have been torn down to make way for this latest show. A train of cars and engine, 250 persons, 40 horses, (and plunging ones, too,) mountain passes, rivers, and streams are only a few of the properties that will go to make up, as Mr. Thompson declares, the greatest show ever put on at Coney Island or anywhere else. The Raging Torrent is nearing completion, and this, too, like the Train Robbery, occupies the space allotted to two attractions last season.

Several Hippodrome acts were sent down yesterday for the occasion, Herman Weedon and his animals helped amuse the visitors. Several persons of prominence were guests of the park. Maude Adams, on a wager with her escort, went through the Helter Skelter.

Fred Thompuson and Elmer S. Dundy tried their ability as ballyhoo men, the latter at the fortune teller show, where he coaxed many a stray dime for charity. Mr. Thompson was not so lucky. He tried to guess weights at 5 cents a head. After he had missed twenty-five out of twenty-six guesses he gave it up, and barked for the chutes.

The thirty-two-minute Luna Park express trains were started again yesterday, and thousands went down to the resort in them. Senator McCarren, Senator Reynolds, and Samuel Gompertz, from Dreamland, were among the visitors to Luna Park, and patronized their competitor's attractions. "Just for charity, you know," was Senator McCarren's excuse.

A large number of the Queen's Own Rifles were again visitors to the resort, despite their visit of the previous day. They helped largely to swell the receipts of the day.

There was beer to be had anywhere on the Bowery. It seemed to be taken for granted, too, that a plate constitutes an excise sandwich. Some places had soup plates, others had saucers. Once in a while there was a whole oyster cracker on a plate.

Steeplechase Park had 28,000 visitors. Here they swarmed the ballroom and rode the horses. The new Coney Island Post Office is being erected here, and when completed will be one of the finest substations in Greater New York. An elevated structure is being erected which will carry passengers to the beach front, where a view of the resorts may be had.

A LABOR AID PARADE.

The Unions Will March and Collect Relief Money Next Sunday.

Announcement was made at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union by the delegates of the Brotherhood of Carpenters that the New York District Council of the Brotherhood had sent $3,000 to San Francisco for the relief of the people there. The delegate of the Rockmen and Excavators' Union reported that the rockmen had sent $250. Local No. 7 of the Actors' Protective Union also sent $250. Other unions had assessed their members 50 cents each.

It was reported in behalf of the committee appointed last week to co-operate with the Actors' Protective Union in a series of benefits in aid of the San Francisco sufferers that it had given up that idea and recommended another plan. The new one is to hold a labor carnival next Sunday. It is planned to have a parade of workingmen, who will carry American flags, to collect money on the line of march. Behind the flags large baskets are to be carried. Into these the money will be thrown from the flags. The recommendation was unanimously indorsed. The parade will start at Grand Street and the Bowery, and the line of march will be up Third Avenue to Forty-second Street, to Broadway, to Thirty-fourth Street, to Eighth Avenue, down to Twenty-third Street, and then to Union Square, where the parade will disband.

CONGRESS GAVE NO CASH FOR SAN FRANCISCANS

Appropriations Were for Supplies and Nothing Else.

MONEY WOULD MAKE PAUPERS

Government Has Been More Liberal in This Crisis Than in Any Previous Disaster.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The surprise of San Francisco at receiving only $300,000 in cash out of the $2,500,000 appropriated by Congress for its relief has created only astonishment here, and the question that has been heard on every side to-day is, "What did San Francisco expect? Did she think Congress meant to hand out dollars to her people?"

If that was the expectation in San Francisco it never had the least chance of realization, for it has not for a moment been the intention of the War Department authorities to do anything of that sort. The army has had sufficient and bitter experience in the distribution of money for relief. The result of such action in Porto Rico was to pauperize instead of to relieve the people it was intended to assist, and as long as any army officer who is familiar with that performance has anything to say about distribution of relief there will be mighty few dollars handed out.

No one here has ever had any thought but that it was the intention of Congress in making its appropriations for San Francisco to provide food and shelter for the homeless. The resolutions making the appropriations specifically declare that intention. The first resolution, passed on April 19, authorizes the Secretary of War to procure, in open market or otherwise, subsistence and Quartermaster's supplies and issue them to destitute persons.

That resolution carried an appropriation of $1,000,000. Subsequently there was passed an additional resolution specifically authorizing the Secretary of War to use army medical supplies. Then, upon the request of the President, a third resolution appropriating $1,500,000, making $2,500,000 in all, was passed, and in this authority was given to the Secretary of War to use this sum and the former appropriation not only to buy additional supplies, but also for the purpose of replacing by purchase subsistence, Quartermaster's and medical supplies, as may have been furnished from the stores on hand for the use of the army, and to defray all extra cost to the War Department incurred in mileage of officers, transportation of troops, &c.

A high official of the War Department said this evening that there must be some misunderstanding in San Francisco. He took it that the San Francisco authorities were under the impression that the money appropriated by Congress was in addition to what the army was doing in the way of forwarding supplies, instead of being intended to cover the cost of such relief.

If ex-Mayor Phelan was surprised at receiving only $300,000 in money from the Government, there is likely to be a further surprise in store when the business of clearing the ruins and rebuilding San Francisco gets well under way, for it is predicted that the general free distribution of rations from army stores will be considerably curtailed then. There is a great deal of opposition among high army officers to giving rations to able-bodied men when there is opportunity for them to work, and it is likely that as soon as there is general opportunity for able-bodied men to earn their own support in San Francisco the army will cease to issue rations to them.

Congress has never before done anything like what it has done for the relief of San Francisco. On a small scale it has made appropriations to cover the issue of tentage and rations by the army to sufferers by floods in the Mississippi and Ohio River Valleys, but even that had been stopped, and nothing had been appropriated for that purpose during the last eight years.

After the great Boston fire there was no application to Congress for any sort of aid, and none was given. After the Chicago fire Congress passed an act admitting building materials for use in the reconstruction of the city free of duty. At the time of the Johnstown flood Congress was not in session, and when it reconvened it did nothing about the disaster. Similarly it was not in session at the time of the Charleston earthquake. When it met after that disaster it voted money for the rebuilding and repair of the Government buildings which had been damaged, and that was all.

After the destruction wrought by a tornado in St. Louis Congress passed a resolution of sympathy, but did not appropriate a dollar or do anything else to give a practical expression to its sympathy. The great Baltimore fire two years ago found Congress in session, almost within sight of the flames, but not only was there no appropriation of money, there was not even a resolution of sympathy.

The great wave which swept over Galveston cost more than twenty-five times as many lives as were lost in San Francisco and destroyed much more property. In Galveston there was not a dollar of insurance, and San Francisco will recover, it is estimated, from 60 to 75 per cent. of her loss from the insurance companies. All that Congress did for Galveston was to appropriate $1,000,000 to rebuild the fortifications and Government buildings at once.

The only other occasion recalled tonight when Congress has made an outright gift of money was in its appropriation of $200,000 for the relief of the sufferers by the eruption of Mont Pelée and that money was spent in this country for food supplies.

CALAMITIES AND LAWS.

The Rev. Dr. Hall's Sermon on the San Francisco Disaster.

At the Church of the Divine Paternity, Central Park West and Seventy-sixth Street, yesterday, the pastor, the Rev. Frank Oliver Hall, took for his subject "Public Calamities and Divine Providence." He said, in part:

"In attempting to explain such calamities as followed the eruption of Vesuvius and the California earthquake we make several suppositions.

"First, we make the atheistic supposition—there is no God, the world is under the dominion of a blind and heartless force that creates with knowledge and destroys without pity. That is an easy solution of the problem. But, having made this hypothesis, we find ourselves confronted by a still more difficult problem. The human soul thirsts for God as the hart thirsts for the water brook. Strange that the hart should thirst if there is no water brook. Strange that we cannot rest until we rest in the thought of God, if there is no God.

"And then, having ruled out the idea of God, we are left to account for the universe on the theory of chance. The man who should attempt to account for the existence of the Bible by saying that it simply happened to come into existence, that it had no intelligent creator, would be thought insane.

"Then let us suppose that this world is the battling ground for two conflicting powers. The power of God we will call God, the power of evil we will call the devil. God made the universe perfect, and the devil overturns the work of God. Then comes the question, Why does not God destroy the devil, or render him powerless? If He can and will not, then He consents to the evil which the devil performs and is responsible for it. If He would and can not, then the devil is the real God of the universe. So that supposition does not satisfy us.

"This world is under the dominion of certain natural forces, which work always in accordance with law. No doubt the people of San Francisco were reckless and heedless in the presence of well-known facts, as are the people of New York. Is God to blame because He did not perform a miracle for the benefit of people who had defied the forces of nature to do their worst—building their houses on a quagmire, or erecting enormous structures covered with ornaments which must be shaken to pieces at the first serious jar of the earth?

"The San Francisco blockhouse has fallen, and now the people will build a better one, and in building a better city they will build something that God is more interested in—better men and women."

Told to Hang Himself, and Did.

Henry Koster, 27 years old, no home, took the advice of a man who he says told him to "go and hang himself" at Clifton, Staten Island, yesterday, and tried to do so. He was cut down, however, by a policeman in time to save his life. Koster hanged himself from an electric light pole in Elm Street, Clifton. He says he was trying to get work when he was invited to "go and hang himself."

SAYS PUGET SOUND CITY WILL ECLIPSE NEW YORK

Col. Savage Expects Tacoma and Seattle to Join.

SURE OF 'FRISCO'S FUTURE

Col. E. P. Savage of Tacoma, former Governor of Nebraska, who was a guest of the ex-Iowans in New York at their first annual dinner on Saturday, spoke enthusiastically to a Times reporter of the future of San Francisco and the West in general. Col. Savage is almost a giant in stature, a picturesque character of the rugged Western type, and thoroughly familiar with life on the frontier.

"What do I think of San Francisco's future?" said the former Governor, a humorous smile puckering the corners of his mouth.

"I have lived in the West since 1862, and I want to tell you, young man, that from the Canadian border to the Gulf and from the Mississippi and Missouri to the coast, there has never been such prosperity as now."

The Colonel's eyes glowed and his chest swelled with pride as his mind's eye contemplated the great West.

"I saw Chicago rise from its ashes, young man, and there is your answer so far as San Francisco is concerned. It is true, however, that capital is shy and a burned child dreads the fire.

"I regard San Francisco as the third hustling, bustling, 'git up and git' city in the country. New York, of course, comes first, and Chicago is second. We are going to have just as large cities on the Pacific Coast as you have on the Atlantic, and it won't take half as long to build them.

"Here I want to make a prediction. There will be a bigger city than New York on Puget Sound in fifty years. Seattle and Tacoma are bound to unite. Their centres are now but twenty-five miles apart.

"You can see more of the beauties of nature on Puget Sound for 50 cents than you can see on the Atlantic Coast for $100. Of course, on the other hand, you can see more art in New York for 50 cents than you can see on the Pacific Coast for any amount of money.

"Look at Tacoma! In 1870 the population was 73, in 1880 it was 1,098, in 1900 it was 37,714, at the beginning of this year it was 85,000, and it will reach 100,000 before Jan. 1, 1907.

"Tacoma has gained an average of more than two new industries a month for the past five years. It manufactures more lumber than any other city in the world. More flour is milled there than in any other city west of the Rocky Mountains, and more ore is reduced there than in any other city west of the Rockies. It has the largest meat-packing industry west of Denver, and the largest fisheries plant in the United States. It is the Western headquarters of several lines of railroads, and the Great Northern, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and the Southern Pacific are building to it. The Canadian Pacific and Chicago & Northwestern are sure to follow. Tacoma handles more railway freight than any other city in the Pacific Northwest.

"I must be pardoned for speaking in such glowing terms of the town in which I live, but I am only citing Tacoma as an illustration of the great expansion in the West."

THE EARTHQUAKE'S LESSONS.

Dr. MacArthur Says the "Muck-Rakers" Have Been Rebuked.

The San Francisco earthquake and the lessons it has taught were the theme yesterday morning of the Rev. Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur in Calvary Baptist Church in West Fifty-seventh Street. Dr. MacArthur's text was from First Kings, xix., 12: "After the earthquake a fire, * * * and after the fire a still small voice."

Dr. MacArthur said that the Pacific Coast's tragedy indicated the fallibility of scientists. He also declared that the generosity following the calamity was a rebuke to the "muck-rake" writers. He added:

"This generosity is a crushing rebuke to those who have affirmed that the 'almighty dollar' governed the American people. Muck-rake writers have portrayed the people and the great corporations as if they were human hyenas, but the very men who were thus excoriated proved their generosity by their enormous gifts. All class distinctions have been forgotten, and the people are giving money with a generosity that the world has never before witnessed.

"Out of this great disaster will come good; San Francisco will be rebuilt and will then become truly a city beautiful."

In response to Dr. MacArthur's appeal the congregation gave about $3,000 for the San Francisco sufferers.

SAN FRANCISCO LABOR TRUCE.

Unions, A. J. Boulton Says, Will Make No Fight for at Least a Year.

At a meeting yesterday afternoon in the Kings County Court House of the Brooklyn Division of the Red Cross, County Register Alfred J. Boulton, who is a leader in labor union circles, excited much interest by announcing that the building trades unionists of San Francisco had decided to put aside for one year all matters at issue between them and the employers. They would work together, he said, for the rebuilding of the city.

"Some weeks ago," said Mr. Boulton, "the trades unions in San Francisco started an agitation for higher wages. Because of the calamity which has fallen upon the city all such agitation has now been abandoned, and the trades unionists, sinking whatever differences existed between them and the employers, have decided upon an absolute truce for a year, at least, beginning May 1. The trades unionists of San Francisco are anxious to do all that they possibly can toward the restoration of the city.

"As an example of what union labor men generally are doing to help the people of San Francisco, I wish to state that the Teamsters and Coach Drivers' Union of this city has alone raised $5,000 for the relief fund. All other trades unions are also contributing liberally."

Col. Edward E. Britton, President of the division, presided at the meeting. The speakers included Borough President Coler, Mrs. Mary Hatch Willard, Edwin S. Piper, and William Chauncey Langdon, Secretary of the Executive Committee of the New York State Branch of the Red Cross. The speakers discussed the work being done by the division and plans for its extension. Chairman Britton announced that last week the division had received $5,534.18 for the relief fund.

John B. Creighton, Secretary of the Brooklyn League, announced that that organization had received $1,000, which would be turned over to the Red Cross. Dr. Joseph M. Van Cott of the local Medical Society said that that body expected to turn over to the Red Cross between $1,000 and $1,500.

HER CHURCH DISMISSES MRS. ELIZABETH GRANNIS

Votes to Cut Her Off, Along with Little Christian League.

IT'S HIGH-HANDED, SHE SAYS

And She May Appeal to the Courts—Mrs. Grannis Out, Church Calls New Pastor.

Christian League, the little negro girl whose antics during service at the First Church of Disciples of Christ, on West Fifty-sixth Street, stirred up the congregation, went to church as usual yesterday morning and sat in the Sunday school room while her protector and champion, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Grannis, was listening to a resolution in an adjoining room which practically dismissed both Mrs. Grannis and Christian League from the church.

The dismissal meeting was held immediately after the regular morning service, and lasted more than two hours. Incidentally it was stated that it was necessary to get rid of Mrs. Grannis and Christian League before the church could get a new minister. With Mrs. Grannis out, the congregation voted to call the Rev. Miner Lee Bates of East Orange to be pastor of the West Fifty-sixth Street church.

As soon as he can find a suitable man to lead the flock of the Church of Disciples of Christ in East Orange Mr. Bates will come on to New York to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. B. Q. Denham, who left the West Fifty-sixth Street church last year to manage a lemon grove in Florida, after he had appeared in a court on complaint of women who said he had annoyed them.

Mrs. Grannis, who is President of the National Christian League for the Promotion of Purity, was among the first members of the church to arrive yesterday. She was accompanied by Christian League, the negro girl named after her purity organization. Christian League wore a toboggan cap that had a blue tassel that waved like a clock pendulum every time she shook her head and made faces at the group of newspaper reporters assembled in the Sunday school room. But during the service, while Christian League was seated beside Mrs. Grannis in the latter's pew, she scarcely moved an eyeball.

Special notices had been mailed to every member of the congregation, stating that action would be taken on the report filed by the out-of-town Elders who had sat in judgment on the charges preferred against Mrs. Grannis by Francis B. Applegate. This report, which was printed in THE TIMES of yesterday, declared Mrs. Grannis guilty of disturbing the peace of the congregation of the First Church of Disciples of Christ, and advised that in case she declined to withdraw from the church the church withdraw from her at the end of two weeks. In view of the fact that some action would be taken on the report, the attendance yesterday was greater than it had been since 1904, when trouble first began to brew in the church.

Christian League Was There.

The regular service began at 11 o'clock. Mrs. Grannis and Christian League walked up the aisle after everybody else got seated. The Rev. B. B. Tyler, one of the former pastors of the church, occupied the pulpit. He stared expectantly for a moment at Christian League, but the child was on her good behavior. In fact, she seemed like a person who had been put in a trance. Seeing that Christian League was behaving, Mr. Tyler proceeded to make his announcements, three of which were on routine church business; the fourth referred to the business meeting to be held after the regular service.

At the conclusion of the services many members of the congregation stood in the lobby shaking hands with Mrs. Grannis. Among them was Mrs. George Spencer, widow of Senator Spencer of Georgia. She got out of a sick bed to offer Mrs. Grannis her support. About 170 members of the congregation, including Mrs. Grannis, went into the meeting hall after the service. The reporters were left outside. The meeting lasted for two hours, and Mrs. Grannis was among the last to leave the hall. When asked the result of the meeting she promptly said:

Mrs. Grannis's View.

"Just as I expected. It was a high-handed, star-chamber proceeding, illegal in every respect, and carried out in accordance with the plans drawn by that man Applegate. It does not bother me much, for I will keep right on attending services here as I have done for forty-three years, and I guess they'll find me here as usual every Sunday. I was not given a chance to talk or defend myself, but as I really needed no defense it was useless to put in any. The whole plan carried out to-day was cut and dried by a handful of people who were led by Applegate and Banton."

Elder Joab A. Banton, who is a lawyer, with offices at 35 Nassau Street, presided over the meeting. He stated that it had been said that the committee appointed to consider the charges had been unfair and biased. Mr. Banton said this was not the case, as the committee of Elders from out of town did not know they were to try Mrs. Grannis, and had never seen her until after they had been selected.

The facts were these, he said: In November last, when Mrs. Grannis virtually accused Mr. Christie of making false statements concerning certain matters, the Elders took the matter up, but, as they wanted to be perfectly fair, they decided to call in outside Elders to hear the charges that had been preferred against Mrs. Grannis by Mr. Applegate, who had been thrown on the defensive with Mr. Christie.

"It was then," said Elder Banton, "that I was instructed by the congregation to select three Elders from outside churches to hear the testimony. I wrote to the pastors of a church at Troy and at Danbury, Conn., and Philadelphia, asking that the names of Elders be sent for consideration. As soon as I got the names and addresses of twelve Elders I sent registered letters to Mrs. Grannis and other persons interested to meet at Elder Moore's home for the purpose of selecting the committee of Elders to listen to the testimony.

"Mrs. Grannis failed to appear, and her sister telephoned that she was not in town. Then in going over the list I discovered that two of the Elders on it were friends of Mr. Christie, and as I was close to Mr. Christie I wanted it known that I was not biased, so I struck from the list the names of the two Elders who knew Mr. Christie. Two others on the list were men who were physically unable to be present at a trial, one of them being very ill. So the list containing the names through which the pencil had been drawn was shown to Mrs. Grannis and to Mr. Hoke on the following Sunday. They said they were satisfactory, and it was then that the three Elders were selected to hear the charges.

How the Church Voted.

Elder Banton then read the report. Mrs. Grannis smiled. He then offered a resolution that the report dismissing Mrs. Grannis be adopted as read. He put the question, and many loud "Yeas" sounded from all parts of the hall. The nays could not be heard.

Elder Banton then asked Mrs. Grannis if she wanted a roll call, but she did not answer. Mr. Hoke, who was censured in the report for circulating copies of letters written in the Lane case, was also asked if he wanted a poll. He did not answer, and Elder Banton declared the resolution separating the church and Mrs. Grannis adopted.

Another resolution offered by Mr. Applegate and providing that Deacons be elected for one, two, and three year terms, instead of life terms, was also adopted. This practically means that two of the Deacons, who sided with Mrs. Grannis, Deacon Johns and Deacon Brookwell, will be put out of office by an election which will be held some time in May.

It is said that Mrs. Grannis may bring legal proceedings in the form of an injunction restraining the congregation from dismissing her at the end of the two weeks mentioned in the Elders' report.

Elder Banton later gave out a statement, going over the history of the case and ending by declaring that the matter was now closed.

"Mrs. Grannis," he said, "will not be molested in case she attends the services in the church. There will be no barricades and no police officers to keep her out if she chooses to come, but she can never get letters to join another congregation unless all of the facts concerning her disturbing the peace here are told.

"At the end of two weeks, if she does not withdraw from the church the church will withdraw from her. Her name will be stricken from the membership list, and the Elders of the church will simply make that announcement. We've cleaned our house, and now we expect to keep it clean with the aid of the new pastor."

Mr. Appelgate, who preferred the charges against Mrs. Grannis, here chimed in, saying that he wanted it distinctly understood that the charges that had been made against ex-Pastor Denham, who is now raising oranges in Florida, had been dismissed by a New York Grand Jury in June, 1904.

LEAVES HIS $6,000 BEHIND.

Young Mr. Tower Sent Back to Boston After a Lecture.

"William Anderson, architect," living at the Hotel Astor, and "Percy Allinson, civil engineer," living at the Hotel Gallatin, who were arrested on Saturday night on the complaint of young Benjamin Curtis Tower of Boston, son of a Boston lawyer, that they got $6,000 out of him by inducing him to bet money on horses that didn't win, were discharged by Magistrate Breen in the Tombs Court yesterday. Young Tower and his father went back to Boston after the youth had been told by Magistrate Breen that if any crime had been committed he was quite as guilty as the prisoners.

Young Tower told all about meeting the "two swell Englishmen," as he called the prisoners, at Pinehurst and again in Atlantic City and hearing about the "good things" they had at the race track. He said he gave them $1,000 to put on the first good thing, and when it didn't bring return got $5,000 out of his father for a second venture. Father and son seemed to want their money back as much as to punish the alleged swindlers.

"If you lost it served you right," said the Magistrate to young Tower in discharging the prisoners.

"You would be just as guilty as the defendants if any crime were proved. You agreed to the scheme and found money for it. The money was lost. You knew what you were doing, and I cannot say that I have any sympathy for you."

WILL DISCUSS CHARITIES.

Jewish Conference to Start on May 6 in Philadelphia.

HEBREW ASYLUM'S REPORT.

It Shows 1,020 Inmates—Officers for Next Fiscal Year Elected.

The eighty-third annual meeting and election of officers of the Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum was held yesterday at the asylum building, 138th Street and Amsterdam Avenue. There was but one ticket in the field, and those elected were: Louis Stern, re-elected President; Henry Rice, re-elected Vice President; Martin Beckhard, re-elected Treasurer; for Trustees to Serve Three Years—Oscar Straus, Theodore Seligman, Marx Ottinger, Siegmund J. Bach, Theodore Obermeyer, Marx Arnholm, I. S. Korn; Inspectors of Election—M. H. Moses, Louis Lewengood, and Joseph Loth.

President Louis Stern's report told of the establishment of manual training for those in the society's care. It showed also that at the end of this fiscal year there were 1,020 inmates in the home, 15 less than the year previous. Thirty-two children were boarded out at the expense of the institution, and 25 whom it was found inadvisable to admit were still entitled to care and support.

An increase of 182 in members and patrons was reported. There was a deficit of $48,384.86 in the general fund. This was made up by legacies and donations, and there is $49,911.82 on hand.

McADOO LAUDS ROOSEVELT.

Thinks Aloud, but Thinks Cleanly, the Former Police Head Says.

At the anniversary dinner of the Metropolitan Surety Company, held at the Hoffman House on Saturday evening, ex-Police Commissioner McAdoo, speaking of corporate honesty, said that the time was fast approaching when public opinion would demand the same standards of conduct in the officers of corporations that were adhered to in the purely personal affairs of private life. Concluding, he paid an eloquent tribute to President Roosevelt, saying:

"One of his critics has said that he 'thinks aloud.' What better proof could be given that his thoughts are clean and honest? However widely we may differ from him on questions involving partisan principles, no man can fail to pay to Theodore Roosevelt the tribute that his integrity is commensurate with the mighty office to which the American people have called him."

Among the other speakers and guests were: Justices O'Brien, Fitzgerald, and James A. O'Gorman, Surrogate Fitzgerald, David McClure, John J. Gaullet, John D. Crimmins, John B. Stanchfield, Edward S. Hatch, John B. McDonald, John F. Carroll, and M. Joseph McCloskey.

BASEBALL FOR RAILROADERS.

Erie Urges Men to Organize Teams and Offers a Prize.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., April 29.—Believing that short spells of recreation for their employes will stimulate them to better work, the Erie Railroad Company has issued a circular to their employes all along the line urging them to organize baseball teams and play games every week this season. The team which comes out at the head of the list will receive a gold cup.

The Erie is willing to give its men this recreation free of all expense, and will not deduct the wages of the men for the time they are absent from duty.

The road will also provide free transportation for the teams from any point on the line.

QUEEN'S OWN DEPARTS AFTER A ROYAL TIME

Rumors of Lack of Hospitality Are Indignantly Denied.

MEN CHEER FOR NEW YORK

They Say They Return to Toronto with Hearts and Heads Both A-Throb from Their Welcome.

The Second Regiment of the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, which has been in this city attending the military tournament at Madison Square Garden, departed for Toronto yesterday.

The regiment, which had been quartered in the armory of the Twelfth Regiment, at Sixty-first Street and Columbus Avenue, assembled for the home journey at 1:30 yesterday afternoon. A number of friends made since the Rifles arrived in town filled the gallery of the armory to see the final muster.

Lieut. Col. Sir Henry Pellatt, commanding the Queen's Own, expressed himself to reporters as being very much annoyed and disgusted with rumors circulated that he and his officers and men had been complaining of a lack of courteous treatment while in this city.

"Such rumors are entirely without foundation," he said. "Even if it were true that we had not received all the consideration due to strangers, do you suppose for one moment that any man or officer who was anything of a gentleman would utter remarks against a host? But in this case there is no ground for complaint. We have had the time of our lives. What the men think of the way they have been treated while in New York any one can judge by looking at them."

The soldiers bore every appearance of late hours, and what is called a royal time after a royal welcome. When the square was formed preparatory to filing into the street and the march to the train, the men responded with a mighty roar to Sir Henry's call for three cheers for New York. The cheers were delivered with vim, and the tipped busbies of the Queen's Own were swung aloft enthusiastically.

Before the regiment left Sergt. "Jim" Kennedy, who was shot thirteen times in the Boer war, was asked what he thought of New York, its people, and the way he and his comrades had been treated. Was their any lack of courtesy?

Kennedy, who is an Irishman, (to which fact he attributes his remarkable capacity for bullets,) stared at the reporter for a minute.

"My dear youth," said he, "far be it from me to say a wor-rd agin the paple av New York, but if a complaint is t' be raycorded ye hiv come t' the roight man.

"Yes, I've a protist t' make. We lave New York wit' feelin's av mingled pain an' regret—pain in our heads an' regret in our pockets. The throuble is ye're too blamed hospitable here. In the daytime ye're as stiff as a buckram bunnet, but afther tin o'clock at night 'it's Tommy here an' Tommy there, an' Tommy what'll ye have!'

"In New York they don't run much to waggin' the high-up-in-the-air hand an' bein' charmed an' appreciatin' dilicate nuthin's. It's the paple that's the rale hosts. If ye wear brass buttons an' a uniform that ain't av the New York polace, or the local milishy, ye're taken for a sthranger right away, buttonholed, an' led like a lamb to a cool place where ye can h'ist ye're foot an' converse.

"Thray av the boys wint with me in one of them excursions last night. Afther we'd been told that we were gintlemen, aven if we weren't Americans, we asks what the bunch would have, returnin' av hospitality, as it were. They had the same, the barkeep puttin' thim up without axin'. One av us put up the maple leaves for the round, but the barkeep waved them back an' says:

"'That's all right, boys. You can't pay here.'

"That's the hospitality av the paple, an' I'll bet you that every third man in the rigiment is tryin' at this minnit t' remember his name. They saw the light last night an' they're still illuminated."

The regiment boarded a New York Central special in two sections at Sixty-second Street and Eleventh Avenue, and at 2:30 started for Toronto. As they passed below Riverside Drive they were heartily cheered by the throngs in the park and the crowds on the piers watching the squadron. The trainload of soldiers responded, waving their busbies on the end of their Lee-Metfords from the train windows.

NEGRO LYNCHED IN ALABAMA.

Hanged After Confessing Complicity in Murder of Contractor.

Special to The New York Times.

MOBILE, Ala., April 29.—Will Brown, a negro alleged to have been one of two blacks who assassinated W. J. Johnson, a railroad contractor, near Brownsville early yesterday morning, was captured near Rienzi last night by a posse of citizens and hanged from a railroad trestle.

The hanging was preceded by an impromptu trial, at which the negro is said to have confessed that he killed Mr. Johnson. After the hanging the crowd dispersed.

FOR WOMEN, MISSES and CHILDREN.

Triumphant Leadership

There are eighty-seven distinct specialty stores under this roof, and every one of them has joined in a May Sale that will make the month remembered among New York women for the balance of the year.

IT IS A DEMONSTRATION OF LEADERSHIP in the domain of common sense and honest retailing, in which the bargain price, while universal through the entire house, is coupled with absolutely reliable first quality goods.

We can give in this space merely a "sample" of what is offered through all the store. Multiply what follows by eighty—remember that the same bargain spirit obtains in every line of goods we carry—and come here this morning for your share.

It is utterly impossible to give an adequate idea of the values represented here by any use of printer's ink.

We describe some of the garments as well as we can and mention a few prices, but that really tells very little. To understand just what these garments are and what almost unprecedented values they give at these prices, you must come and see them, feel the texture of the cloth, examine the embroidery and the workmanship.

Then you will understand that we are giving you the greatest values that have been known since the years cotton sold at 6c. a pound.

We never buy or sell a "skimpy" garment. All these are cut generously full. We use no lace save the good imported kinds that stand the wash tub. This applies to all pieces sold here—whatever the price.

RUSSIAN GIRL GLORIES IN DEATH OF TYRANT

Mlle. Spiridonova Tells Her Tale of Wrongs.

HAPPY IN HER MARTYRDOM

Full Text of Her Testimony Before the Court-Martial Which Has Sentenced Her to be Hanged.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 29.—Mlle. Spiridonova, the girl who murdered Luzhenoffski, the Chief of the Gendarmerie at Tamboff, thus justified herself to the court-martial which sentenced her to be hanged:

"Yes, I murdered Luzhenoffski, and I desire to explain my deed. I am a member of the Social-Revolutionary Party. The discontent of the people with the existing régime turned into revolution, armed resistance to the authorities, attacks on officials, and open collisions with the troops in the streets.

"Instead of meeting the needs of the people the Government used guns, bayonets, and bullets, but they did not succeed. Then they invented the manifesto of liberty. But at the same time they also invented alleged popular demonstrations by the organization of the Black Hundred outrages. The manifesto was only a piece of strategy"—(At this point the Procurator attempted to interrupt Mlle. Spridonova, but the President overruled him and permitted her to proceed.)

"And nothing else," she resumed. "As soon as the bureaucracy realized that the manifesto could be overthrown, it planned its campaign and returned to the traditional method of oppressing the people which was so dear to its heart, namely, repression. The horrors of the reaction were worse than anything which had preceded.

Police Spies Everywhere.

"Over 200 men were murdered under the guise of executions, the 'inteligentsia' were crammed into prisons, every association which opposed the Government was closed, the press was gagged, the armed uprisings were suppressed with machine guns, and the police spies everywhere informed upon guilty and innocent alike in their efforts to paralyze the liberation movement.'

"The bureaucracy deliberately created conditions which made it impossible for the people's indignation to reach the supreme power, and the official reports were filled with 'tranquillity, happiness, and peace.' In the suppression of the present disorders the work of the bureaucracy was especially splendid, it should be written in history in golden letters. I won't speak about the 'pacification' of the peasants in many of the provinces.

"I won't even speak of the whole of the Province of Tamboff, but will confine myself to the bloody work of Luzhenoffski. Villages which he visited he left looking like Bulgarian villages after Turkish raids. In the village of Pavlodar ten men were killed by his orders, Shoherbakoff, including three of the family of Zietseff, Ostrovitinoff, Dubrovin.

"Young Pavel Zietseff, through the self-sacrifice of his family, had received a good education in the Yekaterinoslav Normal School. He was an honest, clean, enthusiastic young man. He used to say: 'All of my learning and knowledge I will bring back to my village for distribution among my brothers.' He and his friend Ostrovitinoff, when Luzhenoffski arrived, went to him as the delegates of the peasants, and Luzhenoffski replied to their requests with a volley from his Cossacks.

Tortured to Death.

"For four days Zietseff and Ostrovitinoff were tortured—tortured until they died. Alexander Dubrovin was a Social Democrat, who had come to the village, not to persuade the peasants to attack the land owners and to burn their houses, but to try to restrain their elementary passions and organize them, for the betterment of their condition and the realization of their necessities. He was arrested, and without any investigation of what he was doing was put upon the rack, and died under the inquisition.

"Disguised as sightseers, some of his relatives finally managed to persuade the keepers to show them his body, but it was unrecognizable. It was literally a mass of meat, bones, and bloody rags.

"In the same village of Povlodar forty were wounded. In the Berozovsky village a peasant named Clemenoff was tortured into insanity, and in the village of Peskee two others lost their minds. Besides the shooting, beatings, and slow death by torture other measures of 'pacification' were used, such as the destruction of the peasants' property and grain, the firing of their houses, and the violation of their women.

"After his 'triumphal' trips Luzhenoffski was able to lay as 'trophies of victories' at the feet of the bureaucracy murdered peasants, ruined owners, assaulted women, and bruised and crippled children. I forgot to mention that Luzhenoffski's method of procedure when he arrived in the village was to order the peasants to be assembled and undressed, and then he would go to his dinner and leave the poor devils shivering on their knees in the snow.

Luzhenoffski's Career.

"Previously, while at the head of the town of Borisgolebsk, he had made a splendid exhibition of his power. The town had been calm, there was no sign of revolution, but after the demonstration in celebration of the Emperor's manifesto speeches were naturally made to the joyful people in which large hopes for the future were expressed. Luzhenoffski not only arrested all those speakers, but he arrested according to his own personal caprice or drunken whim any one whom he chose. He made searches, destroyed houses, threatened every one with death, and boasted at an after-dinner speech that he had killed six peasants with his own hand. He spoke of the peasants not as men, but as animals.

"I do not charge Luzhenoffski with being the man who inspired and organized, to the shame of Russia, the 'Black Hundreds.' Their organizer was higher up. But in the eyes of the committee of the social revolutionary party of Tamboff he was the incarnation of evil, of tyranny, and of violations—a typical representative of the worst side of bureaucracy.

"He was advancing in his career, was attracting the attention of his superiors at St. Petersburg, and had before him the bright prospect of a powerful dictatorship in the western provinces, where, by persecutions, he could become a pillar of the system which is suffocating the Russian people. He was an oppressor of the people and he merited death.

"The social revolutionary party seeks to protect the interests of the masses, even at the price of personal sacrifice. Its aim is to establish political and economical conditions which will permit the people to realize a Socialistic régime in which 'liberty, fraternity, and equality' will be a reality and not a dream.

"In the name of humanity, of truth, and of justice the Tamboff Committee and I condemned Luzhenoffski to death. With a full appreciation of the responsibility of my act I undertook the execution of the sentence because my heart was breaking with sorrow and it was no longer possible to live with the tales of the horror produced by Luzhenoffski's acts ringing in my ears.

"I had seen peasants who had gone insane after their tortures, I had met a woman who had gone mad because her pretty 15-year-old daughter had thrown herself under the ice in shame after she had been seized by Cossacks, and after that no prospect of torture could stop me from executing my decision.

To Die for the Cause.

"And finally the vengeance of the police upon me was worthy of their most infamous traditions. I was crushed and subjected to all those tortures which the Government used to prate about abolishing. Everything I wrote in my letter was true. I was tortured not only physically, but mentally. I was struck in the face, my tormentors spat in my face." (Here she proceeded to tell her Judges the story which has already been published of how she was stripped and beaten and burned and violated.)

She concluded with these words: "In spite of all the horrors to which I have been subjected, I am happy in the thought that I belong to the ranks of the protectors of the people, and that I am to die for their cause."

RUSSIAN LIBERALS' VICTORY.

Constitutional Democrats Are Bound to Have a Big Majority.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 29.—The latest election results show that out of 316 seats, the Constitutional Democrats and their immediate allies have secured 218.

Russia has still to elect 96 Deputies, while Poland has 33 to elect, but it is already evident that the Constitutional Democrats are bound to have an enormous majority.

BELIEVE GAPON DEAD.

Novoe Vremya Prints a Story Confirming Reports of Assassination.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 29.—The Novoe Vremya to-day prints a circumstantial story which tends to confirm the reports that Father Gapon has been assassinated by a revolutionist.

Father Gapon is represented as having entered into relations with a group of the "fighting organization" of the terrorists, and in order to test his loyalty one of the leaders, an engineer named Rutenberg, offered to betray the secrets of the organization to the Government. Gapon, according to the story, took the bait and offered to conduct the negotiations. Some haggling about the price to be paid followed, Rutenberg demanding $50,000. Finally, however, on his agreeing to accept $12,500, Gapon went to Odarki, a small place beyond the Finnish frontier, to meet Rutenberg for a consummation of the agreement. He has not been seen since.

A Jewess named Holstein, a member of a group of revolutionaries with which Gapon's friends knew he was in close consultation at that time, mysteriously disappeared the day afterward.

The plain inference is, the paper says, that the revolutionaries, finding Gapon to be a traitor, executed him, and that Gapon's papers, which reached his lawyer, Margolin, from Berlin a few days ago, were forwarded by the Holstein woman.

The Associated Press investigated the report printed by a newspaper that Father Gapon was living in concealment in an apartment that formerly was the headquarters of his organization, but found the report was due to the presence there of a priest similar in appearance to Gapon, who recently returned from Vladivostok.

A PLOT THAT FAILED.

Col. Min, Commander of Seminovsky Guards, Escapes Assassination.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 29.—A member of the "fighting organization" to-day attempted to assassinate Col. Min, Commander of the Seminovsky Guards, in revenge for the part taken by his regiment in putting down the Moscow revolt.

A uniformed officer, a young man, had called several times at the residence of Col. Min, and requested to see him. The manner of the man excited suspicion, and he was arrested to-day, when it was found that he was a disguised revolutionist and was armed with a revolver and a dagger.

RUSSIAN OFFICER PUNISHED.

MOSCOW, April 29.—Col. Yermelov, who during the riots in December, while employed in the police service, killed a revolutionist in the presence of his wife and children, has been sentenced to four years with a disciplinary battalion and the loss of all rights.

The jury before which the case was heard found extenuating circumstances on the ground that the murder was committed under the stress of excitement.

SHOT IN BLACK HAND ROW.

Two Men, One a Spectator, Wounded in Paterson.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., April 29.—William Vollemy of 58 Pearl Street, this city, and Rocco Cicone of Nutley, N. J., were shot this evening at the corner of Market and Straight Streets in what the police think was a Black Hand fight.

Cicone, who came from Nutley to-night, went to the fruit store of John Moretto, in Market Street, and bought an orange. Three Italians approached him when he left the store. One of them pulled a revolver and said: "I've got you at last."

Cicone pulled a pistol, too, and both men fired at short range. Cicone was shot in the knee, and Vollemy, a spectator, was shot in the thigh. Cicone was caught.

BOY FORGOTTEN AT A FIRE.

A Policeman Ran Upstairs and Carried Him to Safety.

The fire, which started on the top floor of a three-story tenement house at 200 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, by his elders in the excitement of a fire there early yesterday morning, five-year-old Morris Good was rescued by a policeman, who braved flames and smoke to reach the boy.

The fire, which started o nthe top floor of the building, had gained much headway when it was discovered and the aroused tenants had to flee to the street for safety. Louis Good remembered that his little son had been left behind in the confusion and Patrolman Frederick Wendenberg of the Adams Street Station ran into the building. He found the child terror-stricken on the top floor and carried him down to the street. The fire caused about $750 damage.

ENGLAND EMBARRASSED BY SULTAN'S DEFIANCE

AFFECTS PEOPLE OF EGYPT

But Turkey's Ruler This Time Seems Prepared to Force Great Britain to Extreme Measures.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cable. Copyright, 1906.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 29.—There is no sign that the Turkish Government is ready to take a reasonable line on the Tabah question. The decision to reinforce the British garrison in Egypt, which, it was thought by some, would open the eyes of the Sultan's advisers to the dangers of the situation, has not produced that effect, though it has attracted public attention to the dispute.

The prevailing opinion seems to be that the Turkish Government made a deplorable mistake, and that the reckless attempt to bluff Egypt and Great Britain can end only in humiliating failure.

The reports of agitation among the native Egyptians do not deceive well-informed Turks, who know what benefits the British occupation has conferred upon the country, and how highly those benefits are appreciated by the mass of the Egyptian population.

The attitude of the British Government remains exactly what it has been from the beginning. The Foreign Office is perfectly ready to discuss the frontier question in a friendly spirit, but insists that the restoration of the status quo is necessary as a preliminary. It continues to display the greatest forbearance, but this forbearance is not due to any lack of determination to protect its interests in Egypt.

Great Britain has naturally been anxious not to inflict humiliation on a sovereign regarded by the majority of Moslems as the head of their religion. The Turkish Government, however, seems not to appreciate this condition, and it is by no means unlikely that Great Britain may be compelled to employ more vigorous methods of persuasion than those used in the last few months, which have failed to produce the slightest effect.

CAIRO, April 29.—The Turkish force on the frontier near Rafakh is reported to have received small reinforcements of infantry and artillery.

I learn from a Syrian source that four siege guns destined for Akabah were landed at Beirut on April 7, and dispatched to Damascus by night, great secrecy being observed, and that four or five mountain batteries had reached Maan. Rather bellicose rumors are prevalent at Damascus.

LONDON, April 30.—The Daily Mail's Cairo correspondent says that the Turkish Grand Vizier, in a telegram to the Ottoman Commissioner in Egypt, announces that he has ordered the restoration of the boundary pillars at Rafanaer and El Arish. He declares that it could not have been Turkish troops who removed the boundary stones, but that it was the outcome of some political intrigue.

PORT SAID, April 30.—The British cruiser Minerva has visited El Arish and Wadirefah.

YOAKUM LINES IN TEXAS.

Progress in the Construction of All the Railroads There.

Last week's call on members of the St. Louis & San Francisco note syndicate for 35 per cent. of their subscriptions indicates that rapid progress is being made in the construction of the line from New Orleans to Houston for the completion of which the notes were issued. The Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific, the company which is building the connecting links which in conjunction with existing lines will establish a new through line from New Orleans to Houston, is largely a Yoakum enterprise. It is only one of the numerous lines in the Southwest in the construction of which B. F. Yoakum has taken a very active part.

At Houston the Colorado Southern, New Orleans & Pacific will connect with another Yoakum line, the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico, which runs from Houston to Brownsville on the boundary line between Texas and Mexico. This line was only recently completed. Its construction represents the accomplishment of plans which B. F. Yoakum and his associates had long entertained for the development of the vast stretch of country which lies along the Gulf of Mexico south of Houston. Until this new line was built this country was out of reach and necessarily remained undeveloped. Much is expected from the establishment of this line through a territory capable of great development. The building of such lines, not for the purpose of going after traffic already developed, but of creating traffic by opening up a new country, is the kind of enterprise which particularly appeals to railroad men of the type of B. F. Yoakum. They take pleasure in building up previously inaccessible country, and in doing so they feel that they are accomplishing something which would be very slow of accomplishment under any system of Governmental ownership of railroads. They point to the building of such lines as a demonstration of the assertion that private enterprise may be expected to go a much longer way than public enterprise in the direction of developing the country's resources.

The territory served by the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico, a line approximately 500 miles long, is about as large as Massachusetts and Rhode Island together. Tens of millions, it is estimated, have been added to the land values of this country merely by the building of this line. The line has been constructed according to modern standards of railroad building. The road, therefore, is in many ways ahead of the development of the country, but its promoters had enough faith in the possibilities of this territory to construct through a vast stretch of undeveloped country a railroad that was built very much like the lines in the thickly populated sections of the country.

A WEEK'S LOSSES IN VALUES.

Decline of $200,000,000 in Seven Days After San Francisco Disaster.

Between the close of the market on Tuesday, April 17, the day before the earthquake and fire at San Francisco, and the low point reached on Tuesday, April 24, a period of one week, thirty-three active stocks on the Exchange showed a decline in market value of nearly $200,000,000. This downward movement may be regarded as the extent to which the market responded to the news of the Pacific Coast calamity. Where the very heavy declines which occurred in the stock market upon the resumption of liquidation at the close of the week included, the losses in the case of many individual stocks would have been more than double those which are made the basis of this estimate.

This list of active stocks during the week which followed the San Francisco catastrophe shows the extent to which the market declined on this news and the amount of the loss in market value of the individual stocks:

The average decline was $5,952,476 in each stock. Were this average applied to the 170 stocks which were dealt in on the Tuesday before the conflagration the total depreciation in the stocks traded in on that day is seen to have amounted to more than $1,000,000,000. This amount is so very much greater than the estimate of losses resulting directly or indirectly from the San Francisco conflagration that the interesting question arises: To what extent was this decline in the market justified by the news from San Francisco and to what extent was it caused by other factors?

In some cases the declines which occurred last Friday and Saturday were much larger than those which took place during the week immediately following the disaster. Great Northern, for instance, which from April 17 to April 24 lost 14 points, declined over 21 points from the close of the market on Thursday last to the close of the market on Saturday. A number of other stocks also showed losses during these two days at least equal to the amount lost during the week ended on Tuesday last.

INSULAR CORPORATION ACT.

New Law for the Philippines Prepared After United States Models.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The Philippine Commission has just enacted a corporations law patterned after the corporation acts generally in force in the United States. The act was prepared by Commissioner James F. Smith, who will succeed Gov. Ide as Governor General of the Philippine Islands on Sept. 15 of this year.

Five or more persons, not exceeding fifteen, a majority being residents of the islands, may incorporate by filing articles of incorporation with the proper officer of the Insular Government, the principal office of the company to be in the islands. The life of the corporation may be for any period up to fifty years. Before incorporation only 20 per cent. of the capital stock need be subscribed, and 25 per cent. of the subscription paid in. The incorporation fee is only $12.50 in gold.

The act contains special provisions regarding railroad companies, banking and trust corporations, insurance and religious corporations, building and loan corporations, and colleges and other institutions of learning.

American and other foreign corporations may qualify to do business in the Philippine Islands by obtaining a license from the proper officer of the Insular Government. To secure a license a corporation, it is announced, need only show that it is financially sound, and file a statement setting forth the nature of its business, the amount of its capital stock, its assets and liabilities, &c., and the name of its responsible local agent. The license fee is $25 in gold.

STOCK EXCHANGE PROFITS.

London House Shares Pay 100 Per Cent—Large Income Here.

The London Stock Exchange paid a 100 per cent. dividend, or £12 per share, for the house year, which ended March 24 last. Nor does this represent the entire earnings of the Exchange, for an equal sum was carried forward to the credit of the current year. Applicants for membership on London 'Change are compelled to buy "house" shares as a condition of entrance, and this handsome return on their investment goes a long way in extenuation of the fact that the shares carry an unlimited liability. The market price of the "house shares" is now at a premium of 250 per cent., which makes the dividend about 5 per cent. on the investment.

The New York Exchange is not incorporated, therefore it pays no dividend and makes no public reports of any kind. What the annual income is is known only to insiders, but that it is sufficiently large is evidenced by the building on Broad Street, which is one of the architectural features of the city, and the scale on which everything connected with the Exchange is conducted.

As an association of individuals without corporate organization the question of holding property has been simplified by the formation of a building company within the Exchange, but otherwise its affairs are conducted with the minimum of red tape.

Perhaps the largest source of income is the annual quota of initiation fees. Every year an average of close to 100 seats are transferred to new members, and, as each initiate pays $2,000 for the privilege of joining the Exchange, it will be easily seen that this item is a handsome income in itself. Then, too, the annual dues of $100 a year make a total of over $100,000, and there are other large sums realized from the ticker service, the outside messenger service and the floor 'phones. Besides these sources of income the total is swelled by the "listing fee" of $50 for every million dollars in par value of stocks or bonds admitted to the Stock Exchange list.

Woman Pickpocket on the Bridge.

The police of the Williamsburg Bridge and Central Office men are looking for a well-dressed female pickpocket who has been operating successfully for several days on the cars crossing the bridge. The police believed that the passengers were being robbed by a gang of men crooks until yesterday, when Mrs. Gertrude Weissenbach of 85 Clymer Street, Brooklyn, detected a well-dressed woman trying to get her purse, containing $35. The thief jumped from the car when she was detected. She had slit Mrs. Weissenbach's skirt to reach her pocket.

WILLIAMS GETS TARIFF AHEAD OF RATE ISSUE

AGGRESSIVE FIGHT IS ON

Republican Revolt in West and Massachusetts Helps Minority Leader—Senate Democrats Lukewarm.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—A striking and radical difference between the policies of the Senate and the House Democrats has been accentuated in the past week. The House Democrats, under the leadership of John Sharp Williams, have persistently and indefatigably forced the issue of tariff revision to the front as the dominant one in the Fall campaign.

In the Senate there has not been the faintest indication of any wish by the Democrats to drag the tariff question out of its repose. So far as the Democratic Senators have done anything to create a campaign issue, it will be on the question of railroad rates.

The attitude of the House Democrats is not only taken under Mr. Williams's leadership, but is the direct result of his efforts. He desires tariff to be the issue, and as usual, the party he leads has fallen obediently into line and is working tooth and nail to carry out his wishes. For, despite the outbreaks of individual malcontents, there has never been since he first assumed the leadership any impairment of Williams's record as a leader, who could make his party as a whole do what he wanted. The word "party," of course, is here used to include that portion of it which is in the House and for the direction of which Williams is responsible.

At first the Republicans paid little attention to the Democratic plan of campaign. Of late they have been forced to do so. In the past week they have sent forth three of their debaters to endeavor to overcome the efforts of the Democrats—Boutell, Cushman, and the mighty Hepburn himself, who by universal consent is what Williams described him on Friday, "the strongest debater in either party in the House."

The Agricultural Appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole was what furnished the opportunity for the tariff debate last week, the liveliest of the session, except that on the Statehood bill. The Republicans, having been obliged to meet the issue so consistently hammered at by their opponents, are now meeting it with aggressive fighting. Yet they waited so long before doing it that all their speeches except Cushman's partook somewhat of the defensive.

It is thus established, so far as the House Democrats are effective, that the campaign will be on the tariff. Whether this is a wise proceeding or not only time can tell, and Williams, as the man who created the demand for the issue, must take the responsibility or get the credit for the result. The utter indifference of the Senate Democrats to the subject indicates that there are two opinions about the advisability of making such an issue. It is as certain as anything can be in politics that but for Williams's insistence the House Democrats would have been little more talkative on the subject than the Senators. Speeches might have been made, but without any definite purpose of making an issue and without any coherent plan of campaign, and the Republicans would have disregarded them.

The fight, of course, has attracted attention and created discussion in the Senate. One of the most eminent of the Republican Senators said yesterday: "I hope Williams will succeed in making the tariff the issue. It has looked hitherto as if it would be railroad rates, and that is discouraging. This rate proposition is a new one, and we're all at sea how to talk about it on the stump. If they get up the good old tariff question, our dear old friend, we can talk on that till the cows come home. We can talk tariff in our sleep. We're at home there. But we're not at home on this new-fangled rate business, and the Democrats are, naturally, as it's a Socialistic sort of scheme and the Democrats can give us cards and spades in talking about Socialism."

Not all the Republicans, however, are so well pleased. The men of the Middle West are uneasy. The action of the Republican Convention in the Tenth Iowa District in administering a rebuff to Secretary Shaw, the great apostle of standpatism, has created serious disquietude. The Minnesota and Wisconsin people do not seem enthusiastic about a tariff campaign, and as to Massachusetts, the strongest man in the Republican delegation from that State—Samuel W. McCall—openly declared on the floor that if Massachusetts had known last year that the Sixtieth Congress would not revise the tariff the State would have gone Democratic. Nor did McCall mitigate the force of this declaration by any assertion that the sentiment in the Bay State had changed since last year and since the discovery was made there that there was no hope of revision.

The tariff debate has been on different lines from past ones. Williams, being on the aggressive, defined the lines of the fight himself, and all his followers have fought on those lines. There has been no free-trade talk, none of the sort of language about "tearing down the Custom Houses" which Champ Clark indulged in nine years ago. The flagrancy of the Dingley rates and the need for cutting them down has been hammered home. Particular schedules have been taken up, and the great aim of the Democrats has been to prove that under the Dingley tariff goods made in America are exported and sold abroad cheaper than they are sold here.

The subject will be resumed when the next big appropriation bill gives an opportunity for general discussion, and now that the Republicans have assumed the defensive the debate is likely to cover the rest of the session.

STREET RAILWAYS' RECOVERY

Effect of Baltimore Fire Felt Only for Months—Outlook for San Francisco.

When it became apparent last week that the damage done to the street railways of San Francisco was trivial, compared with the loss which, during the first day or two after the earthquake, the company was supposed to have suffered, the interest of the stockholders was centred on the probable effects of the disaster on the future earnings of the street railway lines. The stocks of the United Railways Investment Company, which had shown depreciation in market value out of all proportion with the loss actually sustained by the company, recovered sharply last week, but the price of the stock still indicated that much uncertainty was felt concerning the after effects of the catastrophe in the way of lessened earnings.

In some ways the situation at San Francisco cannot be fairly compared with the record in the case of other large fires. Since disaster overtook San Francisco many people have left that city with no intention of returning. Some estimates of the exodus indicate that the population of the city will be reduced by a large percentage, permanently, or at least until the loss can be made up by the future growth of the city. On the other hand, it is claimed that artisans and others who will be drawn to the city while it is rebuilding will prove a material offset to the depopulation of the city which has resulted from the earthquake and conflagration.

In the case of other recent great fires, notably that at Baltimore, no substantial percentage of the population were led to seek homes elsewhere. Allowing, however, for this difference, the experience of the street railways in Baltimore after the fire of February, 1904, and of those of Paterson after the fire and flood two years previously, offers much encouragement to the holders of the securities of the San Francisco street railways.

In the case of Baltimore the recovery of the city's transportation lines from the effects of the fire was very rapid. The conflagration occurred on Feb. 7. The day before the fire the United Railways Company of Baltimore operated 621 cars over 34 lines, and its receipts amounted to $15,298. The service on the day after the fire included only 15 lines, and only 82 cars were run. The receipts on that day were $2,015. The receipts on the day after the fire, therefore, were only about 14 per cent. of those on the day before the fire. This was a reduction of 88 per cent. in car mileage and of 84 per cent. in passenger receipts compared with the corresponding day of the previous year.

By the end of February the comparison with the previous year showed a reduction of only 35.1 per cent. in car mileage and of 22.8 per cent. in passenger receipts. The decreases for the month of March, the month after the fire, were 22.43 per cent. in mileage and 6.65 per cent. in receipts; for April 10.15 in mileage and 1.17 per cent. in receipts. In May the tide was turned, and the receipts that month compared with those of the same month the year before showed an increase of $7,364, equal to 1.5 per cent. For the full year 1904 the receipts of the company amounted to $5,451,180, a decrease of only $20,449 compared with the receipts in 1903.

In the case of Paterson the effects of the fire of Feb. 9 and the flood of Feb. 16, 1902, on the earnings of the street railway lines of that town were almost negligible. The earnings of the Paterson lines of the Public Service Corporation for the month of February, 1902, amounted to $25,939, compared with $26,020 in February, 1901. For the year 1902 the receipts were $417,112, an actual increase of $12,642 over those of the previous year.

DR. CRAPSEY QUESTIONS PHYSICAL RESURRECTION

Paul, Most Authentic of Bible Historians, Does Not Mention It.

WOMAN AUTHOR OF HEBREWS?

The Clergyman, Whose Trial on Heresy Charges Ended Saturday, Says Saviour Will Never Come.

ITHACA, April 29.—The Rev. Dr. Algernon S. Crapsey of Rochester, whose trial on charges of heresy and violation of ordination vows ended at Batavia yesterday, preached two sermons to-day in Sage Chapel of Cornell University. In his morning sermon Dr. Crapsey said:

"If we wait for some far-off Saviour, if we wait for a curtain of blue to open and for some mighty being to come and achieve our salvation, we shall wait forever. The day will never come. It is not necessary. It is a degrading idea that perfection exists the like of which we cannot attain, albeit it be predicated on one hanging on a cross.

"Jesus, mighty man of old, call Him what you please, divine, yet He was one of us and needs us almost as much as we need Him. We help saints and prophets of old to achieve perfection by our kind words, our noble deeds, and our tender thoughts. You cannot put on the righteousness of Christ like a garment over our own unrighteousness. The cross is a small price to pay to attain perfection, even as our Father is perfect."

These remarks were made in elucidating a text from Hebrews, xi., 39-40, which Dr. Crapsey attributes to an "unknown writer, possibly a woman."

Dr. Crapsey declared that the object of God is to achieve a perfect universe. The means to this end is a sacrifice of the present to the future, of the gayety of innocence to the sobriety of sanctity, of the lower to the higher. The power to make sacrifices comes not from above, but from resident forces of man. Dr. Crapsey traced the growth of Jesus from infancy to divinity, attributing His spiritual growth to sacrifice.

In his afternoon sermon Dr. Crapsey pointed out variations in the narratives of Mark, Matthew, Luke, and John concerning the resurrection, and ascribed the variations to growth of tradition. He declared that Peter felt the spiritual presence of Jesus and translated it into physical terms. Dr. Crapsey explained the psychological condition of Peter which make him capable of feeling the presence of the crucified Christ.

He characterized the resurrection as a narrative, not history, as we know history, but as an occurrence which happened in the mysterious region of the soul. In the most authentic account, that of Paul, he said, no reference to a physical body or outward form is found.

DIED WITH HEAD IN OVEN.

Mrs. Anna Johnnasson, wife of James N. Johnnasson, a grocer, with a store at 688 Columbus Avenue, killed herself with illuminating gas in the kitchen of their apartment on the fifth floor of the flathouse at 103 West Ninety-third Street last night.

Just before 10 o'clock William Wellwood, the janitor, detected the odor of gas coming from the Johnnasson apartment. He reached the door, but could get no response. Then he climbed up to the kitchen window by way of the fire escape. Pushing up the window, he stepped inside.

As he did not reappear for several minutes, Angelo Pinto, who also lives in the house, and who had been waiting at the bottom of the fire escape for the janitor, climbed up after him. He found Wellwood lying on the floor of the kitchen unconscious, while the gas was pouring from the window. Pinto managed to drag the janitor out on the fire escape landing, where the fresh air soon revived him.

Then the two men made their way into the kitchen, where they found Mrs. Johnnasson in a kneeling position on the floor, with her head in the oven of a gas stove. A pillow was pulled close up around the woman's head in such a manner as to prevent the gas, which was pouring into the stove and thence into the oven, from escaping into the room. Mrs. Johnnasson was dead.

Despondency is said to be the cause of Mrs. Johnnasson's suicide.

GOLL GUILTY ON 19 COUNTS.

MILWAUKEE, April 29.—Henry G. Goll, formerly assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Milwaukee, was found guilty to-day by a jury in the United States District Court on nineteen counts out of thirty-four. Those on which he was found guilty relate to false entries and the misapplications of funds in the bank.

The amount of money Goll was alleged to have misapplied was about $250,000. Goll was unmoved by the verdict. Attorney William B. Rubin made a motion for a new trial. Judge Quarles announced that he would hear argument on the motion to-morrow.

Goll's trial lasted three weeks. The most interesting testimony was offered by the former President of the bank, Frank G. Bigelow, who is now serving a ten-year sentence at the Fort Leavenworth Prison, having pleaded guilty to looting the bank. Bigelow testified that many of the acts with which Goll was charged were committed under his direction.

Arrested for Sunday Painting.

Henry Gruen, 21 years old, of 402 Bushwick Avenue, Williamsburg, and Jacob Klein, 26 years old, of 84 Gerry Street, painters, were arrested yesterday on complaint of a delegation of church people on a charge of violating the Sunday law. At the time of their arrest the men were engaged in painting a house in Middleton Street. Churchgoers complained to Capt. Hollahan of the Clymer Street Police Station.

FOOD REFUSED TO REFUGEES.

Painful Experience of New Yorkers in Pittsburg—Police Help Them.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 29.—Food was refused here this morning to eight San Francisco hungry and penniless refugees, suffering from burns and bruises. They were en route to New York, and asked for food at the Pennsylvania Company restaurant in the Union Depot.

Police Superintendent Kennelly and Detective Seifert induced the restaurant manager to change his mind. Then the refugees got all they wanted to eat.

The party was made up of Robert J. Barkelle and his sister Helena of 110 East 118th Street; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wheeler and their five-year-old son Harold of 248 Hart Street, Brooklyn; Miss Agnes Glover, a hospital nurse, of Bangor, Maine; William McIntyre, a New York vaudeville artist, and Charles Richardson, a New York bartender.

Little Harold Wheeler is totally blind, the result of an explosion during the fire. Miss Glover is suffering with two broken ribs, a bad scalp wound, and paralysis of the vocal chords. All of the others sustained minor injuries.

Miss Barkelle lost $70,000 worth of property by the earthquake and fire. Mrs. Wheeler received a message from her father telling her to stop over in St. Louis and he would wire money to her. She responded she would not need it and shared what she had with her fellow sufferers. She was penniless when they reached Chicago, and they were hungry when they left Chicago last night. When they arrived here this morning they had to wait all day to make connections. They applied at the Union Depot restaurant of the Pennsylvania Company for food and explained their condition. A curt refusal was given since they were penniless.

Three of the men went to the Central Station and told their story. Chief of Police Kennelly and Detective Seifert went at once to the depot with them. There the manager assured them it was all a mistake, and the refugees were taken in and fed with the best the place had.

Supt. Kennelly bought Pullman sleeping car tickets for the party, and they started East this evening, expecting to get the first night's rest they have had since leaving San Francisco.

NO REPLY TO OPERATORS.

Hundreds in Battle Near Mount Carmel—Strike Indications.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., April 29.—It has been decided by President Mitchell that no further reply shall be made to the operators, except the formal acknowledgement of their last refusal, unless the Mine Workers' Convention, which is to meet at Scranton next Thursday, decides to make some other proposition. This, however, is not expected. There are pronounced indications of a strike to-day. Most of the delegates have been instructed to follow the advice of President Mitchell, although a few agree that they will oppose a strike.

Officials of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company report to-day that last night seventy workmen at the Sayre Colliery, near Mount Carmel, were attacked by a mob of several hundred men. The Burgess of Mount Carmel, who tried to disperse the rioters, was roughly handled. One worker had a finger shot off, several were thrown into a creek, and others were clubbed and stoned.

W. A. Lathrop of the Pennsylvania Coal and Coke Company in the Clearfield district, who is here to-day, said that his company, believing the men want to return to work, will make an effort to-morrow to break the suspension and resume mining.

JIM CROW ELEVATOR RULE.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 29.—Separate elevators for whites and blacks is the latest line drawn between the races in Columbia. Although there is but one building in Columbia in which elevators are used to any extent, the tall National Loan and Exchange Bank building, the "Jim Crow" rule will hereafter be enforced in elevators as on railroad trains and on street cars.

An order has just been issued requiring negroes to use a separate car from the whites. There are a large number of offices in the bank building in which many women are employed as stenographers and clerks. There has been considerable complaint about the blacks crowding themselves into the cars with them, and on several occasions clashes have been narrowly averted.

The immediate cause of the action by the owners of the building grew out of the fact that a negro porter of a club on the twelfth floor was slow to remove his hat when ordered to do so while women were in the car. He was promptly discharged by the club.

WHO HAS LINCOLN'S WATCH?

He Will Be Interested in This Story of the 84-Year-Old Juror.

Among the jurors serving in the Supreme Court last week was one 84 years young. He said so himself. He looks and acts just as young as he says he feels. This man is Jonathan Dillon of 46 West 117th Street. He has been engaged in the watchmaking business for the best part of seventy-four years.

Mr. Dillon, who has a remarkable memory and an interesting fund of reminiscence, tells a new story which has to do with Abraham Lincoln.

"When the civil war broke out," said Mr. Dillon, "I was in the employ of M. W. Galt & Co. on Pennsylvania Avenue, near Seventh Street, in Washington. I was the only Union sympathizer working in the shop.

"I was working upstairs when Mr. Galt came up. He was very much excited, and gasped:

"'Dillon, war has begun; the first shot has been fired.'

"At that moment I had in my hand Abraham Lincoln's watch, which I had been repairing. It was a gold, hunting case, English lever watch. The late John Hay told me afterward that it was the first watch Mr. Lincoln ever owned.

"I was in the act of screwing on the dial when Mr. Galt announced the news. I unscrewed the dial, and with a sharp instrument wrote on the metal beneath:

"'The first gun is fired. Slavery is dead. Thank God we have a President who at least will try.'

"Then I signed my name and the date. So far as I know, no one but myself ever saw the inscription, and I do not know into whose hands Mr. Lincoln's watch fell at his death."

Mr. Dillon was born in the City of Waterford, Ireland, where his ancestors had been watchmakers for generations.

"I have newspapers," he said, "containing my father's and grandfather's advertisements back 150 years. I was never out of work for twenty-four hours at a time until I retired."

"How long ago was that?" the old watchmaker was asked.

"Well, I wouldn't like to admit that I have quit yet," was the reply. "My eyes are not as good as they were once, but they are still as good as those of any one I know. When I was younger I frequently amazed friends by standing on Jersey City Heights and reading signs in Manhattan. My friends often accused me of locating and learning them before I crossed the river, but that was not the case. I could actually read them at that distance."

The law does not oblige a citizen to serve as a juror after he is 70 years old. Mr. Dillon rather enjoys the work.

EXHIBITION BASEBALL FOR SAN FRANCISCO FUND

Crowd of 15,000 Persons See New Yorks Beat Champions.

OVER $5,600 IS REALIZED

"Highlanders" Bat Heavily and Win Easily—No Objection Raised Because of Sunday Law Infraction.

A trifle over fifty-six hundred dollars was realized for the San Francisco relief fund b ythe baseball game yesterday afternoon at American League Park. Nearly 15,000 people assembled at the grounds ostensibly to see the champion Athletics and the Greater New Yorks play the first championship ball game ever played in New York on Sunday. They saw the two teams play an exhibition match, interesting enough in its way, but not a league contest. In consequence it lacked some of the fire that makes for baseball its popularity, and it is possible that the crowd would not have been so large had it understood the conditions.

It was a holiday crowd and in a holiday humor. It saw the home team start off with a rush and win out hands down. It saw plenty of lively hitting on both sides that maintained the interest well in spite of the one-sided score, and it was contributing to a cause for which it has the most profound sympathy. So it went away well satisfied with the afternoon.

There was never any doubt about the teams being permitted to play in spite of the Sunday law. From no source came any objection. There were many in the crowd who doubtless would not have been there had the game been for a less worthy object. And there were others there who might have been less profitably employed. There was none of the rush that characterizes most big events in New York, for the people came early and avoided the crush, but all the seats in the big stands were filled and many were standing in the grand stands when play began at 3 o'clock. No official figures of the attendance were announced, but it was estimated that there were 15,000 within the inclosure.

And there were several hundred outside. The fact that it was a benefit game did not deter a number from gathering on deadhead hill and watching the play from that vantage point.

No untoward incident occurred to mar the day. There was a slight sprinkling of rain that caused some of the bleacherites to withdraw when the match was half over, but it ceased almost immediately, and the majority remained to the end, well pleased with the free hitting. When they filed out of the ground there was some grumbling over the long delays at the 168th Street Subway station, at which many were compelled to wait nearly an hour for the shuttle trains to take them eleven blocks to the expresses, but they were markedly mild tempered, even in the face of this provocation. Altogether, the experiment of Sunday baseball was voted a wholly satisfactory innovation.

Considering their handicapped condition and their recent disastrous Eastern and Southern trip, the all-around play of the Greater New Yorks could be improved upon but very little, and their one-sided victory over the champions came as a great surprise to the big attendance. With Elberfeld nursing some damaged fingers and the injury to Laporte at third base during the preliminary practice, Manager Griffith was compelled to rearrange his team by placing Moriarity at third base and Conroy at short. Furthermore, he gave Thomas of last year's Providence team a trial behind the bat, and before the game had proceeded very far Hahn was slightly injured on the bases, and his place was taken by the new recruit from the Southern League, Delehanty. It was this player's, as well as Thomas's, first essay in a big game this year, and while Delehanty had but one chance in the field, he hit safely once out of two times at the bat. Thomas's catching, however, was of the highest order, and while striking out once, he redeemed himself by a slashing three-base hit to right field.

The Quakers presented Henley in the box, but his pitching was far below the form he showed in the world's championship series last Fall. From the first inning until the time he was taken out of the game the local men hammered his delivery all over the field, and when Dygert took his place, in the fourth inning, the New Yorks had made eight hits, including a home run and three triples. The new-comer, however, stopped all this, four hits only being recorded against him.

Le Roy pitched admirably, but his excellent support had much to do with the victory. Not a hit was made off him until the fourth inning, and then the Quakers began to bat somewhat freely, but their efforts would have entitled them to but one run had not Conroy made a bad throw to first, which allowed two men to cross the plate. Their other run was the result of Dygert's hit along the right-field foul line for three bases and a single by Lord.

The New Yorks started off with five runs in the first inning, on two singles, a base on balls, Conroy's triple, and Moriarity's home run, the ball bounding over the left-field fence near the "bleacheries." The score:

More Baseball Money for Sufferers.

Montreal won another game from Jersey City yesterday, the score being 8 to 1. It was the first Sunday baseball game in Jersey City, and although several clergymen wanted it stopped, the police declined to interfere because the proceeds were to be given to the San Francisco sufferers. Fully 8,000 persons were in attendance, but the game was devoid of interest. The local men were weak at the bat, and their fielding was slow and careless. The score:

Sons of St. George at Church.

By invitation of the Rev. Arthur B. Howard, rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, West Eleventh Street and Waverley Place, the Society of the Sons of St. George held their annual St. George's Day service at the church last night. The building was draped with the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, with a large Cross of St. George flag behind the altar.

UNCLE SAM MAKING CEMENT.

Dealers Ask 50 Per Cent. Above Normal Rate for Irrigation Projects.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The irrigation policy is driving the United States Government into the cementmaking business. Uncle Sam has been making cement in a quiet way, and seems likely to extend his operations in that line.

To construct the dams for the twenty-four irrigation projects under way in the Far West, the Government either was compelled to ship cement from Europe or from the Far Eastern seaboard, or manufacture its own product. In the Salt River project in Arizona a test has been made which is very satisfactory to the Government. Hundreds of barrels of cement are being turned out daily, at a cost far below the market price.

The unprecedented demand for cement throughout the West has already overtaxed the capacity of the mills, and almost without exception every request of the Government for bids on the twenty-four irrigation projects has been turned down. Recently proposals were requested from eight manufacturers and dealers in cement for the 2,000 barrels required for an Idaho project. Only one proposal was received, and that was at a rate 50 per cent. higher than the firm would have sold it for a few months ago. The Government rejected it.

Many of the Government works are remote from railroads, and cement beds are adjacent to them. So thoroughly aroused are the people of the thirteen States and Territories to the necessity for completing these projects that they will insist that the Government proceed with the manufacture of enough cement to complete the projects.

PATCHOGUE CARNIVAL QUEEN.

Miss Edith Ginnochio Is Elected After a Lively Contest.

Special to The New York Times.

PATCHOGUE, L. I., April 29.—No ballot in years has excited such general interest as that just cast here, which awards the place of Queen in the coming Patchogue Trade Carnival to Edith, the eighteen-year-old daughter of J. Ginnochio, a merchant of this village. The carnival, which occurs May 3, 4, and 5, will be modeled after the Mardi Gras festivities of New Orleans.

The ballot was cast to decide who is to occupy the golden chariot, which, drawn by six white horses, will head the procession next Saturday, the last day of the carnival. The result of the vote was in doubt until almost the last moment, when Miss Ginnochio's admirers sent in boys carrying hampers of ballots which won an overwhelming victory. She got 27,550 votes, 15,000 more than Miss Doris Wildsmith, her nearest competitor, received. The ballots were cast on coupons cut from a local newspaper.

METHODISTS IN RIVAL CAMPS.

The Rev. Mr. Wilson Says His Socialism Estranged Part of Flock.

RIDGEFIELD PARK, N. J., April 29.—As a result of a split among the Methodists here half of the members of that denomination to-day attended services at the Town Hall, where the Rev. A. L. Wilson officiated. The other half went to the regular place of worship, where the Rev. Mr. Fowler preached.

Mr. Fowler was sent here by the Methodist Conference to take Mr. Wilson's place, Mr. Wilson having been ordered to Staten Island. Mr. Wilson refused to go, and sent his parchments to the Conference. Now he has organized a "People's Church" here.

"I am a Socialist," said Mr. Wilson to-day, "and that is why the Conference ordered me away from here. I was accused of preaching Socialism from the pulpit. I will continue to advance Socialism during the week, but will preach the plain Gospel on Sunday."

WITH THROAT CUT IN A WELL.

Alfred Schubert of East Ninth Street Found Dead in Newtown.

The body of Alfred Schubert of 339 East Ninth Street, Manhattan, was found yesterday afternoon at the bottom of St. Ronan's Well, in Jackson Avenue, Newtown, L. I., about a mile west of Flushing. There was a deep gash in the man's throat, and at the top of the well were found a knife with a broken blade, an overcoat, and a hat.

Schubert has been missing from home for several days. His body was identified last night. He leaves a widow and one daughter. Schubert was a plasterer.

The well is in a lonely neighborhood, there being no houses within half a mile. On Sunday it is a favorite place for ball players, and the discovery was made by two young men who had gone there yesterday to play ball.

The police think the man toppled into the well after he had cut his throat.

OLYMPIC GOLF CUP EVENT.

Date Changed by Westerners to Sept. 3—Open to World.

The Board of Directors of the Western Golf Association have changed the dates for the Olympic Cup competition and the Western Amateur championship from July 2 to 7, to Sept. 3 to 8, inclusive. The Olympic Cup, open to teams of four from any golf association in the world, will be played on Sept. 3, and the amateur championship during the five following days.

The dates so fixed are subsequent to those adopted by the United States Golf Association for its annual championship, which is to be played at Englewood, N. J., on July 10 to 14. While the Western Association was anxious to follow the established precedent and fix the dates for its annual event prior to those of the National, it was absolutely debarred from so doing by reason of the unusually early dates selected for the latter event.

The Western Association has uniformly sought to uphold the dignity of the National title by holding its events prior to the National, in order to obviate the possibility of the National title holder being defeated in the Western, and thus, in a measure, detracting from his National honors. In seeking to follow the precedent heretofore established, the Western Golf Association was limited in its choice of dates, owing to the early selections made by the United States Golf Association. Serious objection was made by Western golfers to any dates prior to July 1, owing to the fact that but little practice is had in the Western district during the early season, and the absence in college of many of the younger contingent.

MANY FAST BRUSHES ON SPEEDWAY COURSE

New Trotters and Pacers Join Light Harness Brigade.

HONORS ARE EVENLY DIVIDED

There was an increased attendance on the Speedway yesterday of both the light-harness performers and the spectators. Nearly all the prominent road drivers were on hand, and the pleasant weather brought out nearly 5,000 onlookers. Many new horses swelled the list of the regulars, and brushes were close and frequent. The conditions underfoot were perfect and favored fast going. The near approach of the annual Speedway parade and horse show was also responsible for the unusual number of the light-harness brigade, and the work of the new-comers was carefully watched. From indications, the matinée season will be the most interesting ever witnessed on the Speedway. With eleven cups offered for competition and several Grand Circuit performers in the ranks, the meetings should be brimful of interest.

The parade and horse show will be held next Saturday, commencing at 2 P. M., and the matinée series will open on the following Thursday. Miss Giulia P. Morosini has again donated a thousand-dollar cup for the horse winning the greatest number of heats during the season, and the other ten cups will be divided between the trotters and pacers.

Brushing began early yesterday, George L. Buckman's Brown Velvet and Dr. H. D. Gill's Sue Dix being the first pair to arouse interest. Brown Velvet won by a close margin. Joseph Murphy's Major Wilson took the measure of Philip Helperhausen's Nellie Wilkes, the finish being of the hair-raising order. Kitty Sultan, driven by Dr. L. J. Kieran, made matters interesting for T. S. Kennedy's Teddy K., and led him over the finish by a couple of lengths. Philip Heipenhausen sent Nellie Wilkes after one of her own family, Kitty Wilkes, with W. Scott driving, and after a hard brush won by a neck. The result pleased the crowd, and was the first of many similar finishes.

Dr. L. J. Kieran's Kitty Sultan engaged Jim Shevlin in two brushes, winning both. H. K. Phillips drove Jim Shevlin, which broke at the quarter pole. An exciting contest followed, in which Major Wilson, Effie Shannon, and Jim Shevlin took part, the former securing the verdict by less than a neck, with the same distance separating the other two.

G. M. Archer brought out Lady Direct, and received great applause when he won from Coast Marie, the latter being handled by Trainer Fleming. James F. Gibbons, with his new performer, Bessie G., broke even in two heats with Lady Direct. Mr. Gibbons says he will change the name of his new purchase and will surprise the horsemen when he gets properly going.

One of the closest brushes of the day was between J. Murphy's Major Wilson, Dr. H. D. Gill's Sue Dix, and G. W. Archer's Lady Direct, which finished in the order named. Lewis W. Boynton, behind Lord March, showed a clean pair of heels to H. B. Gates and Frank Bashford. Thomas G. Hinds, with David Moscovite, took part in three brushes, winning two of them. Abe Meyer, with Bertha M., and Claus Bohling, with Kingmond, the former Speedway champion, made an even break on a two-heat trial.

Harry Thorne drove George A. Huber's Harry Van, and after a hard struggle defeated Dr. Joseph Semon's chestnut mare Marional. It was a hard brush, and Harry Van won by a few inches. George H. Huber's Estrella, driven by Rue Clark, defeated W. Scott's Kitty Wilkes by half a length, and afterward finished third to Charles Wieland's Dan T. and George L. Buckman's bay gelding Net Sheldon, 2:19¾.

Ten horses started in the following brush, but only four finished. The winner was Major Wilson, driven by Joseph Shannon. H. B. Gates's Frank Bashford was second, and H. K. Phillips's Jim Shevlin was third. George H. Huber, behind Gracie Pandit, led William J. Clark, with Ildirim, over the finish by two lengths.

Charles S. Rice made his last appearance before his lengthy trip to California with May Hathaway, defeating Kitty Wilkes. Kingmond started in the brush, but quit at the quarter pole. It was the trotter against the pacer, and the former won. Andrew Cone's Alice Drake won her first brush against S. T. De Lee's Leo T., but lost the next brush to Dr. Joseph Semon's Maronial.

One of the best brushes of the day was between Dr. Gill's Coast Marie, Dr. J. L. Kieran's Kitty Sultan, and Sue Dix, which was won by the first named.

Toward the end of the brushing Dan T. won a questionable victory over James Sheldon, and May Hathaway defeated Susie G. and Don Riley, driven by Charles S. Rice, J. H. Campbell, and E. J. La Place, respectively.

Among the other members of the light harness brigade noticed on the Speedway were: Dr. A. Krahmer, with Burgess; A. C. Schuyler, with Queen Belle, 2:29½; Nathan L. Ely, with Staff; Abe Meyer, with Bertha M.; Elmer Stevens, with Bright Ink; Andy Kane, with Juna Belle; Toby Greenbaum, with Peter H. and Bugle Call, and Fred Wright, with a new Kentucky pacer.

KAISER'S ENVOY SEES YACHTS

Commander Hebbinghaus Also Goes Over International Race Course.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., April 29.—After arranging with the Eastern Yacht Club all the details for the international yacht races between German and American boats, Commander Hebbinghaus of the Imperial German Navy, representing the Kaiser, to-day inspected the course off Marblehead, over which the German-American races will be sailed in September. He also saw several of the boats building for the elimination trials.

Commander Hebbinghaus was the guest of the Regatta Committee of the Eastern Yacht Club, who gave him every facility to examine the craft that are preparing for the defense of the Roosevelt Cup. He was met at a Boston dock by the committee and taken on a tug to Marblehead and Manchester, where he visited the three shops where boats for the match are under construction.

After returning to Boston, Commander Hebbinghaus expressed himself as delighted with the trip, saying the courtesy of the committee and the absence of the usual secrecy which has marked the management of previous international contests during the preliminary stages, was most pleasing.

He believed, he said, that the American designers had gone to the limit allowed by the German Sonderklasse rule, under which the boats for the match are designed. "The boats I have seen," he said, "are big for the rule. The designers have taken all they can get."

Fourteen boats have been ordered for the trials, with a possibility of two others being ordered in a few days. Three New York designers, three in Boston, and N. G. Herreshoff are represented by the boats thus far ordered, with one amateur designer from Boston in the list.

Commander Hebbinghaus says nine boats are already being built in Germany for the trials to be held in July at Kiel, one of which is for the Crown Prince. Three of these will be sent to this country to contest in the match, which will be held in September.

ATHLETES SEE GREEK PLAY.

ATHENS, April 29.—The Olympic programme to-day included a remarkable aquatic display and a performance of Sophocles's tragedy, "Oedipus Tyrannus," given by the company from the Royal Theatre on a temporary stage erected in the Stadium. King George and all the members of the royal family attended both occasions, and there was an enormous outpouring of the populace to see both spectacles.

The aquatic carnival was presented by the Swedens. It included diving, life saving, and water polo, and was entirely novel to the Athenians. It was enthusiastically received. The play was equally entertaining to the visitors and provoked as great admiration.

Crown Prince Constantine gave a luncheon to-day in honor of the Greek and foreign delegates, and to-night there is an illumination of the harbor that presents a spectacle like a fairyland, with the myriads of lights displayed.

The only contests decided were the rifle shooting competitions. In this the Swiss team was successful, defeating Norwegian and French competitors, besides the Greeks. The individual championship of the world, however, fell to Skattebo, the wonderful Norwegian shot. The track and field events will be continued to-morrow, when some of the most important races are to be decided.

Training at Empire Track.

Empire City Park at Yonkers is now the headquarters of the light-harness brigade in the East, and more horses are in training there than ever before. Charles Cornelius, who was formerly in charge of old Monmouth Park, is in charge, and a big force of men are at work putting the track and buildings in good condition for the season, which opens the middle of next month.

Several important grand circuit campaigners are stabled at the track. John H. Shults has sent his entire training stable there from Port Chester, Parkville, Memphis, and other tracks, and occupies over thirty stalls. Monroe Salisbury has also engaged thirty stalls for the East View Farm horses. He is now on his way East from Pleasanton, Cal., with a big stable. They are mostly the get of Direct, 2:05½, and Directum Kelly, 2:08¼. Fred T. Steinway has fifteen fast trotters and pacers in training. Nathan Straus occupies a stable with some of his choicest matinee and Speedway horses. Charles Thompson and Jerome Whelpley are training public stables, and each has large strings.

Oarsmen on the Harlem River.

President O'Connell of the Harlem Regatta Association expects a record-breaking list of entries for the annual Decoration Day regatta. In addition to the possibility of one or more college crews, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington will be well represented. The entries from Philadelphia will include a junior and intermediate single and senior eight from the West Philadelphia Boat Club, junior quadruple sculls from the Vesper Boat Club, junior eight from the Fairmount Rowing Club, association single from the Undine Boat Club, junior quadruple sculls and four from the Pennsylvania Barge Club, and Wood has entered the association single. Entries have been assured from the Ariel and Arundel Clubs of Baltimore, Potomac of Washington, and clubs from Springfield and Arlington, Mass.

There was a big turnout of oarsmen on the Harlem yesterday, and many of the clubs sent out crews both morning and afternoon. Over 250 oarsmen were on the river. The best work of the day was done by the First Bohemian junior eight, which comprised Krejza, A. Wilhelm, Behensky, Havel, Leznovsky, J. Wilhelm, Sachanek, and Milacek. Besley, Budre, Mayor, and Louis went out in a four. Frank Veselek rowed single in the morning and doubled up with Julius Bradley in the afternoon. The club has abandoned the plan to put a junior four gig on the water.

The Metropolitan Club house presented a busy scene. Joseph Cohalan was out in a single and coached the club's junior four. Keidley and Rivas rowed double. The intermediate four—Rink, Wetzler, Nelson, and Hager—did not show promising form. On Friday last the eight-oared shell ran into a mud flat and was injured, making a big check in the boat. It will be several days before it can be repaired. The Crescent junior eight did good work, while the junior four and two doubles and a single kept those in training busy. The junior pair-oared shells were manned by Graham and Vingrey and Haskins and Little. W. Cooper was out in a single, and Little, Livingston, Graham, and Koop made up a good junior four.

Members of the Friendship Club are getting into line. A junior double, McKenna and Dewes, and junior single, Capt. Scannell, represented the club in the morning, and McKenna, Dewes, Aubit, and Bremer in a quadruple rowed several miles in the afternoon. There was little doing at the Harlem Rowing Club house. One ambitious single sculler, who has lately joined the club, went out in a gig, but before he had rowed 200 yards the boat tipped over. The oarsman received an impromptu bath. He was picked up by a passing boat and reached the clubhouse safely. Capt. Nagle expects to put out several crews next Sunday.

Auto Importer Accused of Scorching.

Emile Voight, an automobile importer, was arrested for exceeding the speed limit as he leaped from a two-seated racer in front of the Hotel Marie Antoinette last night. Bicycle Policeman Kupfriar had chased Voight from Fifty-ninth Street and Broadway. Voight had been trying a new machine. He was locked up in the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, where he was charged with traveling at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour. Later he was bailed out.

Genuine

Gibson's

Is always good whiskey

REASONS:

ONE—Every cigar that I sell is manufactured right here in the cleanest cigar factory and under the most careful sanitary conditions that I have ever seen. It is "finicky" clean, according to some.

TWO—This factory is very close to the business center of the third largest city in the United States, within ten minutes of the City Hall and Broad Street Station, and but five minutes from the Reading Terminal. People familiar with Philadelphia will recognize the fact that I am not trying to hide my factory.

THREE—All visitors to my office are invited to go through the factory and see the cigars made. They can readily see that I am not trying to hide anything in it.

FOUR—My cigars are shipped direct from the factory to my customers, in the best possible condition.

FIVE—The fillers of these cigars are clear Havana of good quality—not only clear, but long, clean, Havana—no shorts or cuttings are used. The wrappers are genuine Sumatra. They are hand made, by the best of workmen. The making has much to do with the smoking qualities of a cigar.

SIX—(and best)—I sell them to the consumer by the hundred at wholesale prices.

MY OFFER IS:—I will, upon request, send one hundred Shivers' Panatela Cigars on approval to a reader of The Times, express prepaid. He may smoke ten cigars and return the remaining ninety at my expense, if he is not pleased with them; if he is pleased, and keeps them, he agrees to remit the price, $5.00, within ten days.

In ordering, please enclose business card or give personal references, and state whether mild, medium, or strong cigars are desired.

THE MORTGAGE TAX BILL.

The situation of the amended Recorded Mortgage Tax bill in the State Senate is peculiar and is not creditable to those who are responsible for it.

The bill removes all the objections to the one passed by a vote of 49 to 18 in the Senate made in the veto message of Gov. HIGGINS. Logically and in effect it is therefore the Governor's bill, and he is committed by his past course to it. It is a necessary inference that he would sign it if it were sent to him. It is a bill unquestionably approved by a majority of the Senate as well as by a majority of the Assembly, and it has general public approval. It is sound in principle, practical in its operation, in the interest of all classes, and imperative to some very large classes. In its present legislative position there is no question that it would be passed if it could be brought to a vote. All the tactics of the opposition minority are obstructive in their nature and intent.

We understand that Senator PAGE of the Nineteenth District has been subjected to criticism by some of the party leaders in the Senate because he has sought to give to the Mortgage Tax bill equality of privilege with other bills, especially the Good Roads bill, which happens to be very popular in all parts of the State. Viewing the matter the other way around, it seems to be the determination of Senator PAGE that the other bills shall not be advanced unless the Mortgage Tax bill is also and equitably advanced. We do not see that he exposes himself to the slightest just disapprobation for such a course, and certainly not from the minority faction that is seeking to kill the Mortgage Tax bill by obstruction. If the latter succeed, a great public injury will be done, the express will of the people will have been disregarded, the Governor will have been placed in a most disagreeable position, and the Senate will have been discredited. We hope that no such results will be courted, but that the bill will be treated as on its merits it distinctly should be.

FAVORS TO FOREIGNERS.

The running debate on the tariff which Mr. WILLIAMS has forced on the House of Representatives is bothering the majority leaders a good deal. They are especially annoyed by the proofs that have been submitted that a number of highly protected goods are habitually sold cheaper in foreign markets than they can be bought in our own. There are plenty of explanations of the fact, but there are no adequate excuses, much less is there any decent justification.

Take the now famous matter of American-made watches, which Mr. WILLIAMS has put before the House in great particularity, with detailed figures and an ample explanation of them. The first impulse of the Republicans was to deny the facts, and in this rash endeavor they were encouraged by some of the authorities in the watch trade. They declared that the watches never had been exported and reimported, but had been picked up in some mysterious way at some impossible rates here in the United States. The specific evidence on this point was too plain to permit persistence in it, and Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois, the home of one of the largest watch concerns, undertook to meet Mr. WILLIAMS with a "poser" in the line of political economy. He challenged him to say if articles exported at low prices would not necessarily come right back as soon as the home prices were made enough higher to meet the expenses of reimportation. The reply was simple. Of course they would, as these watches had, though the Republicans had earnestly been denying that they had. Mr. WILLIAMS might also have recalled the fact mentioned in his previous speeches that every possible precaution is taken by the exporters to prevent the goods being brought back to interfere with the high domestic prices.

In the matter of steel plates for ship construction, and still more in the matter of steel rails exported, which Mr. WILLIAMS cited, there is, of course, no possibility of reimportation. The wrong to the American buyer is all the greater, because he cannot hope to get the articles back under the manipulation of some energetic and enterprising dealer. Take, for instance, the case of the rails for the Mexican National Railroad, where $28 a ton was paid for rails to be used within the United States and only $24 for those used beyond the border. There is only one rational interpretation of that fact. It is not only that railroad construction at home is discouraged, but that the business of the home roads is taxed, for private benefit, at least 16.66 per cent. on the original cost of the rails and on replacements and repairs. That is a tax on one of the prime necessaries of life, if ever there was one.

It is not, moreover, in the least a tax for the establishment of an infant industry or the building up of a weak one subject to unusual competition. It is a tax for the enrichment of a practical monopoly, of a corporation of greater power, extent, and wealth than has ever been known in the history of industry in this country, and one that, according to its own friends, controls more than half the trade and the sources of material in the United States. Every pound of food, every yard of clothing, every particle of merchandise transported in the United States is obliged by this monstrous tariff law to pay its share of the 16.66 per cent. tax imposed on rails as compared with the prices given abroad for the products of the same mills. We do not feel as sure as Mr. WILLIAMS does that the Republicans "have got to defend this system or destroy it," but we are sure that the debate now going on and likely to go on long after Congress adjourns will arouse the public mind as it has not been aroused in a good while.

"RAINES LAW HOTELS."

It is surprising how much damage to an evil institution can be done by applying to it the simplest rules for the protection of society. For many years it has been regarded by all sorts of reformers in this city as practically impossible to suppress or seriously to check the prevalence of that peculiar nuisance and pest known as the "Raines law hotel." The name is in some respects unfair, because there is a considerable number of hotels doing a clean and lawful business under the provisions of the State liquor statute; but there are so many of a very low and revolting character that the name has come to be connected with them only.

Many efforts had been made and had failed to secure the repeal or the improvement of the direct provisions of the law by which these places were protected—in practice if not intentionally—until the scheme was devised of making them conform to the requirements of the building law as to fireproof construction in buildings intended for what these places pretended to be and were not. In other words, if they were to have the privileges and advantages of "hotels," they must comply with the conditions imposed upon real hotels. It has been a long, hard fight to get this plan embodied in law, but the fight has been successful, and it is now estimated that some 4,000 of the places will be compelled to abandon their State privileges, and either close up or recur to simple saloon licenses. This means that they cannot keep open Sundays or "after hours." They cannot therefore carry on the nefarious traffic in which so many of them have been engaged.

Nor is this the limit of their troubles. Many of them might descend to the narrow plane of saloon business and trust to the "side-door" device to add to their profits. But on the one hand, the State excise authorities are bent on collecting fines more vigorously than in the past, and on the other the bonding companies are becoming timid as to the risks involved in giving security for obedience to the law. The charge for a bond in Manhattan has been doubled, and in cases of suspected "parties" has been much more increased, while some 500 particularly venturesome dealers are reported to have been blacklisted by the bond companies. The way of these special transgressors bids fair for a time at least to be extremely hard.

REPUBLICAN POLICIES.

Secretary SHAW's able, eloquent, illuminating, and—we must say it—unconvincing speech finds a place of honor in the local protectionist organ which is least wearied in well-doing. But while the Secretary gets a three-column make-up and a spread head in New York, the conventions of his own State are showing a critical frame of mind. How does it profit the Secretary to carry New York if he cannot carry Iowa against the "Iowa idea"? However, the Secretary contributes to the tariff discussion one new Shaw idea. "Originally," says the orator who cannot convince his own neighbors, it was thought that our industries needed protection until they could endure a worldwide competition. It was not then anticipated, he continues, that protection would produce a standard of wages above the world's, but this having resulted, we must now protect, not our industries, but our standard of living.

The sentiment is beautiful, but those with memories recall that that same "standard of living" was largely responsible for the last Republican defeat. It was the women shoppers who first discovered that prices of living advanced faster than wages, and that discovery is being repeated at the present moment. There are a half million men on strike in the coal industry for that reason and others. There is hardly a household in the land whose head is not now hearing from the women shoppers from day to day. Another phase of this appears in the debates at Washington over relieving San Francisco from the burden and impediment placed upon its rebuilding by the tariff. If high prices and high wages are so beneficial, why not raise the tariff a trifle by way of benefiting San Francisco? The additional extortion might be paid over to the local Relief Committee direct, and the rest of us would get our benefits in a sense of virtue and—perhaps—in higher wages.

The twin of the Republican tariff policy is the currency policy, and it is a little remarkable that relief from both mercies is the first thought in time of trouble. Students of banking, and even some practical men of affairs, do not regard sound principles, respecting either the currency or the tariff, as something exotic, to be used in the last resort, and then laid away until the next crisis. Sanitation, not medication, is their idea; the prevention of disease rather than its cure. Certainly no theories of either tariff or currency could have averted San Francisco's emergency, and not a feather's weight will be laid by those of our way of thought in the way of alleviating the burdens placed upon industry by the tariff. Upon the contrary, the argument is all the other way. Whatever help San Francisco will get from cheaper building materials all the country ought to have all the time. Tariff reform, like currency reform, is not > * * * too bright or good

> For human nature's daily food.

Upon the contrary both are best adapted to daily life, and to the habitual easing of the emergencies constantly arising, and which to the individual may be as serious as what is happening is to San Francisco. The merchant who pays dearly for accommodation because our currency is confined in a rigid mold, and the building contractor who cannot contract because materials are kept sky-high artificially, are face to face with emergencies created by legislation, not by trade conditions.

Secretary SHAW has heroically renounced his "rubber" currency views, and is stretching the Treasury resources commendably. The idea of stretching the tariff is equally good, and if the door is once opened there are hopes that it will not be closed quite so tightly as before. If the tariff door were shut only when our markets were overstocked, and then as an aid to stimulating home markets, something might be said for such an emergency proposition. But a tariff door which is kept tight when consumers' necessities are being exploited by producers who are selling cheap abroad and dear at home is an absurdity and nuisance well exemplified by the alleviation proposed for San Francisco. In the way of currency reform also we favor something which shall be comfortable for day-to-day use, and not something to cure a panic when the same system has produced it.

OTHER CITIES ON THE SLOPE.

Wall Street in its sordid and cynical way has been guessing that now was the time of harvest for San Francisco's rival ports to the north. It may be so, and yet the facts are more agreeable than Wall Street's uncharitable peering into the future.

Doubtless there will be some overflow from San Francisco's commerce northward for a time, and its difficulty will be the opportunity of Portland and Seattle and the Sound region. But the cities of that region are acting like the knights who roamed about seeking to do some small deed of virtue for their ladies' sakes. Portland, for example, had given San Francisco $150,000 some time since, and has not yet stopped its generosity. The Lewis and Clark Exposition surplus of $100,000 is said to be destined for the relief of the rival city to the south, and a like disposition will probably be made of the "Heppner" disaster fund surplus.

The sister cities upon the Pacific slope are acting in a manner to shame sneerers and cynics, and it is agreeable to believe that it is not necessary for either or any of them to suffer that the others may profit. All cannot profit equally, but those who see furthest into the future believe that all of them have their years of greatest profit ahead instead of behind them, as in this case they are likelier to divide surpluses than deficits, even in times of check to prosperity.

INSURANCE INVESTMENTS.

Out of over twenty stocks selected for their large declines in Friday's market less than one-half were represented upon the list of insurance company investments, for the simple reason that their character does not entitle them to rank in such choice company. The total owned by the insurance companies among the other half, which was represented among the market's chief sufferers, was in the neighborhood of $5,000,000. Of that moderate total only a fraction was sold, if any. If history is to repeat itself it may be supposed that the insurance companies' sales will be made to better advantage than in the disordered markets which have followed San Francisco's disaster. That was how history was made at Baltimore.

The talk about insurance investment liquidation is overdone, and has a hypothetical explanation analogous to the amiable suggestions sometimes made by advocates of lower prices regarding the needy conditions of those whose property they wish to acquire. If there were any insurance companies that are worried by active rivals now would be a good time to hinder their competitive activities by suggestions regarding the inadvisability of doing business with them. Ordinary prudence dictates that all such suggestions should be diligently sifted before acceptance. Every insurer owes that to himself, and it is part of the duty to San Francisco not to allow any unnecessary schemes of market wrecking to be accomplished on or off the Exchange.

A QUID PRO QUO.

It is a great deal harder to kill the Ship Subsidy bill than it is to lessen the difficulties in the way of San Francisco's rebuilding. Gen. GROSVENOR has just repeated the familiar assertion that "two hundred millions of dollars were taken out of the pockets of the American people last year and paid over to the labor of the various countries of Europe which have wisdom enough and sense enough to patronize the merchant marine."

He neglected to add that the sum paid was not a gift to the amount of a penny, but was for value received. It would be impossible to receive equal benefits from Americans if the law required payment of the freight money to them. Americans would have to underbid foreign competition to get the business, and the payment of the subsidy would only add to the cost of the service. The fact that the added cost would be paid by the taxpayers does not alter the fact that the service would be more costly, and to that extent a burden upon the National commerce.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Gasoline in Sewers. Investigation of the recent sewer explosions on the West Side seems to have proved with some approach to conclusiveness that they resulted from the careless disposition made of waste gasoline at the many garages that have been established in that part of the city. It has long been known that relations with the horse, especially in the matters of buying and selling him, have a measurably deleterious effect on human morals, and the horse trade has come to stand apart from other commercial transactions as something almost sure, in every instance, to illustrate the last possibilities of—well, call it enterprise and acuteness. But the dealers in horses, both by observation and by tradition, are a genial, jovial company, disposed to be kindly of manner and to trouble nobody not made "of wild nature" by the rules of the horse-trading game. The automobile, alas, also seems to have a regrettable effect on its human associates, and these effects, so far as yet studied, are not mitigated by the incidental development of humor and kindness, even though they be somewhat rude and elemental. In not every case, of course, but in all too many, people who have anything to do with automobiles, as owners, chauffeurs, invited passengers, or mere caretakers of one sort or another, apparently get the impression that these machines have somehow acquired and somehow bestow all the rights and privileges there are, and that the interests, conveniences, and safety of the non-automobilious world are too small for further consideration. This statement of the case is wide open to the charge of exaggeration, but we all know what happens on about all the roads there are every day, and now comes the revelation that these garage folk have been coolly turning into the sewers one of the most subtle and dangerous of explosives—doing it, too, after repeated little disasters had given plain warning that the practice, if continued, was sure in time to produce a big catastrophe. Of course, gasoline, having now become a rather expensive liquid, is not thrown away or allowed to leak away; what gets into the sewers has been used in the cleaning of oiled machinery and so made valueless as fuel. Thus contaminated, however, it is none the less volatile and explosive, and it is almost inconceivable that anybody not the victim of some strange mental and moral deterioration would think of letting it run into conduits that connect with every city building. The peril of sewers filled with a violently explosive gas is very great—how great is only hinted by what has already happened at scores of manholes.

Hartford and Her Contribution. According to The Hartford Times, "Hartford's best, biggest, and most far-reaching contribution to the relief fund will be the millions of dollars which the local fire insurance companies will pay in adjustment of losses and which will operate as a foundation for the erection of a newer and larger San Francisco." That can be properly characterized only by drawing upon the resources of slang and calling it "nerve." Hartford, like other American cities, has given generously of its abundance to stricken San Francisco, but when it talks about its insurance payments as a "contribution to the relief fund" it simply makes itself ridiculous. In making such payments Hartford is the self-chosen and very well paid agent for the distribution, under definite and unavoidable contract, of money collected from all over the country for that purpose and no other. It is a "relief fund," in a way, and perhaps it is the best, biggest, and most far-reaching help that San Francisco will get—or part of it. But this payment is no part of Hartford's generosity, and to have it so described is extremely irritating to anybody with an appreciation of the meaning of words. There has been too much boasting about this relief work, anyhow. Recognition of duty well done can be safely left to others than the doers. Even if the others do not recognize it, no great harm follows.

"Incongruous" and "Grotesque." Now it is The London Chronicle that finds difficulty in understanding what it calls our severity toward GORKY and his—companion. Had the same things been done in London, The Chronicle intimates, it would have been not only comprehensible but highly commendable, since the British are a highly proper and pious folk, with every right to impose their stern standards on the rest of the world. But America, it seems, is different, and The Chronicle smiles that people with morals of such well-known laxity should presume to draw a social line anywhere. It says that "the strength of the sentiment against irregular unions revealed by this incident in New York is somewhat incongruous in view of the facility with which divorce can be obtained in the States," and, again, that "there is something grotesque in New York acting as a censor of morals." Why "incongruous," and why "grotesque"? Marriage of the divorced is not "irregular," and we are not aware of any large difference between British and American facilities for securing divorces. In the one country as in the other, anybody with the inclination and enough money can break the marriage bond, and if some of "the States" recognize a few more excuses for doing it than England does that is a difference of quantity rather than of quality. Perhaps New York's right to act as a censor of morals is something less than perfect, but London's is not so much better if Americans are to trust the British novelists or newspapers, or if they can believe the evidence obtained by their own eyes while walking the London streets. But, there! When a Columbia professor can delude himself into the belief that GORKY has been "socially lynched" in the United States, it is not much wonder that The Chronicle understands neither us nor what little we have done to the Russian novelist. As a matter of fact, we have done nothing at all to him, and have said very little except in self-defense for not having done certain things which nobody can be fairly criticised for not doing. We were under no slightest obligation to treat GORKY otherwise than we treat other visitors from abroad who come over here to serve pleasures or businesses of their own, and it would be highly outrageous if it were not more highly amusing that we have been scolded and ridiculed for exercising the least questionable of all social rights—that of bestowing our personal admiration and intimacy where we choose.

FIRE INSURANCE RATES.

Menace in Smith Anti-Compact Bill Now Before Legislature.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The passage in the Assembly of the so-called Smith Anti-Compact bill, which has for its avowed purpose the crushing of what does not exist—"the Fire Insurance Trust"—is a greater menace to the mercantile interests of the State than it is to the fire insurance companies.

Fire insurance rates are very largely, and especially in this city, computed by the application of a detailed schedule, which charges for each structural defect and gives credit for every unusual fire-fighting device, the result being that each property owner makes his own rate. Could anything be fairer than this method of arriving at a proper charge?

No one company could afford without greatly increasing its rates to do this work, hence there is an organization which does it for all companies, minimizing the expense to each.

New York merchants had trouble to get needed good insurance before the San Francisco conflagration, and after the fire losses in that city are paid or charged as liability there will be mighty little sound insurance to be had, and it behooves the civic organizations, like the Chamber of Commerce, Retail Merchants' Association, Board of Trade and Transportation, Merchants' Association, &c., to oppose the passage of this bill in the Senate. The fire insurance interests need fostering, not clubbing. Supply and demand—competition—control the making of fire insurance rates, and the combinations are necessary for the economical conduct of the business. If the rates charged are too high, if they yield an undue profit, why not start new fire insurance companies? Any one with $200,000 can start a fire insurance company under the laws of New York State, but very few are started, and it is harder for a new company to have success than it is for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, or a rich man to keep out of hades.

HENRY EVANS.

New York, April 25, 1906.

AS THE BRITISH SEE HIM.

London Press Comment on Mr. Roosevelt's "Advanced Socialism."

From The Pall Mall Gazette.

Mr. Roosevelt has given his countrymen something to talk about by opening a new Congress committee room with a lay sermon on "The Man with the Muck-Rake," and predicting a legislative curb on the excesses of wealth. According to some of his hearers, the subject matter of the President's address was nothing less than "advanced Socialism," but to English ideas his suggestions for the regulation of private wealth scarcely overstepped the boundaries of the commonplace. "A progressive tax on the transfer of fortunes swollen beyond healthy limits" would be a milder enactment than we have already existing in the United Kingdom, where wealth scarcely gets beyond the region of a "modest competence" before the death duties proceed to measure it with their progressive scale. For a nation which has no income tax and no death duties to talk about Socialism is, indeed, to cry out long before one is hurt.

From The Express.

Mr. Roosevelt's speech arouses no international irritation, but is of genuine international interest, and may, in fact, be described as one of his most momentous utterances. In suggesting that, either by means of a graduated income tax or of graduated death dues, the modern State should prevent the accumulation of enormous fortunes in individual hands, he repeats what many scores of political economists have already proposed, but Mr. Roosevelt lends to the suggestion all the weight of his high position and his world-wide reputation for conservative, if forcible, statesmanship. It is probable that the American President has been much influenced in arriving at his opinion by a consideration of the excellent working of our own system of death duties, and perhaps not less so by the remarkable turn of events at our general election. Is it not also conceivable that Mr. Roosevelt's attitude may, in its turn, react eventually upon opinion and events here?

From The Standard.

Not having a war on hand that he wishes to settle or a conference to manipulate for the welfare of mankind, Mr. Roosevelt has found time to compose one of his admirable lay sermons. * * * Probably he did not intend anything very serious. Nevertheless, he has given deep offense to the magnates of the high finance. We may be quite sure that they would not be tempted to repeat their offense of contributing to the Republican Party's war chest if its representative were unchanged. But "Hippocleides does not care." Long ago he has "danced away" his second term. Still, his latest essay in social reform will not terrify a people who understand their President and enjoy his special form of public humor.

From The Mail.

The practical difficulty of legislating in the direction suggested by Mr. Roosevelt would be to know how and where to draw the line. Moreover, in the United States, all able and ambitious men of every class are themselves looking forward to the time when they may be millionaires, and are for that reason not likely to be anxious to relieve the rich man of his superfluous wealth. It may be said that the millionaire has the power of crushing and ruining any private individual with an ordinary income or fortune. But, as a matter of fact, millionaires are too wise to fly consistently in the teeth of the feeling of the community, for even a millionaire has only one life. Apart from fiction and the stories of the sensational press, even the American millionaire, who is the hardest and sternest type of his class, is careful of his actions.

Sister Commonwealths.

Virginia may retaliate by prescribing that only those Massachusetts products could be exhibited at Jamestown which were made in factories where equal industrial opportunities would be afforded to any citizen of Virginia, without reference to race or color, who might come here seeking work.

Minuter.

From The Louisville Courier Journal

It is being heralded as a wonderful feat that a St. Louis man has engraved all the letters of the alphabet and nine numerals on an ordinary pin head. But cui bono? He would have done something of more value if he had made an ordinary pin.

A PICTURE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the first place such a horror would not be possible under established Socialism, for every building constructed by and for a socialist system of society would be fire proof, and in a great measure earthquake proof. Cheap, flimsy, crowded, inflammable, and unsafe constructions would find no place in a city built for use and not for profit.

Given, however, present conditions, but with Socialism just adopted as a National system, the disaster at San Francisco, aside from the irreparable loss of life, would simply mean that each of us throughout the co-operated Nation had suffered a loss equivalent to a few hours of our productive labor. The whole resource and energy of the Nation would be aroused to replace San Francisco in a grander, more beautiful condition than ever before. The haunting fear of want that now oppresses thousands that were accounted well-to-do citizens would not be present. Thousands whose lives are shipwrecked by this calamity, and whom the most generous aid possible under capitalism cannot restore to hope and happiness, would, in a few weeks, recover their full former condition. With hope assured, they would rebuild their city on lines of beauty and safety, drawing on the surplus wealth of the co-operated Nation for all labor and materials required. In that new city none of the dives, traps, or squalid quarters which are now wiped out would ever be replaced. With no incentive for greed, graft, or unjust gain the city of the Golden Gate would arise the gem of the Pacific Coast. The temporary loss, in all except the loss of life, would result in lasting gain by affording the opportunity to build the City Beautiful. Private land titles would not obstruct the public welfare, and the lesson would be worth all the fearful cost. Capitalism, with all its generous impulses, now temporarily aroused, cannot succeed as Socialism would do.

THE TOMPKINS MONUMENT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In any important undertaking, especially one in which the public is concerned, it is considered desirable to have a consensus, and for this reason I venture to express my views (and those of others) with regard to the proposed monument to Gov. Tompkins to be placed in a most conspicuous position in the City of New York. No one could wish to question the appropriateness of a public tribute to the late Governor or to depreciate in any way the beautiful impulse of the Society of Masons to honor his memory, but it would be unfortunate to have this, the result of so much thought and willing contribution, open to any unfavorable criticism.

The model now on exhibition is handsome, dignified, and appropriate, and faultless in every respect but one—that of the figure of the Governor himself. He was a statesman, a soldier, and a gentleman, whose punctilious courtesy and charm of manner were likened to those of Aaron Burr, but he is represented in a slouching attitude, undignified and ungraceful. Why not in a position of attention, or occupied with his pen, (with which he was gifted,) or in some position appropriate to his character? My remarks are intended as a suggestion, and not as a disparagement, and I trust that they will be taken in the same kindly spirit in which they are written.

Punishment for Wife-Beaters.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read in the columns of THE TIMES a few days ago the account of a man arrested for wife beating. He had been arrested five times, I believe, for the same offense, and sent to Blackwell's Island. When sentenced the fifth time he shouted "Delighted!" Then, smiling happily, was lead away by his guards.

Could not some lawyer or other qualified person take the time to prepare a bill for the Legislature providing a more severe punishment for this offense? The man's wife testified that he liked the life on Blackwell's Island.

Not long ago Representative Robert Adams of Philadelphia presented to the House in Washington a bill to establish a whipping post for wife-beaters in the District of Columbia. Col. Hepburn testified that 508 women had been beaten in the Nation's capital within two years. As Mr. Adams was a bachelor his bill was received with great hilarity by the majority, but it struck me at the time that if these lawmakers of the Nation were to receive a taste of what to them was a source of amusement for the time being they would probably view the matter in a different light. Their excuse was that the whipping post would still more "brutalize the brute." Perhaps it would, but it seems to me the punishment should be such as to prevent the sentence being received with scorn in a court of justice.

AN AMERICAN WOMAN.

New York, April 19, 1906.

Do We Lead in Crime?

From The London Globe.

As is inevitable in all new countries, the number of crimes is very high in the United States of America, but the New York papers assert that the crimes committed last year are far in excess of those perpetrated in preceding years. Embezzlements, forgeries, and fraudulent bankruptcies were much higher last year than in 1904, and the proceeds of robberies and swindles reached within measurable distance of £10,000,000. The number of murders was over 9,000, and of suicides nearly 10,000, and with regard to the latter it is curious to note that the number of men was double that of the women, and that medical men headed the list. There was a falling off in lynching, as there were only 66 victims, 61 being negroes and 5 white men, but the number of legal executions rose to 133. Hitherto Italy alone surpassed the United States in the number of criminals, but now America has taken the lead. Last year, in every 1,000,000 inhabitants the States had 115 known criminals, while Italy had 105, England 27, France 19, and Germany 18. This is a most appalling record, but it would be still more interesting to learn the origin of this army of criminals, how many were born in America, and how many came from foreign countries. Probably if the undesirable alien were allowed such free access as he is even now in England, the statistics of criminality would be even worse.

BERLIN, April 18.—His Highness Prince Kotchowbeff has been ordered by the courts to pay £180 a year for life to a waiter whom he assaulted.

MR. WILSHIRE EXPOUNDED.

A Correspondent Reveals the Deep Sarcasm of His Letter to The Times.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

About two years ago Edith Wharton published a story entitled "The Descent of Man," in which she tells of a scientist who, much disgusted at the popular books written in the name of science, but in reality containing more maudlin sentimentality than science, wrote a similar book in which he satirized these popular authors by greatly exaggerating this sentimentality. What was his astonishment after its publication to have it taken by the public with the utmost seriousness, resulting in his securing far more fame and money from it than he had secured from any of his really scientific works!

Mr. Gaylord Wilshire finds himself the hero of a similar comedy as a result of his letter in THE TIMES of April 24. In this letter with apparent seriousness he maintains the proposition that the earthquake at San Francisco is really a great benefit, because it creates a market for business men and helps workingmen by giving work to many who are out of a job and raising the wages of those who already have jobs. He closes with the remark that this earthquake "will do more to continue prosperity than any event that has happened since the Russo-Japanese war."

Any one who has any intelligent knowledge of Socialism will readily perceive the sarcasm of this letter in its implying that catastrophes are necessary to continue "prosperity" under the existing system. That Mr. Wilshire considers this system as diseased is indicated by his saying that catastrophes are needed as a remedy for overproduction, "just as a man who is threatened with apoplexy may be benefited by a blood letting."

What then, must have been his surprise to find how this letter has been received! The editor of THE TIMES apparently failed to see the sarcasm, for he put the letter under the heading, "Finds Good in Disaster. Mr. Wilshire Points to the Demand for Goods and Workmen." The editor of The Evening Post, also, seems to have failed to see the sarcasm, for in an editorial on April 24 he says Mr. Wilshire regards the earthquake "joyously" and advises him to help to create prosperity by stripping himself to the shirt frequently.

The Way to Carry Books.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Among a number of orders of the Superintendent of the Board of Education to the Principals and teachers is one affecting the health and carriage of the children. It reads thus: "Pupils should be required to carry their books on the right side on even days of the month and on the left side on odd days of the month." It is argued that by thus alternating the strain on the backbone a cause of spinal curvature may be avoided.

How to make this order effective is what is troubling the teachers. A child's memory is such a fickle thing that some difficulty is found in having even much simpler orders carried out. The question has also been raised whether an order should not be given naming the number of books to be carried each day. If five books are carried on an odd day and six on an even day a certain amount of injury may result. That the order is safe and sane no one will question who has had experience in carrying a bundle of books for a considerable distance. The strain is no small matter. If it calls attention to the need of alternating the strain some good will have been done. A pupil may, however, with good reason, carry his books half way home on the right side and on the left side the remainder of the way.

Presidential Diplomacy.

From The Springfield Republican.

There isn't a South American diplomat in Washington who does not officially accept the President's disclaimer of the remarks attributed to him by the late Argentine Minister, and printed in the publications of the Argentine Foreign Office. So much, at least, is required by diplomatic etiquet. Officially, Mr. Roosevelt never said what has been attributed to him. But probably there isn't a South American diplomat in Washington who does not still believe that Mr. Roosevelt actually said those very things. The remarks have now been printed in this country, and they are exactly what Mr. Roosevelt might be expected to say. And, after considering their tenor, it is evident to any one that the fault was not in the remarks as reported by the Argentine Minister, but in the publication of them, so that other South American countries could be edified by the uncomplimentary comparisons in which our President indulged. Of course Mr. Roosevelt did not intend to have his praise of Argentina and his reflections upon the sister Latin republics spread before the world. It is a question whether he should have talked so freely with the Argentine Minister, but, under diplomatic usage, he is justified undoubtedly in now repudiating what he is alleged to have said, "with the energetic and emphatic tone that is peculiar to him," as the Minister reported in his account of the interview.

First Matrimonial Agency.

From Le Journal de St. Petersburg.

The title "Matrimonial Agencies and Advertisements" ought to attract attention in our time, when requests for marriage fill the journals in the form of gross or jocular and sometimes serious announcements. That may seem to be a new phenomenon of modern life, yet M. Henri d'Almeras, in La Revue Hebdomadaire, says the real originator of this industry was one Villaume. In the last days of the Empire he set up in Paris a sort of universal agency, which would supply furnished apartments, domestics, wives, and husbands.

Compiegne's Roman Theatre.

From The London Standard.

PARIS, April 10.—Not long ago a Roman theatre was discovered by excavators on the edge of the forest of Compiegne. Now that the remains have been laid bare I am told that they are almost perfect. The inhabitants of the district hope that their theatre will become as well known as the famous one at Orange. Compiegne is so near Paris that there is no reason why it should not become even better known. It has been decided to have a fete and inaugural performance on the first Sunday in July, and M. Claretie has promised to lend the services of the Comedie Francaise.

For Tall Men.

From The Pittburg Gazette.

In deference to the tall men of New Castle, the City Government there has decreed that no awning shall be placed at a less height than eight feet from the sidewalk. This order is the result of numerous complaints that awnings have scraped off male head coverings, when the owners desired to "keep on the lid."

We're living in a troublous time,
There isn't any doubt,
And folks are mightily disturbed
With changes all about.

The cost of living has increased
Beyond the former price,
We pay much more for rent and clothes,
For coal and food and ice.

Besides all that, we realize
When doctor's bills we view
New-fangled maladies increase
The cost of dying, too.

But cheerfully we grumble on,
Each turns his little trick,
And renders thanks to Providence,
It costs no more to kick.

HAMMERSTEIN DECLARES WAR IN GRAND OPERA

Says His Season Will Be the Best New York Ever Had.

HE HAS MELBA AND BONCI

No Wagner Operas, Only French and Italian—Will Give New Works—Fling at Conried.

Oscar Hammerstein, who returned from Europe on Saturday, announced his plans last night for the first season of grand opera at the Manhattan Opera House, in Thirty-fourth Street, near Eighth Avenue. In doing so he indicated his attitude toward the Metropolitan management in this fashion:

"When I left New York eight weeks ago I concluded that if I could not create for my Manhattan Opera House an ensemble of such magnitude, artistically, as would eclipse every effort ever made in this direction since grand opera found a foothold in this country, I would abandon my project and give up the idea of giving grand opera for once and all.

"I have succeeded. Even casually glancing at the résumé of my doings in Europe the most skeptical, musically, the most fastidious, and the most antagonistic will have to concede the correctness of my assertion.

"With four tenors, four baritones, and five bassos whose very names stand as deans in their profession, the better of which exist nowhere in Europe and America, and with a personnel of songstresses, headed by the great Melba, whose records are successions of successes and for whose possession on their stage every managerial dragnet is always waiting, my most eager expectations have been surpassed.

"And now that I have called into life a new institution, opening up new avenues and new means for the elevation of musical tastes, I conclusively demonstrate with what I have already accomplished that this second home for grand opera is not to be second at all, but to be the first and foremost, not asking humbly for support and kind consideration, but forcing its acceptance and respect by its already predominating value.

"I have set the great and intricate machinery necessary for the founding of such gigantic and noble purposes into motion. I have no business connections with anybody; I have no landlord; I am under no restraint or surveillance by boards of directors or advisory committees. I am alone in what I have done and what I will do.

"In accessories, in surroundings that the great artists under my management are entitled to, I confess I will lack one thing—the provincialism which our operagoers have been forced to accustom themselves to.

"I will not promise to produce new operas. I will produce them," says Mr. Hammerstein. Berlioz's "Le Damnation de Faust," Catalini's "Lorelei," and Gluck's "Armide" are announced to be in preparation now, the latter to "outrival anything ever shown on a grand opera stage in this country." The revised edition of the music of Berlioz's work has been obtained from M. Colonne, the French composer.

In addition these operas will be given: "Aida," "La Boheme," "Carmen," "Don Giovanni," "Faust," "Les Huguenots," "Lohengrin" in French, "Lucia," "Rigoletto," "Romeo et Juliette," "La Tosca," "La Traviata," "Don Pasquale," and other standard French and Italian works. To opera in these two languages the first season will be confined.

Performances will be given on Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday evenings and Saturday matinées, beginning on Nov. 20. The Saturday evening performance will be at popular prices, while at the other performances the prices will be like those of the Metropolitan. The upper part of the house, with a seating capacity of 2,500, will be sold at regular theatre prices, and it is on this that Mr. Hammerstein expects to make his profits.

His tenors will be Bonci, Bassi, Dalmores, and Alcheffsky. Bonci has been well-known in opera in Europe for five years, and Mr. Hammerstein believes it is a great triumph to have engaged him for a season, as it has been his custom to appear only as a guest at various houses.

Bassi, who will sing the tenor rôle in "Lorelei," has been singing on the Continent for several seasons, but will go to South America for the Autumn before coming to New York. Dalmores has been the first tenor in the Brussels opera for several years. He was under a four years' contract with the Lisbon opera when Mr. Hammerstein engaged him. Alcheffsky is a discovery of Mr. Higgins of the Covent Garden Opera, and has been brought from Poland for Tschaikowsky's "Eugen Onegin," to be produced in London this season.

The baritones will be Renaud, who is to come for two months, and then go to Monte Carlo and Madrid; Sammarco, who two years ago made a hit at Covent Garden; Ancone, who sang in New York at one time under the management of Mr. Grau, and Mendolfi of La Scala at Milan.

The bassos will be Edouard de Reszke, Brag, who has sung for years at the opera in Dresden, and Muguinoz, recently of Milan. Brag was formerly a buffo, but Mme. Lilli Lehmann is authority for the statement that he has recently become a basso profundo. The buffos will be Gilibert and Giandi, recently of the Rivoli at Venice.

The sopranos will be led by Mme. Melba, who will come for January, February, and March, and possibly for the whole season. Mr. Hammerstein says: "Her acceptance of an engagement was only concluded after a thorough investigation on her part of all the conditions surrounding the new venture, primarily as to the abilities and reputation of the artists forming the ensemble and in face of the most tempting offers from another Director of grand opera in New York. Notwithstanding the, in many respects, peculiar efforts on his part to prevent her alliance with Mr. Hammerstein's forces, she preferred to appear in the Manhattan Opera House."

The other sopranos will be Mme. Gilibert-Lejeune, who will sing this season at Covent Garden; Mme. Mazurin, who made her reputation in the opera "Siberia" at Rome several years ago; Miss Kate D'Arta of the Opera at Rotterdam, a young American; Mme. Louise Tetrazzini, who was in Mexico and San Francisco last season, and was expected to be with the Metropolitan company; Mme. Trentini, a protégé of Mme. Melba, a Spanish girl, and Mme. Farnetti, now at the San Carlos, at Naples, who was chosen by Puccini to create the title rôle of Madame Butterfly. Before coming to New York Mme. Farnetti will create the title rôle in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," which has been made into a grand opera under the direction of Baron D'Erlanger.

Of the mezzo-sopranos, Mme. Bressler-Gianoli sang in New York a few years ago in a short operatic engagement at the Casino, and has recently been at the opera in Brussels. Mme. Zelie Gaye, recently of Barcelona, is depended on for "Carmen."

Mme. de Cisneros, an American, recently at La Scala in Milan, and Mme. Zaccaria of the opera in Palermo, are the contraltos announced.

Cleofonte Campanini is said to have resigned his place at La Scala in Milan to direct the opera here. He is to be at Covent Garden in the coming season. Leonardo Campanari is another Italian conductor engaged.

It is said that M. Capoul of Paris has under consideration an offer to become the stage manager, and that application has been made for his release from the Paris engagement.

A chorus of 100 voices is now being recruited in Italy, and it will be made complete by the addition of American singers, who are promised advancement in their careers.

The scenery for "Lorelei," "Armide," and "Le Damnation de Faust" is being painted by Amable in Paris, and arrangements have been made in London and New York for other scenery.

NEW OPERA FIGHT PROMISED.

Chorus Singers' Delegate Reports They Have Lost All They Gained.

Walking Delegate Salzberg of the Chorus Singers' Union, representing the chorus of the Metropolitan Opera House, which went on strike last year and ultimately settled with Director Conried, reported to the Central Federated Union that he could not get the contract renewed.

"I applied for a new contract," said Salsberg, "but Mr. Conried sent word that I was not to be admitted to the Metropolitan Opera House, and that no officer of the union was to be admitted. The next day we held a meeting, but in the meantime Mr. Conried sailed for Europe, and his business manager went West. The Italian members will leave the country on Saturday, so that we have lost all the effects of our strike."

It was admitted that little could be done as matters stood. It was decided that when next season begins the central body would assist the chorus singers in making a "closed shop" fight for an agreement for $25 a week and extra pay for overtime.

A MEMORIAL EXHIBITION.

Friends of the young Belgian sculptor, who ended a successful balloon ascension by venturing after dark into the mazes of Hempstead marsh, to perish there of exhaustion and cold, have organized an exhibition of his sketches and completed work, which will be visible during the rest of the week at the American Art Galleries, 6 East Twenty-third Street. They hope to sell enough to provide the widowed mother and the sister of Paul Nocquet with a sum of money large enough to live on for some time to come. Already sales have been made amounting to more than $7,000, and before the week is out it may be that sufficient will be secured to place Mme. Nocquet beyond actual want for the rest of her life.

The exhibition will surprise those who knew Nocquet best, both by reason of its variety and quantity. Nocquet had been working for other sculptors as an assistant until a year or so ago, and, rather naturally, it was inferred that he had not done much independently.

The fifty-seven sculptures and thirty drawings offer an output which cannot fail to strike the imagination. Some of his statuettes have been cast in bronze by the Gorham Manufacturing Company, such as "Hate," a single figure in very high relief, almost in the round, which was shown at the Salon in Paris; "Endless Grief" and "Decorative Candlestick"; also "Man Who Weeps," a figurine which has been bought by the sculptor Daniel C. French. These pieces, cast by the Gorham Company, can be supplied to amateurs in bronze reproductions.

The centre of the gallery is occupied by a life-sized nude statue called "The Cursed," a man crouching on a rock with the fingers of both hands clutching face and temples and elbows propped on one knee. This was done in smaller size in bronze at the Paris Salon. The despairing pose of the figure strikes the note of the whole exhibition, at the same time offering a prophetic key to the tragic ending of a life full of promise. It is more despairing than the plaster statue, "Despair," with the arms raised, and at the same time a finer and more rounded composition.

Such figures and the fierce, struggling laborers in "Effort," a composition of many nude men shoving a heavy mass on rollers, the "Centaur Struggling with a Lapith," the statuettes "Affliction" and "Suicide," "Deadly Struggle" and "Endless Grief," &c., have given rise to an entirely false idea concerning Paul Nocquet. Some have imagined that he took his own life recklessly ventured because life to him was not much worth living. Nothing could be further from the truth. His death does prove his reckless nature, but not that he cared or wished to die. It was merely miscalculation on his part of his own physical strength and the obstacles that lay in his path. He was doing well, and had just been enjoying his favorite sport. He had succeeded perfectly in his jaunt through the air, and was only eager to inform his friends that he was well and had done what he had set out to do.

The sketches found among his papers by Mr. Gutzon Borglum, his executor, will be enjoyed scarcely less than his studies by amateurs. Many single figures are drawn with charcoal and pen on one side of the paper, and then the opposite view of the model drawn on the other side of the paper. These have been so framed that both sides are visible. Here are bold, freehanded studies for "American Football," the large group presented to Columbia University by Mr. I. N. Seligman; those for "Effort," "The Guilty Woman;" "In Minor Strain," (low relief exhibited at the last Academy show;) "Men Who Pull," (part of "Effort";) "Suicide," &c. Jolly little designs in colors of Dutch or Flemish peasants and children are sketches for wall paper patterns; one for a poster is called "The Holiday," and is in sharp contrast with the fierce, despairing, or merely strenuous import of the statuettes. Here, too, are sketches in the competition for the memorial door to Paul Jones at Annapolis, into which he entered, twelve in all.

Among the pieces already sold is the "Dancing Girl," to Mr. Benjamin Altman. Salon pieces in bronze include a vase, "Man with Horn," "Soldier of Marathon," "Woman with Sickle," "Bacchus," and in plaster treated with various patenas, "Slavery," "Strength," (a vase with low relief;) "Near the Abyss," "Affliction," "Equestrian Fight," "Vanity," "Desolation," "Force," "Anathema," "Man and His Chimaera," "Justice," and "The Two Weepers." The large half-length of a man, with left elbow on a pile of books, a chain over one bare shoulder to catch up the drapery, is a forceful figure representing the elder Brutus, but better fitted to the character of a Spanish anchorite, such as El Greco or Ribera might have painted. A tenderer note is found in the colored plaster "An English Girl," while good-humored caricature is seen in the statuette of President Roosevelt carrying two bears, called "Presidential Vacation," the original of which is at the White House.

An illustrated catalogue well worth preserving gives a full-length photograph of Nocquet standing before his partly inflated balloon with head turned in profile from a kodak snapped just before his ascent. The widespread interest taken in the man and his sad mishap is shown by the names of committees led by the honorary, with President Roosevelt at the head, and the French and Belgian Ambassadors, Auguste Rodin, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, &c., followed by the Executive, including the Belgian Consul General; the sculptors, with Messrs. Bitter, French, Saint Gaudens, MacNeil, Piccirilli, Adams, and Proctor; the committee of the Aero Club, of the catalogue, &c.

Paul Nocquet was born in 1877 of French parents at Brussels, studied painting at the art schools of Brussels and Antwerp, and entered the studio of Jef Lambeaux, the sculptor. In 1900, when he was 23, he won the traveling scholarship called the Prix Godecharle. He went to Paris and studied sculpture under Mercié and painting under Gérôme. In a few years he became an Associate in the junior Salon and gained the acquaintance of Rodin as well as the Belgian Meunier. Had not fate been unkind, he could scarcely have failed to take a leading position among American sculptors—that is likely to be the opinion of any one who will examine carefully the works shown at the American Art Galleries.

Died After Eating Supper.

MERRY SUNDAY DANCE ON THE FRENCH SHIPS

The Sailors Show Some New Steps That Interest Visitors.

THE OFFICERS ARE AMUSED

They Don't See Why Everybody Asks Them If They Speak French—Official Visits To-day.

Thousands of visitors boarded the French cruisers yesterday and seemed to find a great deal that was interesting and novel in the fleet which participated in the ceremonies attending the burial of John Paul Jones.

The band of the flagship Marseillaise played in the afternoon on the main deck, and the French sailors, much to the delight of the visitors, danced in pairs in steps that were quite new to Americans. Pieces by Metra, the Parisian waltz king, tempted some of the visitors to try a turn, but propriety and a few tumbles over the usual numerous deck obstructions soon left the floor to the Frenchmen.

The matelots danced with that grace whihch characterizes the race. It was amusing to see a Frenchman who took the place of the woman partner lean "her" cheek on "her" partner's shoulder, at the same time puffing clouds of smoke from a cigarette indolently hung between the lips. The visitors seemed never to grow tired of watching the dainty and peaked French shoes tripping over the deck as the band played.

Much difficulty was experienced by the visitors in comprehending the many things that were explained to them in voluble French and eloquent gesticulation. At the gangplanks matelots received the visitors as they came aboard. The matelots murmured the usual greetings, said it would be a never-to-be-forgotten pleasure to escort the visitors to the remotest parts of the vessel, and hoped that such modest hospitality as the Marseillaise could afford would be received in the spirit in which it was offered—as the humble best of the Admiral, whose desire it was to show the people of New York how much he appreciated the courtesies which had been extended since the arrival of the fleet in this glorious, magnificent country.

Hospitable to All.

Some of the visitors were French, or could speak French, and responded in equally elegant terms. Those who knew no French, however, only understood that the hospitality of the ship was being offered to them when the guide motioned them to follow him.

A few of the officers of the Marseillaise who could speak a little English were detailed to the work of answering questions. Their English was as bad as most of the American French that was heard on board.

"Eet ees vair' strange," said the officer to a reporter who could not speak French. "They ask me do I spik French. I say 'yes.' Then they say, 'I do not spik French but a leetle,' and walk away with a smile. Eef they do not spik French, why they ask of me the question eef I spik it?"

A small boy paused, looked the officer all over; then grinned and said:

"Parly voo Frongsay?"

"Certainement," replied the officer wearily, and the small boy departed happy.

"Eef you leev in a house," the officer continued, "an' all the time people reeng your bell, and when you open the door they say, 'Do you spik Anglais?' and when you say, 'Yes,' they go away with the smile, ees it not that you would theenk it vair' strange?"

The visitor was impressed with the logic. He asked the officer, who had been ashore, what he thought of New York. This was the reply:

Those Tall Buildings.

"Again, when we come to a strange place all the people ask that question. I theenk the tall buildings are vair' tall. I theenk the ceety is vair' wonderful."

"What do you think of our upstairs and downstairs railways?" some one asked.

"Thair eet ees again! You Engleesh and Americaine, when you weesh the stranger your language to understand, twist eet so vair' much that I do not theenk you would quite understand eet yourself. We learn Engleesh by the book. Why do you spik in the way that ees wrong from the book. Oui, I like your elevated railway and your Soobway vair' much."

The crowd of visitors to the French warships was so great that the services of the police river patrol became necessary to prevent accidents. The patrol dashed about the river between the warships and the Manhattan shore, waylaying small craft laden with passengers.

"Ease up there!" was the command. "How many people have you got in that tub?"

"Twenty-two."

"Get right back and drop half of them or I'll arrest you and your boat."

Another hold-up of a boat containing ten passengers went like this:

"How many life-belts have you got?"

"Life—what?"

"Life-belts. Suppose a wave toppled the lot of you in the river or there was a collision, where would you be? Get ashore and get life-belts."

No Miniature Slocums.

Dozens of gasoline launches and small craft were thus put out of business, while others, having only four or five life-belts, were limited to the carrying of four or five passengers.

Ashore there were many rows as to the refunding of money. Roundsman Reardon and a few reserves were sent to the landing places, and the rights of the visitors were well looked after.

The warships were not illuminated last night. It was at first proposed that this should be done, but the French officers asked that they might keep the ships in darkness as a small mark of France's sorrow for San Francisco.

To-night Rear Admiral Brownson will entertain the French Admiral and officers aboard the West Virginia, where a banquet will be served. Visits will be exchanged to-day by Admiral Campion of the French fleet and Mayor McClellan, Gen. Grant, and Admiral Coghlan of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

SMALL BOY PUZZLES POLICE.

He is Lost and Has Various Names and Fathers.

A small boy who was found at 108th Street Saturday night by Mrs. Mary Ahearn of 119 East 108th Street is giving the Headquarters police considerable trouble to learn his identity. On Saturday night he said his name was Harry J. Harriman, Jr., that he was 7 years of age, and that he came from Buffalo.

He changed his name last night and said that it was Raymond and that he came from Plattsburg. Among the stories he tells is that he has two uncles named Duke and Hearn in Buffalo. Once his father was a soldier, and again he was a dentist. He says his mother did not like Plattsburg and came to New York, where his father was to follow when his work in Plattsburg was done. Where his mother went to live in this city, the child says, he doesn't know. He says he lost his mother somehow and was picked up by a woman. If some one does not claim him to-day he will be turned over to the Children's Society.

CATHEDRAL'S CENTENARY.

Historic Baltimore Structure the Scene of Brilliant Ceremonies.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 29.—The centenary of the historic Baltimore Cathedral, in which all the great councils of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States have been held, was observed to-day. The occasion marked another event in the career of Cardinal Gibbons, who, after serving as a priest at its altars, has made it the seat of his Archbishopric and Cardinalate.

Ten thousand persons packed Cathedral Square and the adjacent streets. The sun shining upon the crosses borne in line and the magnificent jeweled vestments of the Archbishops and Bishops made a brilliant picture.

The Pontifical high mass was celebrated by Archbishop Farley of New York. Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia preached the centenary sermon. After the mass a letter of congratulations to Cardinal Gibbons and to the Catholic hierarchy of America from Pope Pius X. was read from the altar.

Following the Pontifical mass was a dinner in the hall of St. Mary's Seminary, at which the Cardinal occupied the seat of honor, with Archbishop Williams of Boston, the oldest prelate in the American hierarchy, on his right.

BENEDICTS WED 50 YEARS.

Read Benedict, the New York jeweler, and Mrs. Benedict celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding yesterday at their home, Ravenhurst, on Manor Road, West Brighton, S. I. Mr. and Mrs. Benedict and their six children and twelve grandchildren received guests who came from all over the city and other parts of the State. Mr. and Mrs. Benedict received from relatives and friends many handsome golden gifts.

Fifty years ago yesterday Mr. Benedict married Miss Mary E. Winant, daughter of Mark Winant of Roseville, Staten Island. They have always made their home on Staten Island. Mr. Benedict is 72 years old. His wife is his junior by two years.

MARBLE GIRL WAS PLEDGED.

Cabman Got Her as Security for a Fare That Wasn't Paid.

Some light has been shed on the case of the "marble girl," whose presence in the Tenderloin Police Station had such a quieting influence on the prisoners that were brought in there Saturday. The "girl" was a marble bust of a country maiden. No one seemed to know how she came to repose on Sergt. McCarthy's desk.

Last night, however, the Sergeant told of her first appearance. About 7 o'clock Saturday morning Joseph Mermillod, a cabman, entered the station house, carrying the bust under one arm, while in the other he held a gray overcoat in which was stuck a diamond scarfpin. These articles he handed to the Sergeant with the remark:

"A gent with a load on gimme this stuff till he gets the ten-spot he owes me fer drivin' him around the town."

Mermillod then gave the name and address of his fare and departed. Yesterday Sergt. McCarthy sent a policeman to the "marble girl's" real home, to acquaint the owner with the whereabouts of his possessions. He said he would send for them as soon as he felt better.

On Sunday Capt. Hodgins was captivated by the sweetness and innocence of the statue's expression, which he said the Sergeants couldn't appreciate, and moved the bust to his own room. It will continue to adorn his mantel until Mermillod's fare returns to claim it.

WALSH'S AIDE ARRESTED.

Vice President of Wrecked Chicago Bank Held Here on Conspiracy Charge.

On the request of the Chief of Police of Chicago Gustave F. Sorrow, said to be the Vice President of the Bank of America, wrecked by its President, Walsh, was arrested at the Hotel Marseilles, at 103d Street and Broadway, at 10 o'clock last night. Detective Sergts. Griffin and Darcey of Inspector McLaughlin's staff got him.

Sorrow was arrested in his own apartments in the presence of his wife, and several other women. Mrs. Sorrow was prostrated, but Sorrow remained cool and accompanied the detectives without protest.

Just after he was locked up in Police Headquarters Jokichi Takaimini, a manufacturing chemist, living at 45 Hamilton Place, Brooklyn, called and offered bail. It was rejected, because the prisoner, according to information from Chicago, had been indicted in Chicago, and was a fugitive from justice.

The telegram requesting the arrest of Sorrow was signed by Chief of Police John W. O'Connor, and was received last Friday. It said:

"Arrest Gustave F. Sorrow, who is under indictment for a conspiracy to commit an illegal act."

When arraigned in the Detective Bureau Sorrow said that he was 41 years old, married, and in the real estate business.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 29.—The arrest in New York of G. A. Sorrow, Vice President of the Bank of America, at the instance of the Chicago authorities is understood to mean that the latter are disposed to take no further chance of Sorrow's escaping them. He has, however, been represented as willing to return to Chicago whenever wanted. Other officers of the bank already under indictment are ex-Judge Abner Smith, President; J. V. Pierce, cashier, and F. E. Creelman. It is likely that all these men will be on trial within a month, charged with wrecking the bank. A Grand Jury investigation as to Sorrow's part in the proceedings is expected to follow his return to Chicago.

EDUCATORS IN A DUEL.

Prof. Dickey Kills Prof. Duff, a Superintendent of Schools.

Special to The New York Times.

DEMING, N. M., April 29.—Prof. W. H. Dickey, Superintendent of the Deming Public Schools, to-day shot and instantly killed Prof. U. Francis Duff, Superintendent of the Luna County Schools, one of the most prominent educators in New Mexico and a student of archaeology, who had achieved a National reputation by his writings.

The shooting took place shortly after noon in front of the Post Office in the main street of Deming. Dickey had been driving about town in a buggy during the morning, and had passed Prof. Duff several times. As he drove in front of the Post Office, Duff stepped out, drawing a revolver, and called to Dickey to stop.

Dickey drew his revolver, leaped from the buggy, and opened fire. Both pistols cracked at once. Prof. Duff fell dead with a bullet through the head. Dickey was shot in the side, but is not believed to be fatally hurt.

For some months there had been enmity between the men, arising from differences in connection with the management of the Deming schools, although it is hinted that personal matters have also entered into the quarrel. It is said that Duff had frequently threatened to shoot Dickey on sight.

ROCKEFELLER GETS BACK TO HIS CHURCH AGAIN

And No Troublesome Process Servers Annoy Him There.

HIS SON RETURNS ALSO

And Leads His Bible Class—Father and Son Surprise Fifth Avenue Baptist Church.

After many months John D. Rockefeller was able yesterday to worship in peace in his own church, the Fifth Avenue Baptist.

With the return of the elder Rockefeller to his city home his son cut short his three weeks' vacation and hurried back to town from Connecticut, where he has been making a horseback tour of the State. Yesterday afternoon the three John D. Rockefellers were together in Tarrytown, and each of them was in splendid health, from the one-time recluse of Lakewood to the cooing, pink-cheeked John, 3d, in his cradle.

Grandfather Rockefeller's appearance in his pew surprised the congregation, and there was much craning of necks and whispering, and after the service there was much shaking of hands and many cordial welcomes extended to the head of Standard Oil.

Mr. Rockefeller slipped quietly into town several days ago and took up his abode in his Fifty-fourth Street house. The return of John D., Jr., was as much of a surprise as the return of his father. He had announced a programme of leadership for his Bible class for the three Sundays he intended to be absent, and yesterday it was expected that Mr. Richardson, the assistant pastor, would lead.

The hundred or more members present were therefore surprised when Mr. Rockefeller came into church and took his seat at the leader's table at the base of the pulpit, smiled at the gathering, and proceeded to announce the hymns and direct the programme for the morning.

The health of the elder Rockefeller appeared good. There was springiness in his step, his eyes were clear, and his face smilingly benevolent in expression. He seemed to enjoy being back in his church and among his own people once more, unharassed by process servers or other agents of annoyance. Mrs. Rockefeller was not with him, and he sat in his pew alone, listening to his favorite hymns and following closely the sermon of his pastor, the Rev. Dr. Johnston.

Dr. Johnston's subject was "Christ's Ideal of the World's Mission." This ideal, he held, was that every man should recognize the divine Sonship, and that every other man was his brother. There would be many changes in human society, he said, before this came about.

"Let those sneer who will," he said, perhaps feeling resentment of criticisms of his Bible class leadership, "I do not care for their sneers."

"Only by living in accordance with nature's laws," he resumed, "can a man enjoy life. A man cannot abuse his body and live in the true sense of the word. In this city there are thousands of people who disregard nature's laws and are physical and mental wrecks. These men think that they enjoy life, but they are, in fact, already dead. Every one of you must choose between life and death—the death that comes from irregular habits.

"I don't care what your religion may be—if you believe in the power of God you will succeed. You cannot get along by your own efforts unless you have faith in the power of God in you."

Young Mr. Rockefeller announced that next Sunday he would talk to his class on Joshua. Then he held his usual reception in the anteroom of the church while the congregation filed in for the 11 o'clock services.

Mr. Rockefeller junior hurried from the church after the reception and took the 11:15 train for Tarrytown, where Mrs. Rockefeller and the baby are. After the services his father walked to his home and had luncheon by himself. Then he left the house, not saying when he would return, and the servants understood that he took an early afternoon train for Tarrytown to join his son and grandson there for dinner.

CAT SPOILED THE ANTHEM.

Crawled Into the Organ Pipes and Played Irregular Prelude.

Special to The New York Times.

YORK, Penn., April 29.—A big white cat crawled into the large pipe organ of St. Luke's Lutheran Church here this morning and surprised the organist and congregation by playing an irregular prelude.

The organist and choir were estopped from rendering their Spring anthem, which they were about to deliver. The Rev. Albert Bell, the pastor, and the congregation were at a loss to know what was the matter with their new organ, and were surprised when a member of the congregation crawled into the instrument and brought out the cat.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

DEMAND A "SQUARE DEAL."
There is some talk of shutting out the Atlantic Telephone Company and the Automatic System, provided the New York Telephone Company will agree to do partial justice to the people and the City. The mere application of the Atlantic Telephone Company has brought the rates down. Do the people of New York think it a "square deal" to shut out the Atlantic Telephone Company now, simply because the New York Telephone Company, in fear, has reduced its rates? Is it a "square deal" for the City to enter into a perpetual league with a perpetual monopoly, and shut out forever all chance for improvement of service or device?
